The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment of the committee as it will stand if the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia be agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Amendment 175, on page 58, beginning in line 1, if amended as proposed would read:

That all articles and preparations provided for in this schedule which are in the hands of manufacturers on the 1st day of June, 1898, shall be subject to the payment of the stamp taxes herein provided for.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, of course if that was all that was left of the amendment the whole amendment might as well go out, for the rest of the section only provides for the payment of the tax by the manufacturer; but it was deemed absolutely essential that this amendment should go upon the bill. It was with no desire to oppress anybody that the provision was inserted.

Under the provisions of the amendment as suggested by the Senator from West Virginia you would be in this anomalous situation: You would have an increased tax upon all proprietary articles manufactured from and after a certain date, and you would have in the tens of thousands of drug stores throughout the country, wholesale and retail, great stocks of these same medicines on hand charged with no tax and with no burden.

Therefore, as the months would go by and the revenue collectors would come around, as it would be their duty to do, looking into the stocks of these different establishments, they would find articles not stamped. Upon inquiry they would be told, "Of course these are stocks which were on hand when the law passed;" and the law would be an absolute dead letter as to scores and scores and scores of different proprietary articles in the hands of thousands of druggists throughout the United States. Boxes would come in through the back door. Inquiry would be made why it was that these packages were not stamped, and the answer would be, "These goods were bought before the act passed." It was suggested that a distinctive stamp should be put upon these articles, in addition to that placed upon them when the goods come to be sold.

There is no serious burden on anybody by the imposition of this tax; for, after all, Mr. President, the taking of patent medicines is one of the greatest luxuries in the world. It becomes a habit; and there is no reason why a moderate tax should not be placed upon their use. You and I know, and everybody knows, that there are cut-rate drug stores in certain cities of the country where certain preparations that are advertised to be sold for $1 are bought for 51 and 53 cents; and I suppose there are others in some of the less-frequented thoroughfares where the same bottle of medicine would be sold for 30 or 40 cents.

The tax which the Government imposes when the goods finally come to be sold is not a serious tax and is not onerous upon anybody. The object of assessing this tax is to help to collect the revenue upon preparations hereafter to be made or sold. There is no imputation that the larger and more reputable manufacturers would resort to any such practices; but we all know, if the door should be left open, that goods would be slipped into some of these stores and mixed with the stock on hand and the Government would be defrauded out of a large sum in the aggregate, although the amount of tax imposed upon each bottle is very slight and very small.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state, in reply to the Senator from Colorado, that his argument assumes that the manufacturer and the wholesale or retail dealer are to enter into a conspiracy to perpetrate a fraud upon the Government.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not think that we ought to base our legislation upon such an assumption; and there is a provision in section 21 to cover such a case as that. Under that section, if anything of the sort occurs, there will always be spies enough around in order to find it out, as there always has been under the internal-revenue laws. A party committing an offense of that kind would be fined not more than $500 and imprisoned not more than six months, and that penalty, I think, will prevent a violation of the statute in reference to the removing or concealing or assisting in the removing or concealing of any of these goods that are not stamped.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that the best method of enacting law in this country is to do it in such a way that nobody will be led into temptation. There is no imputation upon the manufacturer or the wholesale dealer if you require him to pay this tax.

The Senator from West Virginia says we ought not to enact a law upon the theory that the manufacturer or the wholesale dealer would defraud the Government. I do not suppose that anybody in West Virginia—and I know that nobody in Colorado—would ever dream of such a thing; but if we are going to proceed upon that basis, why require a stamp to be placed on any bottle?

Why not invite the manufacturer to send a cent to the Internal Revenue Bureau for every bottle he manufactures and receive his proper receipt for it? You have got to enforce these laws, and this tax is the best possible protection to the reputable manufacturers and dealers that can possibly be provided. Dealers in medicines who are seeking to undercut and compete with more reputable ones should be compelled to pay the obligations they owe to the Government, and we should not depend upon their good faith in stating that the goods which are offered for sale have paid the stamp tax.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not think that it is as easy for two men to commit a fraud upon the Government as it is for one. In the case here a manufacturer would have to perpetrate a fraud on his part in offering for sale the article which he manufactures, and the retailer or the wholesaler in buying from his agent would also have to enter a conspiracy to defraud the Government, against which there is a severe penalty.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let me ask the Senator if he thinks every fraud of this kind on the Government does not require the co-operation of two people?

Mr. FAULKNER. No; I should say not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What one does not? I should be glad to have the Senator illustrate.

Mr. FAULKNER. There are a number of instances in which it would not be necessary to have a conspiracy to perpetrate a fraud upon the Government. It can be done by a single person in many instances. Perhaps it could not be done by the manufacturer alone in this instance, because the retailer or the wholesaler would have to buy the article from him; but, of course, there are a number of instances in which a single person could perpetrate a fraud upon the Government. I will not undertake to enumerate them now.

I think, however, it is an injustice to impose upon the men who have become owners of this kind of property—not the manufacturers—the burden of a tax that you impose upon no other owners of property in this entire bill. The committee has carefully gone over it and excluded any such character of tax from the entire bill, except in this one section. I say there is no reason for making an exception of this class and applying it to 500,000 men all through the country districts in the United States, who will not know for months after the passage of the bill that they are required to put a stamp upon all the little bottles of medicine, boxes of pills, etc., that are in their stores. It will be a source of annoyance to them and will multiply by the thousands the cases which will be brought, from malice and other causes, before the Federal courts, without any justification, and, in my judgment, in direct violation of law.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let me suggest to the Senator from West Virginia that they do not have to put the stamp on the goods until they are sold, and it is certainly not a very onerous provision of law that when a druggist sells a proprietary article under the new law he should affix a stamp thereon.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, it strikes me that the class which we should consider most is the retail dealers, the small druggists. I do not think there is any propriety in requiring a stamp to be placed upon an article that is already upon the shelves of the retail druggists throughout the country. Whilst it might work justice in some instances, it would work great injustice in other instances, for there are certain localities, and a majority of localities in this country, where little drug stores are kept more as an accommodation to the community than as a business carried on for any profit there is in it; little stores where the people in a small community can go at any time, day or night, and have a prescription filled or obtain a proprietary article, as they may desire. Why should the business of a little concern like that be overturned by the imposition of a stamp tax upon articles now upon the shelves, and be made the single exception in this bill?

I have no sympathy myself with the great manufacturers of these articles—that is, not any more sympathy than I have with any other business. It is a business engaged in for profit and not for love. But when it comes to interfering with the little corner drug stores scattered throughout tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of villages and crossroads, it does take on a peculiar significance, and it does strike me that we would be doing those communities and the proprietors of those little stores an injustice by requiring a tax to be paid upon articles now on their shelves.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, there is a difficulty that I see in the matter which I should like to call to the attention of the Senator from West Virginia, and that is that there will be two classes of these goods put upon the market. One is the manufacturer's stock, which is to be taxed, and the other is the stock in the hands of the wholesale and retail druggists, which will not be taxed.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will answer that in this way: The manufacturers themselves are willing to pay this tax, and it will not increase at all the cost of these articles to the retailer. The manufacturers make a large profit on all this class of articles; but the retailer and the wholesaler do not. Consequently, although the tax will be placed on one part of the articles and not on the others, they will all be sold at the same price.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator is mistaken about that. My information from the retailers is that the manufacturers have already raised the prices of their goods.

Mr. FAULKNER. My information came partly from the manufacturers in letters that I have received, saying that they would be willing to pay this tax and that it would not increase the price of their goods. I have also received letters from the retailers who are opposing the tax, and have had the same information from them. In fact, two of the letters I have received were sent to me by retailers who had received them from manufacturers.

Mr. PASCO. I have had a very large correspondence with the druggists in my State on the subject, and I have understood they would be satisfied if they were allowed to retain their goods untaxed until they were sold. I understand that object has been attained.

I can not think the Senator from West Virginia is correct in his supposition that the manufacturer himself is going to pay this tax. He will do it if he is compelled to do it, but if he should pay it without compulsion it would be the first tax which had been voluntarily assumed by that class of people. The effort is always made to thrust this taxation upon the consumer, and it would be a remarkable exception if the manufacturer paid it in this case.

My judgment is that the consumer at last will have to pay it. If so, the goods that are now in the hands of the druggists can be offered to the consumer at a lower rate than those which will be in the hands of the manufacturers when this bill is passed, and those which may hereafter be manufactured. If the Senator from West Virginia could avoid that difficulty, he would strengthen his proposition very much; but with these difficulties in it, and with the objections which have been so forcibly urged by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], it does not seem to me that it would be a safe thing to adopt the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. TURPIE. I am in favor of the committee amendment as it stands. I think it will be well enough to refer that to a conference between the Houses.

The House favors a tax upon stock in hand of medicines, and that opinion has been already expressed by a bill for that purpose. The Senate, I think, will favor no tax upon the stock on hand. The amendment offered by the committee is a compromise, or an attempted compromise between these two opposite positions. We do favor a tax upon the stock in hand as and when sold. If the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia should prevail, there would be only the two meager propositions before the committee of conference, one in favor of a tax on the stock on hand and the other opposed to it. In one case the Government would lose all revenue from this source, and in the other case all the stock on hand would be taxed. The middle and safest ground, I think, both for the purposes of revenue and for the purposes of fair dealing with all parties interested, is that taken in the committee amendment, to tax this character of stock on hand when and as sold.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MULLS], who does not seem to be in his seat, and therefore I will withhold my vote.

Mr. KENNEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SHOUP (when his name was called). I have a regular pair with the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who is absent. I do not know how he would vote, but if he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]; but it has been suggested that I transfer that pair to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], so that the junior Senator from Washington will stand paired with the Senator from Minnesota and I will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. VEST. As the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has been paired with another Senator, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MONEY. My colleague [Mr. SULLIVAN] is paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. ALLEN. Before this vote is announced, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to what I regard as an irregularity. I do not know that it signifies a great deal, yet it may. The junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] stands paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and presumably one would vote one way and the other the other. The senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] stands paired with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], and presumably one would have voted one way and the other the other. Now, the senior Senator from Wyoming, of his own accord, breaks the pair between the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, if there is any question about it, I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not want the Senator to withdraw it. The only difference it makes is that it gives the Senator from Missouri

[Mr. VEST] the right to destroy a pair that would have preserved the vote of the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. VEST. It would be certainly unjust to allow the Senator from Minnesota to be paired with two Senators. He is my regular pair, and I so announced, and did not at first vote. Then another Senator rises, and by an authority which I presume is absolutely correct and regular, pairs him with another Senator. That certainly ought to give me the right to vote.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not complaining of the right of the Senator from Missouri to vote.

Mr. VEST. I am perfectly willing—

Mr. ALLEN. I do not care anything about it.

Mr. VEST. I am perfectly willing to let the arrangement stand as I announced it; but I certainly object to a Senator being paired with another Senator after being paired with me.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not complaining of the Senator from Missouri. It simply destroys the protection that would go to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator from Minnesota requested that I secure a pair for him. He stated that the Senator from Missouri with whom he had a regular pair had arranged a pair with the Senator from Delaware on this bill.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Delaware is here.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I understand.

Mr. WARREN (after having voted in the negative). Regarding the breaking of the pair between the Senator from Washington and myself, it was done at the suggestion of one of the Senators who has charge of pairs, and I assumed it would be entirely agreeable all around. I appreciate the force of the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska that such pairs should not be broken if there is objection, and I therefore ask that my vote may be canceled. I withdraw it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The vote is withdrawn.

Mr. MASON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN] on all political questions. I am informed by his colleague that if he were present he would vote "yea." I am desirous of voting in favor of the amendment which prohibits a tax on stock on hand. Inasmuch as he would vote the same way, I desire to vote. I ask that my vote be recorded in the affirmative.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. When the name of the junior Senator from Mississippi was called he voted, or some one answered for him, and he is recorded as voting in the negative.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to make an inquiry relative to the matter of pairs before we proceed any further. I have a standing pair with the honorable Senator from Florida, but when I happen to be absent and he is present he sometimes transfers the pair to some other Senator. That is done here every day, and I have an understanding with him that that is perfectly proper. We understand that matter among ourselves. But if the point made by the Senator from Nebraska is right, that we can not transfer pairs, let it be understood now and here. I can not see where it makes any difference if a pair is properly transferred.

Mr. BERRY. According to rule here each Senator must determine for himself whether he will vote or not, without regard to his pair, and nobody else can control that; but it is absolutely true, as stated by the Senator from Nebraska, if it should be the fact that the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Washington are both in favor of the amendment and then the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Missouri both vote, the result would be that the "nays" would gain 2 votes. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. ALLISON. They might gain 4.

Mr. BERRY. Or 4.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 44; as follows:

YEAS—36
Allen,	Faulkner,	Mallory,	Pettigrew,
Bacon,	Gorman,	Mantle,	Rawlins,
Bate,	Gray,	Martin,	Roach,
Berry,	Harris,	Mason,	Stewart,
Butler,	Kyle,	Mitchell,	Turley,
Cannon,	Lindsay,	Money,
Clay,	McEnery,	Murphy,
NAYS—44
Aldrich,	Davis,	Jones, Ark.	Proctor,
Allison,	Deboe,	Lodge,	Sewell,
Baker,	Elkins,	McBride,	Spooner,
Burrows,	Fairbanks,	McLaurin,	Sullivan,
Caffery,	Foraker,	McMillan,	Teller,
Carter,	Frye,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Chandler,	Gear,	Pasco,	Vest,
Chilton,	Hale,	Perkins,	Wellington,
Clark,	Hanna,	Platt, Conn.	Wetmore,
Cockrell,	Hansbrough,	Platt, N. Y.	Wilson,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Fritchard,	Woolcott,
NOT VOTING—19
Daniel,	Kenney,	Pettus,	Tillman,
Gallinger,	Mills,	Quay,	Turner,
Helfield,	Morgan,	Shoup,	Warren,
Hoar,	Nelson,	Smith,	White,
Jones, Nev.	Penrose,	Thurston,

So Mr. FAULKNER's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to offer an amendment to the same paragraph. I move to strike out the words "or retail" in line 3.

Mr. GRAY. What page?

Mr. ALLEN. Page 58, and the balance of the paragraph after the word "for," in line 5. It is the same amendment as that of the Senator from West Virginia except that it exempts retail dealers only.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 58, line 3, after the word "wholesale," it is proposed to strike out the words "or retail;" and after the words "provided for," in line 5, to strike out the remainder of the paragraph; so that if amended the amendment will read:

That all articles and preparations provided for in this schedule which are in the hands of manufacturers or of wholesale dealers on the 1st day of June, 1898, shall be subject to the payment of the stamp taxes herein provided for.

Mr. ALLEN. I will amend that so as to relieve it of some objection. Let the latter part of the paragraph stand, and strike out the words "or retail," in line 7, after "wholesale;" and the words "at retail," at the end of line 10. Let it be read now as it is proposed to be amended.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator desires that the word "retail" shall be stricken out wherever it occurs?

Mr. ALLEN. Wherever it occurs.

The SECRETARY. If amended, the amendment will read:

That all articles and preparations provided for in this schedule which are in the hands of manufacturers or of wholesale dealers on the 1st day of June, 1898, shall be subject to the payment of the stamp taxes herein provided for, but it shall be deemed a compliance with this act as to such articles on hand in the hands of wholesale dealers as aforesaid, who are not manufacturers, to affix the proper adhesive tax stamp at the time the package, box, bottle, pot, or vial, or other inclosure with its contents is sold.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that this puts into the bill the very language in favor of which every wholesale dealer in patent medicines and similar preparations has been flooding every member of the Senate with letters for weeks. The wholesale dealers have possession of boxes of cosmetics or patent medicines or other preparations. They are always carefully and elaborately wrapped; they are put up in boxes of different sizes, most attractively gotten up, and if the law compels them to put the stamp on the bottle, they would be put to the interminable and endless work and great expense of having to open these boxes, unfold every package, take off the circulars and the doctors' certificates and one thing and another, get at the bottle, put on the stamp, and pack them up again.

Exactly what these people are begging us not to do the Senator wants to do, and I feel certain if he stops and realizes the burden he is putting upon the wholesale dealer, he will see that the only fair manner is to leave it until sold.

Mr. FAULKNER. If you do not amend it as to retailers, will you not cause all that trouble by leaving in "wholesale and retail dealers"?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No. When the wholesale dealer sells the goods he will make an allowance to the retail dealer of the amount of the stamps, and when the retail dealer comes to sell one package he will affix the stamp to it and sell it.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the wholesale dealer sells a single one of those packages, either broken or whole, after the 1st day of July, without the stamp being affixed, according to the twenty-first section he is guilty of misdemeanor.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, no; he is not. I call the attention of the Senator from West Virginia to this clause, which reads as plain as any language can read:

That all articles and preparations provided for in this schedule which are in the hands of manufacturers or of wholesale or retail dealers on the 1st day of June, 1898, shall be subject to the payment of the stamp taxes herein provided for, but it shall be deemed a compliance with this act as to such articles on hand in the hands of wholesale or retail dealers as aforesaid who are not manufacturers to affix the proper adhesive tax stamp at the time the packet, box, bottle, pot, or phial, or other inclosure, with its contents, is sold at retail.

Therefore if, when this bill goes into force, a wholesaler has on hand 100 cases of the Sutherland Sisters' Hair Restorer, he will not have to put the stamps on, but when he sells them to the retailer and the retailer takes the package from the box to sell, he will have to put the stamp on.

Mr. GRAY. It would be fairer, if you strike out either, to strike out the wholesaler and leave the retailer.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is what we have done.

Mr. FAULKNER. I think the Senator from Colorado is correct since he has read and called my attention to the latter clause of the provision. However, I do not think the wholesaler could estimate the amount of the stamps and allow that to the retailer.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Colorado is correct in what?

Mr. FAULKNER. In the statement that he does not have to put a stamp on.

Mr. ALLEN. That you have to break bulk.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is all.

Mr. ALLEN. That is all there is to the argument.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is pretty nearly all I said.

Mr. ALLEN. It is absolutely nothing. It is well known that the wholesale dealer in selling his goods to the retailer is compelled constantly to break bulk. He is compelled constantly to unwrap and unbox his goods and rewrap and rebox and reship them, and he will have to do it whether stamps are placed upon the packages and the bottles or not, for these little retail drug stores do not buy in large quantities, and they rarely buy anything in the original package, unless it be some little toilet article or something of that kind, which is not so wrapped that it can not be easily unpacked and stamped.

Even though the argument of the Senator from Colorado were true, it would signify nothing more than some inconvenience was to be experienced by the wholesaler in consequence of this tax in the shipment of his goods. That is true of every business in the land which is taxed. It is an incident of a tax to create inconveniences to the taxpayer. What I am seeking to do is to protect these men who simply have little prescription drug stores, where the principal part of their business is to compound physicians' prescriptions and where as an incident of that business they sell little toilet and other articles of that kind. I do not see any great bugaboo in the matter of striking out this language.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. What amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Amendment No. 175.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move, on page 76, line 4, after the word "passage," to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 76, line 4, at the end of amendment No. 183, it is proposed to insert "unless otherwise specially provided;" so as to read:

That this act shall take effect on the day next succeeding the date of its passage, unless otherwise specially provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Iowa if it is agreeable to him to have me offer at this time the amendments to Schedule B of which I gave notice? I shall not myself occupy more than a moment in their discussion, and I am willing that they shall be directly voted upon.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from New Hampshire will ask unanimous consent, I shall not object.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent to offer amendments to Schedule B at this time, if it is necessary to ask unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendments which I send to the desk, and will suggest that, if it is agreeable to the Senator having the bill in charge, they may be voted upon as a whole rather than separately.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that will be done.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, page 54, strike out "one-fourth" and substitute "one-eighth."

In line 13, page 54, strike out "one-half" and substitute "one-fourth."

In line 17, page 54, strike out "one" and substitute "one-half."

In line 21, page 54, strike out "two" and substitute "one."

In line 25, page 54, strike out "three" and substitute "one and one-half."

In line 4, page 55, strike out "four" and substitute "two."

In line 9, page 55, strike out "two" and substitute "one."

In line 24, page 55, strike out "one-fourth" and substitute "one-eighth."

In line 3, page 56, strike out "one-half" and substitute "one-fourth."

In line 7, page 56, strike out "one" and substitute "one-half."

In line 11, page 56, strike out "two" and substitute "one."

In line 15, page 56, strike out "three" and substitute "one and one-half."

In line 19, page 56, strike out "four" and substitute "two."

In line 24, page 56, strike out "two" and substitute "one."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will occupy the Senate but a moment in making a single observation in support of this amendment. I have noticed in the discussion as it has progressed that it is rather a popular thing to make a fling at patent medicines, and, so far as that is concerned, possibly I sympathize with it. I never have taken any of these medicines, either to kill or cure, and do not expect to do so in the future, but this is a tax bill, and druggists are entitled to consideration as well as other people in this country. They are already paying a very high tax on what enters into these preparations. Alcohol, which is an important ingredient, is taxed, I think, about 1,400 per cent, and other taxes might be enumerated.

Now, Mr. President, it is proposed to tax a bottle 4 cents which is sold at retail at $1, and of course there are cut rates on these goods, as the Senator from Colorado says. I take it that that bottle is sold at wholesale at from 50 to 60 cents, and 4 cents on that bottle is a tax of 8 per cent. I think it is an extraordinary tax. I think it is an unjust tax, an inequitable tax. In fact, if I were to express my own conviction, I would say that this singling out of one industry and levying a tax upon it and letting go all other industries that are protected by trade-marks and patents is inequitable and unjust. But we will waive that and deal simply with the proposition in the bill to impose this tax, which to my mind is a tax altogether too high, and which will work an injustice to a certain class of people in the country.

I am not going to discuss the question whether or not these medicines ever do good or whether or not they always do harm. The simple fact is that while there is one manufacturer who is making a large amount of money in the patent-medicine business the record shows that wrecks are more numerous in that business than any other in the country. I think it is not an overstatement to state that 99 per cent of them fail and a great many of them are struggling for a living. They are honest men, doing what I think is an honest business, because the law does not step in and interfere with it; and in the matter of simply imposing a tax upon this particular branch of industry it seems to me we ought not to levy a tax as high as that contemplated in the bill. That is all I care to say. I might argue the question for an hour, but very likely I would not elucidate it any more than I have in the single moment I have taken to make this one plain statement concerning it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, this schedule has given the Committee on Finance more trouble than all the other portions of the bill. We have given it greater consideration and listened to more people and more statements in regard to it than with respect to all the other parts of the bill put together. The Senator from New Hampshire says that we have selected in this bill a single industry for taxation which ought not to be selected. Now, have we?

Mr. GALLINGER. I hardly said that.

Mr. ALDRICH. That we have taxed it unfairly, inequitably. Have we? This measure as it stands is a bill of stamp taxes. First, upon beer, which is taxed 40 per cent of its value; second, tobacco, which is taxed 60 per cent of its value. The principal other stamp tax upon the manufacture and sale of articles is upon patent medicines, or proprietary medicines, and perfumery and cosmetics.

The Senator from New Hampshire says it is unfair to tax perfumery, cosmetics, and proprietary medicines 4 per cent, when we are taxing tobacco 60 per cent and beer 40 per cent. Are patent medicines and perfumery and cosmetics such necessities that they are not entitled to bear a fair share of the taxation in a bill like this? As to whether or not the tax which we impose is a fair tax, an equitable tax, let us examine. The Senator says that an article which sells at retail for $1 we tax 4 cents, and that that is a tax of 8 per cent upon the manufacturer. What does that mean? That the manufacturer sells it for 50 cents and the purchaser pays $1, and between the manufacturer and the purchaser there is a margin of 50 cents, and the Government suggests that it will take 4 cents of the 50 cents, leaving the balance to be distributed between the manufacturer and the wholesaler or the retail dealer, as the case may be.

Mr. CULLOM. What amount of revenue does the Senator from Rhode Island estimate will be derived from this source?

Mr. ALDRICH. If the tax should be changed at all, it should be increased. If there is anything in this bill or if there is any business in the United States that can stand a fair share of taxation, it is the business of manufacturing proprietary medicines and perfumery and cosmetics. Some of the largest fortunes in the country, as the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] suggests to me, are made in these manufactures. The manufacturers can easily add the cost, and I say it advisedly, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, to the wholesale and retail dealers and still leave a sufficient margin of profit between the manufacturer and the consumer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single word more. The Senator from Rhode Island has not converted me.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not expect to do so.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am still of the opinion that this is an onerous, an inequitable, and an unjust tax. I never have known that taxation has been levied on articles upon the basis of the profits that there might be in the sale as between the manufacturer, the wholesaler, or the retailer. I do not know how much profit the retailer gets. I never bought a bottle of these drugs in my life.

The Senator from Colorado says they are sold at cut rates. If the wholesaler gets them at 50 cents, I am not quite sure that there is very much profit in them when they come to be sold by the retailers. I think the profit is likely very slight.

But, however that may be, Mr. President, I recognize the necessity for raising revenue, and hence I am in favor of imposing some tax upon proprietary articles. I think it might have been extended so as to include other articles that are protected by patents and trade-marks in this country, and very much larger revenues would have been received at a minimum of tax; but the committee did not see fit to do that. They have selected this tax. I think they might with equal propriety have taken sapollo and baking powders and a great many other compounds that are protected by trade-marks and which have a much larger profit than the proprietary medicines which are sold in the country. But the committee did not do it. They selected these articles. As I look upon it (and I know what their trials and tribulations have been in considering this schedule in the bill), they have imposed what I think is a tax much larger than ought to be imposed. I simply am content to have a vote on the proposition, and while I trust my amendments may prevail, I shall be satisfied, of course, with whatever disposition is made of them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I announce my general pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 22, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—22
Allen,	Chandler,	McEnery,	Murphy,
Bacon,	Clay,	Mallory,	Proctor,
Baker,	Foraker,	Mantle,	Roach,
Bate,	Kyle,	Martin,	Stewart,
Berry,	Lindsay,	Mason,
Cannon,	McBride,	Mitchell,
NAYS—47
Aldrich,	Elkins,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Allison,	Fairbanks,	McLaurin,	Spooner,
Butler,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sullivan,
Caffery,	Gear,	Money,	Teller,
Carter,	Gorman,	Nelson,	Turley,
Chilton,	Gray,	Pasco,	Vest,
Clark,	Hanna,	Perkins,	Wellington,
Cockrell,	Hansbrough,	Platt, Conn.	Westmore,
Cullom,	Harris,	Platt, N. Y.	White,
Daniel,	Hawley,	Pritchard,	Wilson,
Davis,	Jones, Ark.	Rawlins,	Wolcott,
Deboe,	Kenney,	Sewell,
NOT VOTING—20
Burrows,	Hoar,	Penrose,	Thurston,
Faulkner,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrow,	Tillman,
Gallinger,	Mills,	Pettus,	Turner,
Hale,	Morgan,	Quay,	Turpie,
Heitfield,	Morrill,	Smith,	Warren,

So Mr. GALLINGER's amendments were rejected.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa, as it is now 5 o'clock, that we take an order to have the bill as amended printed, and let the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. All the amendments of the committee have now been disposed of except the amendments relating to the issue of bonds and the amendments cognate to that question. I should be willing to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas—I do not know but that I shall be obliged to do so anyway—but I should be very glad if we could now have an understanding that the bill shall be completed before adjournment to-morrow, and then, I hope, we shall be able to adjourn over until Monday.

I think it would suit the convenience of every Senator interested in the disposition of the public business to complete the bill before our adjournment to-morrow, whatever hour that may be. I hope it may be at an early hour, and that then we shall adjourn over until Monday. If we can have some understanding on that point, I shall be very glad. I think it would promote the convenience of every Senator to know that that disposition is to be made of the business of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have talked to a number of Senators. I believe there will be no difficulty in getting a vote on the bill to-morrow and disposing of it finally, but I do not think Senators are willing to agree now that it shall be done. I have no doubt it can be done, and easily done, and I for one am willing to stay here until any reasonable hour to-morrow for the purpose of disposing of the bill, but beyond that I do not think we ought to be asked to go at this time.

Mr. ALLISON. With the assurance of the Senator from Arkansas and other Senators, I do not wish to ask for unanimous consent, but I desire to give notice that as far as I can, having charge of the bill, I shall ask the Senate to sit to-morrow until the bill is disposed of, and I hope Senators will so arrange their affairs as to stay here until we dispose of the bill to-morrow, and then adjourn over until Monday.

Mr. WHITE. I have here an amendment which I desire to propose to the bill later on, and I wish to have the same printed this evening. The object is to permit the payment of a portion of the war debt by the sleeping-car companies of the United States, who have been long anxious to contribute to the fund and have been unable to do so for want of legislation. It is hoped that the amendment has been so drawn that it will not affect the consumer. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed.

Mr. BACON, Mr. GORMAN, and others. Let it be read.

Mr. MASON. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa for information when I may expect to have a vote upon the amendment offered by me proposing to place a tax on adulterated flour?

Mr. ALLISON. I think to-morrow, because I hope we shall conclude the bill to-morrow.

Mr. MASON. I am perfectly willing to stay to-morrow, and I am not specially anxious to adjourn over until Monday. I am willing to stay until Saturday. But I should like to know if, under the practice, it is necessary for me to give notice that at any particular time I shall ask for a vote upon my amendment? I am asking for information.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that notice is not necessary. Under the rules of the Senate, the bill can not be passed until every Senator has offered as many amendments as he chooses to offer. So there will be no difficulty on that score.

Now, I am perfectly willing, and I think it wise, perhaps, to have the bill printed with the amendments as far as we have gone. I understand that to be the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the order will be made and the bill will be reprinted with the amendments which have been agreed to. The order is made.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. A number of Senators have requested that the amendment presented by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], to be hereafter offered by him, shall be read at the desk. I hope that will be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert:

Every person, firm, company, or corporation owning or possessing or having the care or management of sleeping cars operated upon any railroad shall pay an annual excise tax equivalent to one-quarter of 1 per cent on the gross amount of all receipts of said person, firm, company, or corporation, and a true and accurate return of the amount of gross receipts as aforesaid shall be made and rendered monthly by each of said persons, firms, companies, or corporations to the collector of the district in which any such person, firm, company, or corporation may be located or transact such business; such return shall be verified under oath by the person making the same, or, in the case of corporations, by the president or chief officer thereof. Any person or officer failing or refusing to make return as aforesaid or who shall make a false or fraudulent return shall be liable in a penalty of not less than $1,000 and not exceeding $10,000 for each failure or refusal to make return as aforesaid or for each and every false or fraudulent return.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Arkansas has asked that the bill be printed with the amendments already agreed to, and that when we adjourn to-day we adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow. I hope those two orders will be taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order has already been made to print the bill as amended. The Senator from Iowa moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 3, 1898, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 2, 1898.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

George Randolph, of Tennessee, to be attorney of the United States for the western district of Tennessee, vice Charles B. Simon-ton, to be removed.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Edson S. Bishop, of Connecticut, to be marshal of the United States for the district of Connecticut, vice Richard C. Morris, whose term will expire August 8, 1898.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

S. Herbert Giesy, of the District of Columbia, to be justice of the peace in the District of Columbia (assigned to the city of Washington), vice Joseph W. Davis, whose term expired March 31, 1898.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Benjamin M. Ausherman, of Evanston, Wyo., to be receiver of public moneys at Evanston, Wyo., vice Frank M. Foote, resigned.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Charles F. Leach, of Ohio, to be collector of customs for the district of Cuyahoga, in the State of Ohio, to succeed Augustus Zehring, whose term of office has expired by limitation.

INDIAN AGENTS.

Edward H. Becker, of Billings, Mont., to be agent for the Indians of the Crow Agency in Montana, vice Capt. George W. H. Stouch, United States Army, to be relieved from duty as acting Indian agent.

Walter McM. Luttrell, now physician of the Mescalero Indian Agency, to be agent for the Indians of the Mescalero Agency in New Mexico, vice Lieut. Victor E. Stottler, United States Army, to be relieved from duty as acting Indian agent.

POSTMASTER.

Wilbur P. Keays, to be postmaster at Buffalo, in the county of Johnson and State of Wyoming, in the place of A. W. Kennedy, removed. Mr. Keays is now serving under a temporary commission issued during the recess of the Senate.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Capt. Frank Wildes, to be advanced five numbers, from No. 24 to No. 19, on the list of captains.

Capt. Joseph B. Coghlan, to be advanced six numbers, from No. 34 to No. 28, on the list of captains.

Capt. Charles V. Gridley, to be advanced six numbers, from No. 35 to No. 29, on the list of captains.

Capt. Nehemiah M. Dyer, to be advanced seven numbers, from No. 39 to No. 32, on the list of captains.

Capt. Benjamin P. Lamberton, to be advanced seven numbers, from No. 45 to No. 38, on the list of captains.

Commander Asa Walker, to be advanced nine numbers, from No. 37 to No. 28, on the list of commanders.

Commander Edward P. Wood, to be advanced ten numbers, from No. 71 to No. 61, on the list of commanders.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE VOLUNTEER ARMY.

To be assistant quartermaster with the rank of captain.

Frank L. Polk, of New York.

The nominations of Frank Squire Polk and Frank L. Pope for the above-named office, which were delivered to the Senate May 28, 1893, and May 31, 1898, respectively, are hereby withdrawn.

FOR APPOINTMENT IN THE SIGNAL CORPS.

To be captains.

Frederick L. Martin, of California. The nomination of Frank L. Martin, of California, for the above-named office, which was delivered to the Senate May 27, 1898, is hereby withdrawn.

Alexander D. B. Smead, of Pennsylvania.

Charles B. Hepburn, of the District of Columbia.

First Lieut. Charles C. Clark, Fifth United States Infantry.

Elmore A. McKenna, of Idaho.

Asbery W. Yancey, of Tennessee.

To be first lieutenants.

Henry G. Opdycke, of New Jersey.

Hugh Haddow, jr., of New Jersey.

To be second lieutenants.

Williamson S. Wright, of Indiana.

McKee Dunn McKee, of New York.

Frederick M. Jones, first-class sergeant, United States Signal Corps.

Max Wagner, of Massachusetts.

Henry W. Stamford, sergeant, United States Signal Corps.

WITHDRAWAL.

Executive nomination withdrawn June 2, 1898.

Norman H. Camp, of Idaho, for appointment as first lieutenant in United States Signal Corps, which was delivered to the Senate May 24, 1898.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 2, 1898.

CONSUL.

James W. Davidson, of Minnesota, to be consul of the United States at Tamsui, Formosa.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Benjamin M. Ausherman, of Evanston, Wyo., to be receiver of public moneys at Evanston, Wyo.

INDIAN AGENT.

Edward H. Becker, of Billings, Mont., to be agent for the Indians of the Crow Agency in Montana.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE VOLUNTEER ARMY.

Frank L. Polk, of New York, to be an assistant quartermaster with rank of captain.

Frederick L. Martin, of California, to be a captain in the Signal Corps.

POSTMASTERS.

William W. Giddings, to be postmaster at Newman, in the county of Stanislaus and State of California.

Vernon A. Kent, to be postmaster at Westfield, in the county of Chautauqua and State of New York.

Eldie F. Caldwell, to be postmaster at Lawrence, in the county of Douglas and State of Kansas.

J. Kansas Morgan, to be postmaster at Neodesha, in the county of Wilson and State of Kansas.

E. P. Johnson, to be postmaster at Seneca, in the county of Nemaha and State of Kansas.

T. E. Hurley, to be postmaster at Minneapolis, in the county of Ottawa and State of Kansas.

Charles E. Sheldon, to be postmaster at Sherman, in the county of Chautauqua and State of New York.

Andrew Richmond, to be postmaster at Orleans, in the county of Harlan and State of Nebraska.

John N. Hassler, to be postmaster at Pawnee City, in the county of Pawnee and State of Nebraska.

William N. Walker, to be postmaster at Stillwater, in the county of Payne and Territory of Oklahoma.

Emmons R. Stockwell, to be postmaster at Theresa, in the county of Jefferson and State of New York.

Charles A. Snyder, to be postmaster at Middleburg, in the county of Schoharie and State of New York.

Elbridge Nash, to be postmaster at South Weymouth, in the county of Norfolk and State of Massachusetts.

H. C. Clark, to be postmaster at Mitchell, in the county of Davison and State of South Dakota.

John Baker, to be postmaster at Deadwood, in the county of Lawrence and State of South Dakota.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 2, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

POST-OFFICES AT MILITARY CAMPS.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4554) to authorize the establishment of post-offices at military posts or camps.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the continuance of the existing war the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, establish a temporary post-office at any military post or camp for the purpose of supplying the officers and troops there encamped with mails, the location of which post-office may at any time be changed to any other post or camp. On the establishment of such post-office he shall cooperate with the Secretary of War or officer commanding such post or camp for the purpose of securing the detail of an officer of the Regular or Volunteer Army of suitable rank to act as postmaster, who shall, when the exigency will permit, execute a bond to the United States as such, and of a sufficient number of noncommissioned officers and privates to act as clerks in said post-office, who shall serve as such without additional salary, pay, or compensation other than that attaching to their rank and position in the Army. Each of said persons shall, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, take the oath prescribed for persons employed in the postal service. In any case where it is deemed impracticable by the military authorities to detail persons from the Army to act as postmaster or clerks the Postmaster-General is authorized to appoint a civilian as postmaster, and also to make a special order allowing to him reasonable compensation for clerical services and to meet the necessary expenses of said office, as well as a proportionate increase of salary to the postmaster during the period of such extraordinary business as may attach to his office, under the provisions of section 2663, Revised Statutes, payable out of the appropriations for the postal service. He may also provide for the issue and payment of money orders at any post-office established under the provisions of this act, after the postmaster shall have given bond as required by law.

SEC. 2. That the Postmaster-General shall supply to post-offices referred to in the preceding section all necessary postage stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and other supplies of whatever description. He may also prescribe regulations for the conduct of the business at such post-offices in conformity, so far as the same may be applicable, to the regulations relating to the ordinary postal service.

SEC. 3. That in any case where, in the judgment of the Postmaster-General, any military post or camp can be better and more economically supplied by a branch post-office, he may, without reference to its distance from the main office, establish the same, and meet the expenses thereof by special order, as in the case of post-offices referred to in the preceding section.

Mr. SPERRY. I ask for the reading of the report.
The SPEAKER. Pending objection, the report will be read.
The report (by Mr. SPERRY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4554) to authorize the establishment of post-offices at military posts or camps, have had the measure under consideration and hereby report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Attached hereto will be found copy of telegram received by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, House of Representatives, from Hon. Charles Emory Smith, Postmaster-General, urging that action be taken looking to the passage of this measure.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, May 21, 1893.

I should be glad if your committee would speedily report Senate bill 4554, to authorize the establishment of post-offices at military posts or camps. Its prompt passage will greatly facilitate the military mail service.

CHARLES EMORY SMITH,
Postmaster-General.

TO CHAIRMAN HOUSE COMMITTEE ON POST-OFFICES.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman if this bill has been reported by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads?

Mr. SPERRY. It has; and I was authorized to bring it up.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has it received the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. SPERRY. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to have the report printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SPERRY. The report of the committee has just been read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SPERRY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CHARLES T. PLUNKETT.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 896) for the relief of Charles T. Plunkett, of Lynchburg, Va.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Charles T. Plunkett, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $104.50: Provided, That the said Charles T. Plunkett will give bond in the penalty of double the amount, with security approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Claims, were read:

In line 6, after the word "cents," insert the following: "being amount of sundry drafts, all dated January 28, 1893, to the following-named parties: R. B. Coffman, $1.70; E. H. Price, $1.90; E. E. Carroll, $28; J. H. Mowatt, $18; J. H. Mowatt, $21.90; J. H. Mowatt, $11.10; J. H. Mowatt, $21.50."

In line 6, after the word "Provided," insert the following: "That said drafts are surrendered to the Secretary of the Treasury: And provided further,"

In line 9, after the word "Treasury," insert the following: "conditioned to indemnify the United States against any loss arising out of the payment of said drafts to said Charles T. Plunkett."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. I think the bill ought to be explained, Mr. Speaker. I should like to know why this gentleman should be paid somebody else's drafts.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Speaker, during the year 1887, and along about that time, the custom was born of necessity for the bankers to pay witnesses called in United States courts. The bankers accepted the receipts. This was on account of the fact that appropriations were not available. The bankers constantly paid these little drafts for witness fees, and so forth, and as soon as the money came to the marshal, they were promptly repaid.

A great many of these witnesses were birds of passage and could not be found afterwards without a great deal of trouble. They were all found, I believe, except these five, whose drafts amounted to $104. Due diligence has been exercised to try to find these men. Four successive marshals have come in since that date. Each of them has done everything he could. Mr. Plunkett, the banker, received the warrants, and the only difficulty was that he could not get the indorsement of the payees. They could not be found, and will never be found. So after using all due diligence, he simply comes and asks that these warrants be paid to him. He will indemnify the Government by giving bonds in double the amount of the warrant. The amount involved is only $104.

Mr. BRUCKER. Were these warrants discounted at this bank by the witnesses?

Mr. OTEY. No; it is against the law for the warrants to be made out to anybody except the witnesses themselves; but the bank took the receipts issued by the marshal.

Mr. BRUCKER. They transferred them to the bank.

Mr. OTEY. They transferred them to the bank. Those papers are all on file with the Treasury Department.

Mr. BRUCKER. And they received the money.

Mr. OTEY. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. He advanced this money in full to these parties.

Mr. OTEY. In full. There was no discount to the parties.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OTEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. HENDERSON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the regular order be the call of committees?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then, after one other gentleman has been recognized on this side, so that each side shall have been recognized, I give notice that I will ask for the regular order.

Mr. SAYERS. I would ask the gentleman from Iowa not to call for the regular order until the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has a chance to report a deficiency bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly; any appropriation bill will have the right of way.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 489. An act granting an increase of pension to William A. Beckford;

S. 158. An act granting a pension to Peter Daly;

S. 486. An act granting a pension to Mary M. McCauley, widow of the late Brig. Gen. Daniel McCauley, United States Volunteers;

S. 500. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel G. George;

S. 507. An act restoring to the pension roll the name of Lucia A. Hynes;

S. 853. An act granting an increase of pension to George L. Durbin;

S. 1155. An act granting a pension to P. F. Castleman, of Oregon;

S. 1434. An act granting a pension to Richard T. Seltzer;

S. 1473. An act granting a pension to Oscar A. Palmer;

S. 1477. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Porter;

S. 1480. An act granting an increase of pension to Lewis D. Baker;

S. 1075. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward Stanley;

S. 2373. An act granting a pension to Maria Somerlat, widow of Valentine Somerlat;

S. 2751. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Johnson;

S. 2807. An act granting a pension to Benjamin L. Nolan; and

S. 3442. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew C. Mensch.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the commission heretofore appointed pursuant to the act of June 4, 1897, to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States be, and is hereby, directed to prepare and through the Attorney-General submit to Congress at the earliest practicable date a codification of the laws other than criminal and a code of procedure thereunder for the District of Alaska.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 4584. An act granting a pension to Adda F. Thompson; and

S. 4676. An act for the protection of homestead settlers who enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1910) conferring on the supreme court of the District of Columbia jurisdiction to take proof of the execution of wills affecting real estate, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 4584. An act granting a pension to Adda F. Thompson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JOHN DINSBEER.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 8119) granting an honorable discharge to John Dinsbeer, late second lieutenant in Company C, First Regiment of Missouri State Militia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to correct the military record of and grant an honorable discharge to John Dinsbeer, of St. Louis, Mo., late second lieutenant in Company C, First Regiment of Missouri State Militia.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other allowance shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act.

Mr. LOUD. Let the report be read.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I think I can make a statement which will do quite as well. This officer had had two previous services and honorable discharges from the Army, and was commissioned in 1862 as second lieutenant of the First Missouri Infantry. In 1863, at Jefferson City, an altercation occurred between one of his men and a citizen. He undertook to get the man released, as they were under orders to march, and that led him into an altercation with a gentleman in citizen's clothes, who afterwards turned out to be Brigadier-General Totten. The result of the altercation was that General Totten preferred charges against Lieutenant Dinsbeer and the court-martial found him guilty and he was dismissed.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Guilty of what?

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. For conduct unbecoming a gentleman and for disrespect to an officer. After the action was taken all of the officers of Mr. Dinsbeer's regiment, the judge-advocate who tried the case and all the members of the court-martial, General Totten himself, and General Fisk, who commanded the district, and General Rosecrans, recommended that this officer be reinstated, but owing to the movements of the troops the matter was neglected and the record has been in its present shape up to the present time. The committee unanimously recommend the passage of this bill, and I can see no reason why it should not be done.

Mr. LOVE. Why has not the bill come up some Friday night? Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I do not know. I was not here last Friday night. But it makes no difference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PEARCE of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SURVEY OF CHANNEL FROM SHIP ISLAND HARBOR, MISSISSIPPI, ETC.

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8871) for a survey for a channel leading from Ship Island Harbor, Mississippi, to the railroad pier at Gulfport, Miss., and to Biloxi, Miss., and for a survey of Ship Island Pass.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be made a survey for a channel leading from Ship Island Harbor, Mississippi, to the railroad pier at Gulfport, Miss., and from Ship Island Harbor to Biloxi, Miss., and also for an anchorage basin at both places, with a view to ascertaining the cost of same and its advisability.

He shall also report a place for making and maintaining said channels and basins by necessary dredging and improvements, together with an estimate of the cost of same. He shall further cause to be made a survey for a channel 20 feet deep at mean low water through Ship Island Pass, Mississippi, and report the cost and advisability of making same by dredging.

Mr. DINGLEY. As I understand, this bill provides simply for information, and calls upon the Secretary of War as to the advisability of the improvement.

Mr. LOVE. Yes; as to the cost and advisability.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi that if all these matters go through and the survey and report goes to the River and Harbor Committee, at the next session of Congress we are likely to have quite a large river and harbor bill.

Mr. LOVE. I would like to say to the gentleman from New York that a company composed mainly of gentlemen from New York and the West have gone to Mississippi and purchased the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad, and expect to extend it far into the interior of the State. The terminus of this road is at Gulfport, on the Gulf coast, and has no sufficient outlet. This is a matter of very great importance to my district, especially, and the State of Mississippi. We desire the dredging of a channel from Gulfport or Biloxi to deep water in Ship Island Harbor, which is equal to any in the South.

Mr. PAYNE. I am sorry the gentleman from Mississippi made that suggestion, because I had made up my mind to sit down; but if he puts it on the ground that it is for the benefit of some company in New York, I think I shall object.

Mr. LOVE. No; I do not say it is for the benefit of this railroad company alone. It is for the benefit of that locality and the whole State as well.

Mr. PAYNE. Unless there is some public interest involved beyond the benefit to the railroad company, I should not be in favor of it.

Mr. LOVE. There is a public interest of vital importance involved. I hope the gentleman will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOVE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FLAG OF THE ONE HUNDRED AND FOURTH NEW YORK INFANTRY.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 9336, to restore to the State of New York the flag carried by the One hundred and fourth New York Volunteer Infantry.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to turn over and deliver to the State of New York the flag now in his custody that was carried by the One hundred and fourth New York State Volunteer Infantry, that was raised and enlisted in the United States service from the State of New York during the war of the rebellion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask where the flag is.

Mr. ALEXANDER. In the War Department, and we desire to have it returned to the capitol at Albany, in the State of New York.

Mr. LOUD. What is the custom in regard to this?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is the custom; to return the flags to the State, and not to the organization.

Mr. LOUD. Does not the bill require that it shall be returned to the One hundred and fourth New York?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; to the State of New York. This is the unanimous report by the Committee on Military Affairs, and the Department expresses a desire to have it returned to the State of New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to consideration?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I report the following appropriation bill (H. R. 10565) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898, and I am instructed to ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and hereby are, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, as follows:

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

CONTINGENCIES OF THE ARMY.

For contingent expenses of the Army, incident to the expedition to the Philippine Islands, to be expended under the direction of the commanding general of the Philippine Islands, in his discretion, for such purposes as he may deem best in the execution of his duties under the orders of the President, and for such objects as are not now appropriated for, to be available until expended, $100,000.

EXPEDITIONARY FORCE TO CUBA.

For machinery and equipment for the construction and repair of roads, $25,000.

For the construction and equipment of military railroads, $225,000.

For additional intrenching tools, electric appliances, photographic and topographic outfit, instruments, maps, manuals, and special and technical services, $50,000.

For contingencies involving immediate expenditures of imperative urgency that can not be specified in advance, to be expended under the direction of the Major-General Commanding the Army, $50,000.

SIGNAL SERVICE OF THE ARMY.

For the expenses of the Signal Service of the Army as follows: Purchase, equipment, and repair of field electric telegraphs, signal equipments and stores, binocular glasses, telescopes, heliostats, and other necessary instruments, including necessary meteorological instruments for use on target ranges; war balloons, telephone apparatus (excluding exchange service), and maintenance of the same; electrical installations and maintenance at military posts; maintenance and repair of military telegraph lines and cables, including salaries of civilian employees, supplies, and general repairs, and other expenses connected with the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the Army by telegraph or otherwise, $150,000.

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT.

Purchase of subsistence supplies: For issue, as rations to troops, civil employees when entitled thereto, hospital matrons, general prisoners at posts, prisoners of war (including Indians held by the Army as prisoners, but for whose subsistence appropriation is not otherwise made); for sales to officers and enlisted men of the Army; for authorized issues of candles; of toilet articles, barbers', laundry, and tailors' materials, for use of general prisoners confined at military posts without pay or allowances, and recruits at recruiting stations; of matches for lighting public fires and lights at posts and stations and in the field; of flour used for paste in target practice; of salt and vinegar for public animals; of issues to Indians visiting military posts, and to Indians employed with the Army, without pay, as guides and scouts. For payments: For meals for recruiting parties and recruits; for hot coffee, canned beef, and baked beans for troops traveling, when it is impracticable to cook their rations; for scales, weights, measures, utensils, tools, stationery, blank books and forms, printing, advertising, commercial newspapers, use of telephones, office furniture; for temporary buildings, cellars, and other means of protecting subsistence supplies (when not provided by the Quartermaster's Department); for compensation of civilians employed in the Subsistence Department; and for other necessary expenses incident to the purchase, care, preservation, issue, sale, and accounting for subsistence supplies for the Army. For the payment of the regulation allowances for commutation in lieu of rations: To enlisted men on furlough, to ordnance sergeants on duty at ungarrisoned posts, to enlisted men stationed at places where rations in kind can not be economically issued, to enlisted men traveling on detached duty when it is impracticable to carry rations of any kind, to enlisted men selected to contest for places or prizes in department and Army rifle competitions while traveling to and from places of contest; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War; $5,000,000.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

For the purchase of medical and hospital supplies, including disinfectants for general post sanitation, expenses of medical-supply depots, pay of employees, medical care and treatment of officers and enlisted men of the Regular and Volunteer Armies on duties at posts and stations for which no other provision is made, for the proper care and treatment of cases in the armies suffering from contagious or epidemic diseases, $50,000.

TORPEDOES FOR HARBOR DEFENSE.

For torpedo defense of Manila Harbor, Philippine Islands, to be available until expended, $150,000.

NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

NAVY DEPARTMENT EMERGENCY FUND.

For emergency fund to meet contingencies that can not possibly be foreseen, but which constantly arise under existing conditions, $10,000,000.

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS.

For provisions and commuted rations for the seamen and marines, which commuted rations may be paid to caterers of messes, in cases of death or desertion, upon orders of the commanding officer, commuted rations for officers on sea duty and naval cadets, and commuted rations stopped on account of sick in hospital and credited to the naval hospital fund, subsistence of officers and men unavoidably detained or absent from vessels to which attached under orders (during which subsistence rations to be stopped on board ship and no credit for commutation therefor to be given); fresh water for drinking and cooking purposes; labor in general storehouses and paymasters' offices in navy-yards, including expenses in handling stores purchased under the naval supply fund, $1,000,000.

For purchase of clothing and small stores for issue to the naval service, the present fund being inadequate to meet the requirements of the service at this time, to be added to the "Clothing and small stores fund," $1,000,000.

That the appropriations made by this act, except as otherwise provided, shall remain available for payment of liabilities which may be incurred to and including December 31, 1898.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

MR. McMILLIN. I do not object to the consideration of the bill; I think it should be considered. But in view of the fact that it carries a large amount of money, that it has not yet been printed, that members are not able to have it before them, I think it should be considered in Committee of the Whole, as appropriation bills ordinarily are.

MR. CANNON. Very well, then. I will ask unanimous consent—

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for consideration under the rules of the House of the bill just reported. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MR. CANNON. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

MR. CANNON. Before the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole, I will ask unanimous consent that general debate may be considered as closed.

MR. McMILLIN. I think that in view of the fact that we have not the bill before us we ought to have an opportunity in Committee of the Whole for inquiries concerning it, such as we can not have under the five-minute rule, and to receive replies. In other words, to investigate the measure as may be desired. There will be no disposition to have any extended debate, I hope, but there are items in the bill aggregating many millions. We have neither the bill nor the report before us. Therefore, while there will be, I believe, no extended debate, there ought to be ample opportunity to investigate the measure.

MR. CANNON. Will the gentleman indicate some limit for the debate—say not exceeding thirty minutes or sixty minutes?

MR. McMILLIN. Thirty minutes on a side would be sufficient, I believe, so far as I am concerned. But I do not know what other members may desire.

THE SPEAKER. Without objection, the debate will be limited to thirty minutes on a side.

MR. McMILLIN. There are no two sides on the merits of the bill, I believe; but there seem to be two sides on the question of discussing the measure or not.

MR. SAYERS. Not a bit of it.

MR. McMILLIN. Well, the gentleman from Texas and I are in this case, as in one or two other matters, unanimous. [Laughter.]

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection to the limitation of general debate as proposed?

There was no objection.

THE SPEAKER. The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill has been agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. SHERMAN in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10565) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898.

THE CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House general debate is limited to one hour.

MR. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

There was no objection.

MR. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations has delayed reporting the general deficiency bill for obvious reasons which will readily occur to the mind of each member. It is exceedingly difficult to ascertain by way of estimate from those whose business it is to furnish estimates how much money will be required for the remainder of this fiscal year and for the first six months of the next fiscal year. It is proper for me to say to the House that so far as the committee can adopt a policy it has concluded to report a bill covering ordinary and war expenses for the remainder of this year and also for the first six months of the next fiscal year. Now, there is in sight—not appropriated for, and which will substantially, in the judgment of the committee, have to be appropriated for, including the amount carried in this bill—in round numbers, $220,000,000. But it is obvious, as I said before, that the bill can not be safely reported until about the end of the session, because estimates are almost daily coming in.

But it has been ascertained that the items embraced in the present bill, aggregating $17,845,000, are immediately necessary. Therefore this additional urgent deficiency bill is reported. It is proper, perhaps, for me to state also that including the appropriations made during this session of Congress growing out of the war and incident thereto, and the estimates for the conduct of the war for the first six months of the coming fiscal year, there has been and will have to be appropriated (making a low, conservative estimate) for war purposes, in round numbers, $350,000,000. That estimate is, in my judgment, rather over than under the amount. No one can foresee what expenditures may be necessary during the war in the West India waters, in Cuba, or elsewhere.

MR. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment? We desire to understand his statement. I understand that according to the estimates, so far as they are now in sight, the expenditures for the war up to the 1st day of January next will be in the neighborhood of $350,000,000—

MR. CANNON. Yes; and that is, I think, rather below than above the amount.

MR. DINGLEY. Indicating an expenditure of at least $600,000,000 for the year if the war should continue?

MR. CANNON. Yes, sir; if the war should continue for a year, I think it quite safe to say that it can not be conducted for less than $600,000,000; in fact that, I think, is rather above than below the amount.

MR. BERRY. Does the gentleman's statement as to the probable cost of the war contemplate its continuation for the next twelve months?

MR. CANNON. The policy of the committee is to recommend for the consideration of the House appropriations for war purposes for the remainder of this fiscal year, ending the 30th of June, and for the first six months of the coming fiscal year, which would expire December 31 next.

MR. BERRY. What I ask the chairman of the committee is, whether the estimates upon which this bill is based proceed upon the idea that the war will continue until the end of the next fiscal year?

MR. CANNON. No; the estimate of $350,000,000 is upon the idea that the war will not continue longer than the 31st of December next.

MR. LIVINGSTON. Permit me a moment. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY] will understand that there is nothing involved in this bill beyond expenditures for the next thirty days.

MR. BERRY. I understand that; but I thought the statement of the gentleman from Illinois was based upon the idea that the war would continue for some months.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. He was speaking of something the committee would do in the future.

Mr. CANNON. I was speaking what I thought, or what in my judgment would have to be carried by the regular deficiency bill for the remainder of this year and the first six months of the coming year. These items are for deficiencies of 1898, the present year.

Mr. LOVE. These, then, are matters that should come up before the regular deficiency bill.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, because they are necessary immediately. Now, if there is no further question—

Mr. SAYERS. I should like to say a word. I should like just a minute or two.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas such time as he desires.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, in regard to this bill and all other measures of like character which will come before Congress for its consideration at its present session, I wish to say that in my judgment, and speaking for myself alone, I believe that we should meet the requirement of the executive branch of the Government in the matter of appropriations. We should give to the Administration all it needs according to its own estimates, holding it responsible for the proper and successful conduct of the war; and if there should be any maladministration—which I do not charge or intimate, but if there should be—there will be ample opportunity hereafter to criticize the manner in which the funds have been expended.

The items in this bill are all of a most urgent character. They are required at once. In fact, one of the most important bureaus has advised us that it has only $70,000 or thereabouts on hand at this date, and therefore a very large appropriation becomes immediately necessary. The committee have inquired into these estimates as carefully and as thoroughly as they could, and we are all unanimous in the opinion that the House ought to pass them.

I yield back the balance of the time.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, if no further—

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I hope the bill will be taken up under the five-minute rule. I do not think there is any desire on this side of the House for general discussion. The only chance to understand the bill is to take it up under the five-minute rule, and then explain any particular section of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] ask unanimous consent that general debate be now closed?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the first paragraph of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] if there is any provision further on in this bill requiring all of the officials who have charge of these discretionary funds to report how the same are expended? If not, I think that ought to be done.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that under the general law these expenditures will have to be audited without any such special provision. It is not like a confidential fund of the State Department, which is audited on the certificate of the Secretary of State or the President. The accounts have to be audited.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is what I was wishing to know about, because, whilst I have the utmost confidence in the officers who will have charge of this, I think all moneys, especially when involving such large amounts, expended should be accounted for by the officers in charge.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. McMILLIN. And I wish to state in this connection that my object in asking that the bill be considered in Committee of the Whole rather than in the House was that we might discuss these matters. There is no division as to the necessity of making whatever appropriations are necessary to carry on the war, be they large or small; but the larger they are, the more careful we should be that no unnecessary appropriations are made.

The Clerk read the next paragraph of the bill.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Some days ago I received the following letter:

CLARKSVILLE, TENN., May 2, 1898.

DEAR SIR: There are quite a number of the survivors of Quarles's brigade here who underwent the bombardment of Fort Hudson, La., on the night of March 13, 1863, at which time the U. S. ships Hartford, Mississippi, and, I think, the Proquois attempted to run past our batteries. The Hartford succeeded with slight damage; the Mississippi became unmanageable, grounded, was set on fire by our batteries, floated off, burned till the fire reached her magazines, and exploded near the spot our ram Arkansas was destroyed, above Baton Rouge, her crew having abandoned her under our batteries after she had been set on fire, and while lying in such a position she could not bring her guns to bear on us. The third vessel turned back and rejoined the remainder of the fleet, some 3 miles below.

Now, I have seen it stated in a newspaper that Admiral G. W. Dewey, who recently made such a plucky and gallant fight and gained such an unprecedented victory in Manila Bay, was the officer who commanded the ship Mississippi on the 13th of March, 1863. If it will not require an unreasonable amount of your time to ascertain the truth or falsity of this from the records of the Navy Department, we would thank you very much to do it and inform us of the result.

Our object is, if he really did command that ship, to unite in a letter of congratulation to him and his men, to be signed by all the old Confederates now here who were present on that memorable night.

Very respectfully,

Hon. JOHN W. GAINES, Washington D. C.

A. F. SMITH.

I promptly answered this letter, and to-day I received the following fraternal and patriotic resolutions, which I will send to the desk and have read in my own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to have a certain communication read from the Clerk's desk in his own time. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLARKSVILLE, TENN., May 23, 1898.

Rear-Admiral GEORGE DEWEY,

Commanding United States Fleet, Manila Bay, Island of Luzon.

DEAR SIR: The undersigned, citizens of Tennessee, native-born Americans and, in days past, soldiers of the Confederate States, who underwent the bombardment of Fort Hudson, La., on the night of March 13, 1863, all holding paroles issued to us at the surrender of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston's army to General Sherman, at Greensboro, N. C., beg leave to tender you our most hearty and sincere congratulations upon the unparalleled victory won by you, with the aid of the gallant officers and brave men of your fleet, after your daring entrance into Manila Bay.

Remembering the days long gone, when our rations were but scant and often eaten as we marched along without the formality of halting and surrounding the festive mess table, the fact that you deliberately drew off your ships, after the action was fairly begun, but not nearly finished, in order to give your men, who had only had a cup of coffee that morning, an opportunity to get a good, square breakfast in peace and comfort, struck us as being the most deliberate and gigantic piece of humor that had hitherto come to our knowledge; and we felt if we should go to war again we should want for our commander an officer whose education in the matter of serving timely meals had been as carefully looked after as your own.

While the plaudits of all your countrymen, reinforced by the encomiums of many of the great naval officers of the world, are ringing in your ears, we feel you will allow us a little leeway in the matter of levity, without imputing to us any want of respect for yourself as an individual, or the exalted position which you are now filling with such luster to your country and honor to yourself. We therefore take the liberty of saying to you that we were present at Port Hudson, La., on the night of the 13th of March, 1863, and underwent the bombardment in which the Hartford, with some slight damage, succeeded in passing our batteries, and the U. S. S. Mississippi—on which Lieut. George Dewey was executive officer—became unmanageable, grounded, was set on fire, the flames compelling the crew to abandon her, after which she floated downstream, the fire reaching and exploding her magazines about 5 a. m., March 14, near the spot which witnessed the destruction of the ram Arkansas.

We watched that bright light for hours, as the ship followed the tortuous windings of its great namesake, saw the flash of the explosion, and felt the earth tremble under our feet as though hosts of imprisoned giants were making a last despairing effort to rend it in twain. We could not then foresee that there would come a day when we would rejoice over your escape from us and in your subsequent achievements as we do now.

When it came to our knowledge that you were an officer on this unfortunate vessel, the whole scene was vividly recalled, and we felt that we knew better than anyone, except yourself, why you punished the Spaniards so severely at Manila. It was because you had been in ill humor for more than thirty-five years over the loss of the Mississippi, and this was the first favorable opportunity you had found for giving full vent to your wrath, and you did it with all the heat and force characteristic of an American officer discharging a grave duty.

We venture to hope, should other battles fall to your lot, that other brilliant victories will be accorded you, and we know that in whatever seas your flag may float above the battle's roar, if victory perch not upon it, honor will remain emblazoned there.

We have the honor to remain, very respectfully, yours.

A. F. Smith, first lieutenant Company A, Forty-ninth Tennessee Infantry; Lewis B. Clark, captain Company K, Tenth Tennessee Infantry; G. W. Warfield, Company E, Fifth Tennessee Infantry; J. D. Moore, Company E, Fifth Tennessee Infantry; David Halliburton, Company F, Forty-ninth Tennessee Infantry; C. H. Gill, Fifth Tennessee Infantry; J. H. Balthrop, sergeant, Company C, Forty-ninth Tennessee Infantry; J. J. Garrett, Company F, Seventh Kentucky Regiment Infantry; C. H. Bailey, Company A, Forty-ninth Tennessee Infantry; C. D. Bailey, Company A, Forty-ninth Tennessee Infantry; J. H. Wells, Company A, Forty-ninth Tennessee Infantry; D. S. Major, Company K, Forty-ninth Tennessee Infantry; J. E. Mosely, Company K, Forty-ninth Tennessee Infantry; R. A. Wilson, captain Company A, Forty-ninth Tennessee Infantry; R. Y. Johnson, captain Company F, Forty-ninth Tennessee Infantry; Jerry Brown, Company F, Forty-ninth Tennessee Infantry.

The within letter having been read to Forbes Bivouac, a subdivision of the United Confederate Veterans, numbering 170 members, at their regular monthly meeting on May 23, 1898, was adopted and indorsed as the voice and sentiment of the bivouac in the following resolutions, viz:

"Resolved, That the letter of congratulation to Rear-Admiral Dewey, read to this bivouac in regular monthly meeting, assembled this day, by Comrade A. F. Smith, is most heartily indorsed by us, and that after the same has been signed by such comrades as participated in that engagement, the Secretary is instructed to make it the act of this bivouac by indorsing and signing this resolution on its back."

This May 23, 1898.

CLAY STACKER.

Secretary Forbes Bivouac, No. 2, Tennessee Division U. C. V.

Mr. GAINES. I regret not receiving these resolutions yesterday when we unanimously wiped off the statute book of the United States the last landmark of anti-Confederate legislation. Nevertheless nothing can eliminate the tender, loyal, and affectionate feeling that these resolutions bear witness to, and I submit them as they are, coming as they do from the depths of the brave hearts of these old veterans who, though they faced the recipient of this compliment thirty-odd years ago in battle array, to-day take pride and glory in Admiral Dewey's great name.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] whether any provision has been made in the present bill for the hiring of cooks to prepare food for the soldiers? I find that there is some complaint on the part of the soldiers who are encamped here at Camp Alger about the method of cooking the food. I understand that no provision has been made by the War Department for cooking the food, and while I do not think that professional cooks should be employed, I am strongly of the opinion that the Government should exercise some supervision over the manner in which the food is cooked, so that the soldiers would be sure to get their food in a palatable condition. I think it would be wise for the Government to employ competent men to instruct those who cook for each company and supervise the cooking in each regiment.

It seems to me that something should be done about this. I was at the Commissary Department this morning, and was told that the matter had been brought to the attention of the Secretary of War; that it had been found in a great many instances that the men were inadequately supplied with properly cooked food; that they could not find men in the different companies or regiments who knew enough about cooking to prepare the food. I think some provision might be made in this bill, if found necessary under certain conditions, to give the Secretary of War authority to employ such assistance as may be necessary to provide the soldiers with properly cooked food. These men have given up good situations and good homes to fight for their country for $15.00 per month, and I think that the least that the Government can do is to provide reasonable and necessary precautions for the obtaining of a proper food supply.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a word in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts. When the troops called for under the late call are furnished, there will be in the Army of the United States 275,000 or 285,000 people. When this war began, but a short time ago, we had less than 25,000 soldiers. Now, I think we have the best material on earth out of which to make an army, and in our great pride and confidence a great many people have the idea that you can say, "Presto, change!" and that there will jump into the Army from this great supply of raw material a million of men, or a third of a million, or a quarter of a million, and that sooner than you can wink your eye that Army will be fully mobilized with battle-scarred veterans.

Unfortunately or fortunately, as the case may be, it is 3,000 miles across the continent. These troops come from all the States. It takes a little time to get out your call, more time to have the people volunteer, more time to have them mustered, more time to have them transported, more time to put them in camp, more time to drill them, more time to get clothing and arms. In other words, it takes time to make a well-drilled army out of inexperienced people, however good material they may be, to get them ready for effective and active service. Now, every dollar that has been estimated for has been promptly appropriated. The War Department and Navy Department have been running wide open almost day and night, without ceasing, for the purpose of getting arms, rations, supplies, ammunition, and everything.

Now, it is impossible for an army in camp or on the march to be as entirely comfortable from the first minute as they would be in Pullman sleepers or at their homes, where they are filling the ordinary pursuits of life, and there is something of trouble and something of care in connection with the whole thing. I have no doubt, everything considered, that the Government has been and is remarkably prompt in meeting all the demands. Just what the complaint is that the gentleman refers to I do not know. Whether the gentleman has full knowledge about it I do not know.

I have seen reports floating in the papers that people were sick out at Camp Alger, for instance. I grew uneasy and indignant, and I walked down to the War Department. The Surgeon-General said:

Why, we have got plenty of hospital room over here at Fort Myer. We have got some sick there, and we can take care of a great many more as fast as it is necessary; but we have no way of transporting the sick and putting them there until we find they are sick, and then we can not speak them in there as we would send a telegram.

In my judgment, things are being done as promptly as is practicable.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, if there is any one thing more important than another in connection with the duties we are called upon to discharge, it is to avoid exciting in the country an undue amount of anxiety in regard to the troops in the field. I do not mean that we should so far avoid it as to fail to do our duty by the troops in the field, but sending home word of some failure of the Government provision has a very bad effect both at home and in camp.

Now, I heard only a word that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] said in regard to the subject of cooking in the Army and the proposition to employ professional cooks. Why, Mr. Chairman, there are a great many things soldiers have to learn to do for themselves, and preeminently the very first thing they have to learn is to cook, and they must learn to do it themselves and for themselves. I remember very well the experience of many years ago, when, in the early days of our organization, the cooking of the rations was one of the most troublesome questions we had to deal with, but it was not many months before the cooking of the soldiers in the field was almost the equal of that of any first-class hotel. The American soldiers know how to learn to cook.

Mr. ALLEN. That is where I got my training. [Laughter.] Mr. GROSVENOR. A great many men have been taught a great many things in the Army, and finally after a struggle have become statesmen, like my friend from Mississippi. [Laughter.] Now, when the Army of 1861 went into the field, they had furnished them by the Government iron camp kettles, and nothing else in the way of culinary facilities. Each company out at Camp Alger, so far as I could discover, has a complete outfit of utensils, together with a stove, which can all be packed up in two or five minutes and carried along, and all the facilities that are furnished to the soldiers out there are just about in the same ratio of increased facilities as compared with the Army of 1861. And if the material is that which I think it is, there will be no trouble about the cooking.

Cooking beans is the great important culinary feature of the soldier's life, because more harm can be done with badly cooked beans than any other one thing I know of. I took pains to go among the camps of the regiment and see how they were getting along in that particular, and they had beans and pork cooked in a way that would do credit to the chef of a first-class hotel. Now, I know that Camp Alger is being criticised everywhere. There is but one reasonable criticism that can be made against that camp, which ought to be easily overcome, and the genius of the American soldier will overcome it, and that is the scarcity, perhaps now, of pure water. Beyond that I look upon that camp, considering the time the men have had to organize it, as one of the best camps I ever saw. The shade in the neighborhood is abundant, the land slopes in a direction to make drainage possible, and every facility for maintaining health and comfort is being given to these men. If outsiders will not disturb themselves, these men will take care of themselves. The rations of the Government to-day are far better than they ever were before.

As to the health of one regiment I inquired of the surgeon yesterday—a regiment not superior in physical results to any other, I presume. It was a new regiment, just brought into camp a few days before, just about long enough to strike the worst period of a new camp. I asked the surgeon how the health of the regiment was. He said they had four or five men in the hospital with some trivial diseases incident to the change of water or change of food. There were nearly 1,200 men in that regiment just from home and going into that camp, and only a percentage of 4 or 5 out of 1,200 who were unfit for duty on that morning. Of course we can not expect to have that all the time. I remember on one morning when at a roll call of the regiment which I belonged to 180 men were sick with typhoid fever. In my judgment the Government has done everything that the length of time has made it possible to do. Some States have equipped their men better than others; but there ought to be no complaint, and if the men and we do our duty, the Government will do its duty. [Applause.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations has presented to this House, and will present to this House, every estimate made by each and every department that is responsible for supplies of every nature for the prosecution of the war. The Subsistence Department, the Medical Department, and the Quartermaster's Department have not presented a single item that we have not brought in. All that the committee and all that this House and the Senate can be expected to do is to take the estimates made by heads of Departments and present them for your consideration and recommend their adoption. It is not sensible to talk about furnishing the men with bath tubs, blacking boxes, cooks, and everything of that kind. The only thing that can be expected of us to do is to provide them with the general comforts and conveniences.

I fully agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] that these complaints, isolated as they may be, scattered over different sections of the country, coming to our ears and that of the Secretary of War, should not be magnified and reiterated here; the sooner we discourage rather than encourage them the better off will be the troops. They have got to learn to cook. It is not the province of Congress to furnish soldiers with professional cooks and bath tubs. That is understood by the men when they go into the service. We can not stop here when attempting to pass an urgent deficiency bill covering $19,000,000, money that must be appropriated before the troops can leave for Cuba or Puerto Rico or the Philippine Islands, and entertain these little complaints that come up from Camp Alger, Camp Lee, or any other camp. I suggest to the gentleman that the greatest kindness he can do to these soldiers will be to get them to see their commissary and get the proper food and then learn how to cook it.

They ought to learn how to keep out of the hospital by being temperate and careful in their habits. I do believe, Mr. Chairman, that this House, the Senate, and the War Department ought to do everything in their power for the comfort and well being of these troops while in the field—whether on the tented field or on the battlefield. But these little things to which reference has been made here are beyond our care and control; they are in the hands of the Commissary Department and of the Medical Department. There they must rest; there they must be cared for.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I had a conversation yesterday about this matter with General Egan, who said to me and several other members of the House who called about the same matter that if there was any trouble in regard to the cooking it was the fault of the local arrangements; that he was very sure that all the food necessary was at hand, and that if it was improperly cooked it was the fault of the cooks of the regiments. He, however, went further and said that he had recommended the passage of a bill to employ cooks for the Army. So that, accepting this gentleman as authority, if there is any fault as to the character of the cooking or the want of good food it is in connection with the local arrangements of the regiments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, when this discussion began I intended no criticism upon the War Department or upon the conduct of affairs over at Fort Alger. I do not believe that I made any such criticism. My statement was in the line of the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES]. I called at the Commissary Department this morning, and was told by the clerk in charge there that a great many complaints had come in. I was over to the camp last night and found that as to a great many companies the men who had been selected to cook did not know much about cooking. I thought that, if the Government could in some way employ not French cooks, but ordinary cooks, who would go into the Army and perhaps work for a little more than the ordinary soldier obtains, they would in a very short time instruct the men regularly employed for cooking purposes such ideas as would be of great advantage and result in the soldiers obtaining a proper supply of good food.

The chief clerk told me the same thing that the gentleman from Tennessee has repeated—that a recommendation had been made by the Department for the employment of cooks, or else to allow the men who do the cooking for regiments or companies to be relieved from ordinary camp duty. He said his recommendation to this effect had already been sent to the Secretary of War.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The cooks are never required to do military duty. They are never on the roster for military service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was told differently this morning over at the Commissary-General's Office.

Mr. SPALDING. The cook is never on the roster.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If that statement is correct—and of course the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SPALDING] are familiar with the facts—I will waive any further statement I might be disposed to make in this matter.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I assure the gentleman that the cook selected by a company is always exempted from all military duty.

Mr. GROSVENOR. He is not on the roster for duty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this matter under the same regulation in the volunteer forces as in the Regular Army?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is the same in the volunteers as in the Regular Army.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it the law?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is the custom or the regulation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They did not so state at the War Department. I understood it was the law or custom or regulation in the Regular Army, but was not in the volunteers. If not, I think the result of this discussion will be to establish such a regulation.

I am glad that this matter has been brought to the attention of the House, as I know it will result in some permanent improvement in the feeding of the soldiers.

We are the greatest Government upon the face of the earth, and we have a mighty army in the field, and I for one wish to feel that Congress has made and will continue to make every proper provision for the fitting out and feeding properly of the common soldier. They are the hope of this Government. Every eye is watching and every heart in this great country is beating for the success of these brave men and I shall insist that every precaution be taken to promote their welfare.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, allow me to say a few words. There is no appropriation for which I shall vote more cheerfully than this. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations need have no hesitancy about asking any appropriation, no matter how large, for the comfort of these soldiers. Thus far we members of Congress have done our duty, and we have the approval of the people. I do not care what it costs.

Our war revenue bill contemplates a possible expenditure of $700,000,000 a year. You could not scare me with an appropriation of a thousand millions; I would vote for it if it appeared to be necessary. But I want the money honestly and promptly expended, so that the best food, clothing, ammunition, and medical stores that money can buy shall as quickly as possible be served out to the Army.

We have the means now to equip this army as no army has ever been equipped before in the history of the world. Medical science is at our command. Improved methods of canning fruits, meats, and vegetables are at our disposal as they never were before. It was pathetic enough to see two battalions of infantry start out from their North Dakota homes for the Philippines in bright new uniforms and with good equipments, but, sir, I do not want to see any more troops leave for the front without uniforms, as the two troops of cavalry had to leave North Dakota. Somebody is to blame. They were as splendid boys as ever swore to support the Government of the United States. Perfect men physically, and yet their appearance was not creditable to the Government or pleasing to them or their friends.

They wore into camp the old clothes that they had worn in the fields and shops. They very naturally and very properly did not take their best clothes with them to camp. They, as a rule, took only old clothes that they expected to throw away as soon as they were mustered in. Congress had voted the money to supply proper clothing. But those poor fellows had to drill in those old rags; and, so attired, they had to bid good-bye to their friends. They made a poor appearance indeed. Gentlemen know how that matter is themselves. If any of us had to bid good-bye to our friends in unexpectedly old and ragged clothes, it would not be comfortable or pleasant. Many of those boys will never return to their friends. We shall always think of them as we last saw them. It would have been less painful to see those splendid fellows start for the front in nice new uniforms.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They had lots of company.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Yes, they had lots of company; but the Government has lots of money. We have appropriated it; and I want to see it expended for the comfort of those boys. They are entitled to be properly cared for, no matter how much it costs. Because some concern in Philadelphia or New York has a monopoly of the contract for furnishing uniforms, I do not want those poor fellows to be kept waiting there a month in those old rags. [Applause.] There are plenty of tailors in Fargo who could have made those uniforms in splendid shape within a week. If the work can not be done promptly in Philadelphia, let it be distributed in a hundred places near the rendezvous; let it be done in Kalamazoo or Medicine Lodge or Oshkosh or Danville or Petersburg or Tupelo [laughter] or any other old place. But let it be done promptly, no matter what it cost.

A MEMBER. Is the delay caused by the fact that one concern has the contract?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I am not pointing out where the blame lies. But I say that we are blameless. We have furnished the money, and now I want the Executive Departments to spend it promptly in taking care of those boys, no matter what may be the cost. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Just one word. All the tailors in the town mentioned in North Dakota, together with those in Tupelo and Danville, which are, of course, the principal places in the country—

A MEMBER. And Medicine Lodge.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; Medicine Lodge—making four—could not possibly have made the clothing necessary for those 285,000 people without a reasonable time being allowed. We could not have the uniforms on hand, because the money had not been appropriated. If anybody had expected the Government to have on hand from former appropriations sufficient clothing for 285,000 men to be mobilized in the Army—if anybody had expected the clothing to be ready the day we passed the joint resolution declaring war with Spain, he would have been laughed out of Congress and out of the country. If such an amount of clothing had been kept in stock by the Government—

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The moths would have eaten it up.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; of course it would have been destroyed.

Now, while I entirely indorse what the gentleman from North Dakota says as to the necessity of prompt action, I want to say, after some investigation, that in my judgment the Quartermaster-General of the Army, who is the general executive officer at the head of that Bureau, and also the Commissary-General and the Surgeon-General and the Chief of Ordnance, have been instant, in season and out of season, in expending the money necessary to arm, equip, clothe, and feed this great army of men.

And I want to say further, take the matter of tents: There was not in being enough of cloth to make the tents, and there is not yet in being enough cloth to make the tents. The manufacturing establishments throughout the country are running double shifts, and some of them three shifts of men, day and night. It takes a little time, and while we want to do the best we can for the defenders of the country in time of war and to furnish the money, let us be just to the instruments that we choose to expend this money.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Is not what the gentleman has said true in regard to clothing, too?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to say in corroboration of what my colleague has said that these heads of Departments have been working night and day and all day Sunday for weeks to do the things which the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] has complained about. I do not care whether Mr. Wanamaker has the contract or not, but I want to say that these heads of Departments are working day and night to get these things done.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say that contracts are let, as I am informed and believe, to those who will furnish the material in the least time and for the least price.

Mr. GREENE. Is it true—I do not think it is, but I am asking in order that there may be no wrong impression—is it true that the Departments have let out the matter of furnishing clothing to one firm as a monopoly? Is there any truth in that?

Mr. CANNON. I do not understand that to be so at all; but I will state now, in fairness to my friend, that if he had asked me how many contracts have been made, I should say to him that I do not know.

Mr. GAINES. Does the gentleman know how many firms have been furnishing these goods?

Mr. CANNON. I do not.

Mr. GAINES. You said a few minutes ago that the "manufactories of the country had been running day and night all over the country" to make these coverings. I want to say to the gentleman, because I know he wants to speak the whole truth—

Mr. CANNON. I am speaking in general terms.

Mr. GAINES. I want to say that there has not been a single one of the large manufacturers in Nashville who has been invited to make a bid on this, and they, too, stand ready to "work day and night." They have not been given a chance to bid and have not been consulted. And that is not the only thing—

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Have they the capacity?

Mr. GAINES. Yes; they can make anything there.

Mr. CANNON. Have they got the material on hand?

Mr. GAINES. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Have they tried to sell it to the Government?

Mr. GAINES. The Government has not given them a chance. Failing, they applied to me, and I went there and filed their names only a few days ago. No advertisements have been in the papers there, nor have any agents been there.

Mr. HILL. Did you apply to the proper Department of the Government?

Mr. GAINES. As soon as this condition was made known to me I did. I have letters in my desk saying they had been trying to find out at St. Louis and Chicago where "headquarters" for purchases are, to whom to apply, and they were not able to find out. The Casseby Oil Company wrote me that a day or so ago.

Mr. HILL. It is a very poor order of intelligence that can not take the public advertisements, published in almost every leading paper in the United States, and make bids upon them.

Mr. GAINES. They are as intelligent and ambitious as your merchants. These things are not given out publicly, but by private letter. No advertisements in the Tennessee press and none sent out by the Associated Press.

I have remonstrated with the Department about that, and have called attention to the fact that these bids should be let publicly and not by private letter.

Mr. HILL. They are let publicly.

Mr. GAINES. They are not. They are let by private letter. The order for 1,500 wagons was made by "circular" letter. I read it and know the fact.

Mr. HILL. May I say a word or two on this subject? A bid will be opened to-morrow in the city of New York for 225,000 blue flannel shirts for the Army, and every man in the United States has an equal opportunity for making a bid upon that proposition.

Mr. GAINES. For what?

Mr. HILL. Equal opportunity for making bids.

Mr. GAINES. What concerns?

Mr. HILL. Every man—everybody that chooses to.

Mr. GAINES. Now, let me say to you that only a few days ago they let bids for 1,500 wagons. I know this of my own personal knowledge. How did they do it? By "circular" letter, in seven days. As soon as I learned of it I immediately got blank bids and sent home to Tennessee and to every other place that I could find where there was a wagon maker, and went yesterday to get more blanks, and what did I find? I was informed that the bids would be opened to-day at 12 o'clock.

They have only allowed "seven days" in which to send blanks down South, down East, out North and West, and to get replies!

The bids were to be opened to-day at 12 o'clock. Is that the way to do? We want to provide these things for the Government, and we want the Government to have the chance to buy at the lowest figures. It is the right of the Government to have the lowest and best chance to buy. But when only a few know of the "want," that bids are wanted, only a few can or do bid; the masses are shut out for want of a public notice.

Mr. CANNON. If I can have the floor, I will answer. One gentleman kicks and says that we have not, in the twinkling of an eye, furnished transportation, arms, tents, food, and professional cooks, etc., and now comes the cyclone from Tennessee and says, "My God, you only allow seven days for my constituents to bid." [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. GAINES. And that is not all—

Mr. CANNON. Is the Army to stop? Is the expedition to Cuba to stop in order that GAINES's constituents may have longer than seven days? My God, how long do you want—six months? [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. GAINES. It is not alone that my constituents are shut out, sir, that I complain. It is more than that. It is that the Government of the United States does not have a fair chance to have a fair and public bid. Tennessee can do without furnishing wagons and war supplies, but she can furnish warriors and has done it and will continue to do it, and continue to furnish men who will stand up for her rights, the rights of the Government, here and elsewhere. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor. I once heard a soldier of the late war make a remark about a comrade who was grumbling about everything. Why, everything was wrong. Nobody was right. The devil was not right. God had made things wrong. All the human family were on the wrong track. Somebody said, "Why, that man is a fool." Well, his comrade said he was the finest and best soldier he ever saw. Said he, "You can tell that by the way he kicks." Now, I am satisfied that my friend from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] would make the best soldier on earth, from the way he kicks. [Laughter.]

Mr. OGDEN. A man never gets his rights if he does not kick.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I do not know how else to expend this money except by first appropriating it. It is clearly evident that nobody's constituents can get a contract that is to be paid for out of this money until the money is appropriated. The Department say they want the money. For that reason the committee over which I have the honor to preside came together promptly to-day and said: "Report this bill. Do not wait to have it printed. Get it to the Senate and get it through as quickly as possible." I will not mention any names, but there is $100,000 of this money that must be ready within a day or two, clean money to go into the hands of a man to expend in command of the Army. It is an urgent bill; and after we pass this bill, if you want to double the force in the Quartermaster-General's Office, if you want to make three or four Secretaries of War and multiply the civil list and the Army list by four or five or six to expend this money, why, the legislation can be reported from the appropriate committee, and then my friend from Tennessee can run and glorify. I hope we can have the next section of the bill read.

Mr. GAINES. Just a word—

Mr. HILL. In reply to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], I wish to say that I have not had much experience in regard to my constituents coming to me about contracts, but I did have an experience night before last, and I think it might be well for the gentleman from Tennessee, and those who believe as he does, to know what the result was. Two gentlemen, representing two large factories in my district, employing six or eight hundred men in the manufacture of clothing, came down here on the late train night before last to see if they could do anything to help supply the Government, and run their own establishments, which are quiet at this season of the year always, in meeting the requirements of the Army.

On the mere chance I said to them, at 11 o'clock at night, "If you will come with me, I will go to the Quartermaster-General's Office now." We went down there and at midnight we found these gentlemen at work, engaged in their efforts to meet the requirements of the Army. Samples were produced, the whole system was gone over, and these gentlemen were told that to-day in New York one series of bids would be opened in response to public advertisement, and that on the 20th another series of bids would be opened. They were asked if they had the cloth on hand, and to bid on what they had, and they were told that both time and price were serious considerations, but that time was the most serious consideration.

They were told immediately to go to New York and submit their bids for what they had and to submit their bids on the 20th for what they could get. The gentlemen took the midnight train back to New York, and I presume their bids are in to-day; and if my friend from Tennessee would give the same advice to his constituents at Nashville, instead of complaining that some one has not gone out there to tender them a contract on a silver plate, perhaps it would bring more business to Nashville. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GAINES. I am glad, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman said a silver plate instead of a gold plate. [Laughter.]

I want to say that Tennessee is not out after the "stuff;" she is not out for contracts alone. She is out first for the Spaniards, and that because they are the enemies of the Stars and Stripes. Her history in war and in peace needs no encomiums from me; but, Mr. Chairman, she is a State of the Union, and she deserves, and her citizens deserve their rights, and if these large contracts are to be let, she deserves, as do all the States, to be given a fair hearing in bidding. This is best for the Government; best for all. It is simple justice, which can be had if bids are properly, publicly called for.

The individual soldier in this matter should be heard. I say there are complaints, and as soon as I leave this Hall I shall go to Camp Alger at the call of the "Tennessee boys," who have sent for me to see about their condition. They are not the only ones who are complaining, and when there should be no cause of complaint.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to show you the injustice that is being done the South in letting these contracts, I shall read a letter from an ex-Confederate, a leading Republican, who has been repeatedly nominated by his party for Congress from Tennessee, and who, when the election recently occurred for Senator in my State, was nominated by the Republicans for the United States Senate.

After stating that Tennessee stands ready to furnish her quota of soldiers—and to furnish more if need be, I may add—he says. I will read the second paragraph and insert the whole letter:

NASHVILLE, TENN., April 26, 1898.

DEAR SIR: No section of the Union is more loyal to the United States Government to-day than the South, and especially Tennessee. Her sons are as patriotic and there is as much enthusiasm and patriotism alive in the minds and hearts of the Tennesseans as in any State in the Union. If the Government needs them and will accept them, 80,000 Tennesseans would volunteer to go to Cuba within thirty days, to serve three years or until we whipped the Spaniards.

The Government has called on the several States of the South for their quota of troops under the President's call for 125,000 men, and there is not a State in the South but what would willingly furnish ten times the number of men if required as their quota. Yes, they are anxious to furnish more troops of soldiers than demanded.

Now, this being the case, I wish to call your attention to another fact.

The base of operation, the rendezvous for the troops, the headquarters for the mobilization of the Army will be and is in the South. The soldiers will be transported to Cuba from New Orleans, Pensacola, Tampa, and Key West.

The Southern country, and especially Tennessee, Kentucky, Alabama, and the border States, all of them, have coal to sell, and in addition we could supply weapons, harness, and all the flour, corn, bacon, and beef that the Army requires. Now, why is it that Southern people can not get the contract to supply these articles? Have you got to hear of any of these different articles being supplied by a Southern man, or from a Southern State. Nashville could supply all the flour needed, and could supply it much cheaper (being nearer the headquarters or place of mobilization of the Army) than Chicago, Cincinnati, or St. Louis. We have located here several very large and splendid flouring mills, each with capacity of more than 1,000 barrels per day, and there are also located at other points in Tennessee large mills.

I write to call your attention to this matter, and believe as a member of Congress you ought to call the attention of the authorities to the subject and endeavor to correct the unjust discrimination being made in favor of the North and against the South in the matter, and have the Government to make some of their contracts with Southern people and get the supplies furnished from the South and by Southern people. I have no personal interest in this matter, but call your attention to it, believing it an act of justice and fairness to our section (the South) that it should receive your attention and through you be brought to the attention of the Government.

Yours, truly,

J. W. BAKER.

Hon. J. W. GAINES,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. Baker, you see, alludes to the immense flouring establishments of the South that are being entirely ignored, to the detriment of the Government and the public welfare. To show this, I will read a letter which I have here, from a leading wholesale staple and fancy grocer of Nashville, as follows:

[Phillips, Webb & Co., wholesale staple and fancy groceries, fine cigars and tobaccos, 144 and 146 North Market street, Nashville, Tenn.]

DEAR SIR: We notice that all the supplies the Government is buying for troops at Chickamauga are being purchased either in St. Louis or Chicago, and it does seem to us that the Nashville jobbers and manufacturers should be getting some of this business. It would certainly be to the Government's advantage to purchase some of her supplies here in this market, as they can buy all their groceries and provisions on about the same basis as in St. Louis and get much cheaper rate of freight from here to Chickamauga than from St. Louis to Chickamauga.

We have very large flouring mills here, as you well know, and we are selling winter wheat patent flour fully $1 per barrel less than the Government is paying for it in Chicago and St. Louis, and then there would be another saving of at least 30 cents per barrel in freight, so you see this would be quite an item of saving to the Government. Would be obliged if you would investigate this matter and find out whether the Government's agents at St. Louis or Chicago have authority to purchase goods in other markets; and if so, please furnish us their names, as we desire to be put in communication with them. Also let us know something about the payment of these bills.

Will the Government pay them as soon as they are audited or approved, or about how long a time after shipment would we have to wait before getting remittance? It seems to us that it would be decidedly to the Government's advantage if they had a purchasing agent at this point, especially as they are using so many supplies at Chickamauga. Would thank you to investigate this matter and give us all the points as early as you can, and oblige.

Yours, truly,

PHILLIPS, WEBB & CO.

JOHN WESLEY GAINES, Esq.,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And I have in my district, within a few hours' travel from Chickamauga, an immense flour mill, the Noel Milling Company, that turns out hundreds and hundreds of barrels daily of flour, which has not been able to sell the Government a barrel.

Mr. GAINES. Yes; a magnificent mill, unanimously ignored with many others in Tennessee. But, Mr. Chairman, the discrimination grows worse. Parkes & Co., of Nashville, write me as follows:

NASHVILLE, TENN., May 31, 1898.

DEAR SIR: We beg to call your attention to the fact that the War Department are making large purchases in St. Louis of hickory ax handles and other grades of handles which are manufactured in this State and then shipped to St. Louis. Could you not secure permission from the Government to permit us to bid on their supplies of this nature?

Tennessee is noted for its fine hickory timber, and we are furnishing handles to all quarters of the globe.

Anything that you will do for us in this matter will be highly appreciated.

Yours, truly,

GEO. S. PARKES & CO.

Hon. JOHN WESLEY GAINES, Washington, D. C.

Here we have goods made in Tennessee, sold in St. Louis, there sold to the Government agents, shipped back to Chickamauga, through Tennessee and on South, and why, Mr. Chairman? Because the manufacturers do not know of these wants. They would know it if advertisements were put in the leading newspapers of the States, or if the want was sent out with directions how and where to bid, as a matter of news, by Associated Press.

Mr. Chairman, Orr, Jackson & Co. have written me as follows. I will not read it, but insert it:

NASHVILLE, May 30, 1898.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed we hand a clipping taken from a Memphis paper, relative to contracts being let for supplies at Chickamauga, Mobile, etc. It occurs that the proper place to supply Chickamauga, at least, would be Nashville, and we would like to ask if this contract can not be given out here. Will you kindly look into this matter and see if this can be done, as it will be large business for some time and we think our city entitled to it, or at least should be placed in a position to bid?

Respectfully,

ORR, JACKSON & CO.

Hon. JOHN WESLEY GAINES, Washington, D. C.

GOVERNMENT SUPPLIES—NO REASON WHY MEMPHIS SHOULD NOT TAKE A HAND—ST. LOUIS IS REAPING A HARVEST WHILE THE BLUFF CITY GETS BEAUTIFULLY LEFT—TIMELY COMMUNICATION.

Commissioner J. S. Davant, of the Memphis Freight Bureau, is in receipt of the following timely communication:

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 18, 1898.

DEAR SIR: I have just returned from a trip from St. Louis and Kansas City, and found that the merchants at each of those points are making heavy sales of supplies of all kinds for the use of the Government troops at Chickamauga, Mobile, Tampa, and New Orleans.

On Monday last contracts were let at Kansas City aggregating 2,000,000 pounds, consisting of baking powder, candles, coffee, beans, canned goods, salt meat, salt, vinegar, flour, and soap.

It occurs to me that our Memphis merchants should certainly be in position to supply at least a portion of these commodities. It is highly probable that the movement of these supplies will grow heavier, and if any of our merchants are in position to supply the Government I would suggest that they get in communication with Quartermaster Smith at St. Louis. In addition to provisions, clothing will have to be supplied in large quantities, also shoes and hats. St. Louis is simply reaping a harvest from this source.

Very truly,

R. L. MCKELLAR, A. G. F. A.

Mr. JAMES S. DAVANT, Commissioner, City.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BENNETT). Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. GAINES. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The question I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee is this: Have the parties in Nashville offered to the Government flour at a dollar a barrel less than they are now purchasing it?

Mr. GAINES. They are ready to do it, and they are holding a meeting in Nashville now to remonstrate with the powers that be because they have not had the chance to do it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is not the question.

Mr. LANDIS. Were they here to offer their flour and put in a bid?

Mr. GAINES. No, sir; nor should they be expected to come here. Let bids be asked for publicly, through the press. They can stay at home then and bid.

I will tell you about the question of coal. The merchants—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES. I only want two minutes more, and I would tell the experience of the coal men who did come here from Tennessee and Alabama. I will put the letters that I was about to read in the RECORD. All they want is a chance to bid on these contracts, and whether they get it or not Tennessee stands ready to defend the Stars and Stripes and to maintain the honor and dignity of the United States.

I am a Tennessean. I come from the Hermitage district, where rest the ashes of Jackson, who said, "The Union must and shall be preserved;" and I stand here, Mr. Chairman, in my humble way, to say the dignity and honor of the nation must and shall be preserved, and I am ready, as I have been all the time, to vote to do it. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I agree to all that the gentleman from Tennessee says about the bravery of the citizens of Tennessee. I have no doubt they are brave and patriotic. If there is anything on earth that would make me doubt it, it would be his proclamation of it and asseveration of it time after time, because brave men do not do that.

Mr. GAINES. This is but the second time I have opened my mouth on the subject. It is a matter of history. But I shall defend the State of Tennessee and the citizens of Tennessee on the floor of this House as long as I continue to be a Representative from that State, and the gentleman from Illinois can not shut me off, either, from defending her history, past and present. [Applause.]

SHEFFIELD COAL, IRON, AND STEEL COMPANY,
Sheffield, Ala., May 1, 1893.

MY DEAR MR. GAINES: I trust you will keep me promptly advised by wire, at my expense, of any possible contracts for coal that our company could obtain, or at least make a bid for. I know that the Navy Department is particularly—properly so, no doubt—in the matter of the character of coal purchased for Navy purposes. I have forwarded to the Department samples of our coal, and I received the Government analysis when there last week, all of which is a matter of record, and I am satisfied they can find no coal that is equal to the Alabama coal for steam purposes.

The Pocahontas and Virginia coal is freer from smoke than the Alabama coal, but in my judgment not so good for steam purposes. I know your promptness in these matters and how easy it is for you to obtain the information that can not under any consideration be obtained by an outsider. I have gone to considerable expense in this matter looking to contracts with the Government, and I think that Alabama should be entitled to her share of coal purchased by the Government.

When in Washington I secured a specially low rate of freight from the Southern Railway officials to Mobile. This is our best shipping point, although we can ship to New Orleans and Port Royal. I will be glad to have you look into this matter. Let me hear from you.

Yours, truly,

A. W. WILLS,
President.

Hon. J. W. GAINES, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Major Wills is a leading Republican and present postmaster at Nashville. The Tennessee Coal and Iron Company has sold a few tons to the Government, but a mere trifle. Col. A. M. Shook is president of this company, and a distinguished Republican and business man.

On May 25 the vice-president of this company writes me as follows:

SHEFFIELD COAL, IRON, AND STEEL COMPANY,
Sheffield, Ala., May 25, 1893.

MY DEAR MR. GAINES: I inclose herewith clipping from a Memphis paper which explains itself. "Nearly 2,000,000 bushels of coal shipped South from Pittsburgh." Our company is operating a coal mine near Jasper, and the coal we mine there is a very superior steam coal, being harder than the ordinary steam coal. It consequently bears transportation better, and it has but a trace of sulphur.

This coal is being used with perfect satisfaction by the Southern Railroad, the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, and the Northern Alabama Railroad. The president of our company, Maj. A. W. Wills, has been endeavoring to get an opportunity to bid on some of the coal for the Government, and has had samples forwarded to the Navy Department for analysis, but we have not succeeded yet in getting in a bid on any of the Government requirements. It strikes me that the South should at least get her pro rata of these Government contracts.

It looks as though the South was being rather passed by when coal is shipped from Pittsburgh to New Orleans. We are in position to ship coal to New Orleans, Mobile, Pensacola, or other Southern ports. I shall be very much obliged to you if you will take up this matter and investigate it and advise whether or not we can't be allowed to bid on some of this coal for the Government. Thanking you in advance, and with best wishes,

I am, yours, truly,

W. R. COLE.

Hon. J. W. GAINES, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10505) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriation for the support of the military and naval establishment for the fiscal year 1893, and had instructed him to report the same back to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

CAB SERVICE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House House joint resolution 189, authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to locate a cab service, and for other purposes, with Senate amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

ABANDONED TRACKS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate bill 914, with Senate amendments.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist and agree to a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, and Mr. RICHARDSON.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. R. 148. Joint resolution providing for the printing of House Document No. 396, relating to the beet-sugar industry in the United States.

AGE OF PROTECTION OF GIRLS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees for the consideration of business in the morning hour.

Mr. HENDERSON (when the Committee on the Judiciary was called). I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to call up the bill (H. R. 1136) to raise the age of protection for girls in the District of Columbia to 19 years. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kansas, Judge BRODERICK.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That if any person shall carnally know any female between the ages of 16 and 18 years, out of wedlock, in the District of Columbia, such carnal knowledge shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and the offender, being convicted thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for a term not exceeding eleven months and twenty-nine days, or fined not exceeding $200, or may be punished by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 2. That this act shall not be construed as repealing or modifying any statute relating to rape.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, and agreed to, as follows:

After the word "shall," in line 3, amend by inserting the words "seduce and;" and also after the word "female," in line 3, insert "of previous chaste character;" and also in line 8 erase the words "eleven months and twenty-nine days" and insert in lieu thereof "one year."

Mr. BRODERICK. In addition to the amendments reported with the bill, the committee has authorized me to offer the following amendment:

In line 5 strike out "18" and insert "21."

The amendment was agreed to; there being—ayes 13, noes 12.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, there were—ayes 31, noes 18.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think that a bill making so important a change as this bill does in the common law of the world ought not to be passed without a quorum of the House voting upon it. I make the point that no quorum is present.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, do not do that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The bill ought never to have been reported. It ought never to be passed here or anywhere else.

The SPEAKER (having counted the House). There are 114 members present—not a quorum.

Mr. HAY. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the announcement of the vote on the motion to adjourn, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ALDRICH, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BRUMM, for this week, on account of sickness.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting supplemental estimates of appropriation to provide for the organization, equipment, etc., of the troops under the second call, was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10561) to increase the force of the Ordnance Department, reported the same, accompanied by a report (No. 1479); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10565) to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments of the Government for the fiscal year 1898, reported the same, accompanied by a report (No. 1483); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Revision of the Laws, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8571) to define and punish crimes in the District of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said District, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1483); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. STALLINGS, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1279) to grant a pension to Mrs. B. C. Lowe, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1478); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CUMMINGS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10283) for the relief of John Abbott, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1484); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. BROMWELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4514) granting an increase of pension to David Horn, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 1481); which said bill and report were laid on the table.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A bill (H. R. 10559) for the extension of Seventeenth street NW.—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. JONES of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 10560) to change the port of Tappahannock, in the district of Tappahannock, in the State of Virginia, to Reedville, Va.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HULL (from the Committee on Military Affairs): A bill (H. R. 10561) to increase the force of the Ordnance Department—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. HAY: A bill (H. R. 10562) to provide for increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, to provide for the equipment of the National Guard in time of peace, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CRUMPACKER: A bill (H. R. 10563) to provide for the holding of terms of the district and circuit courts of the United States at Hammond, Ind.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. EVANS: A bill (H. R. 10564) to provide for an additional force in the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899—to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BOTKIN: A bill (H. R. 10566) granting an increase of pension to Sarah L. Larimer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: A bill (H. R. 10567) for the relief of the widow of Dr. Ricardo Ruiz, deceased—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HAY: A bill (H. R. 10568) for the relief of M. Louise Breedin, Frances K. Breedin, Anna S. Coleman, and Alfred H. Breedin—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HUNTER: A bill (H. R. 10569) to pension James Foltz—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LYBRAND: A bill (H. R. 10570) granting a pension to George E. Reid—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10571) granting an increase of pension to Richard Milliner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TONGUE: A bill (H. R. 10572) granting a pension to Robert Sturgens—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WARNER: A bill (H. R. 10573) to grant a pension to Mrs. Annie Cusack—to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAMS: Petitions of Curran Bros., James A. Stead, F. G. Lehnen, and Mrs. Sophia Beck, of Philadelphia, Pa., against the war-revenue tax on snuff and tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BLAND: Petition of Mrs. Anna H. Dirckx, administratrix of the estate of Peter I. Dirckx, deceased, late of Taos, Cole County, Mo., asking reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BOTKIN: Petition of the Pleasant View and Shiloh Methodist Episcopal Churches, of Mitchell County, Kans., for a prohibitory liquor law in the Territory of Alaska—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. GROUT: Petitions of Mrs. Lucy R. Kellogg and the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Jamaica, Vt., and Rev. M. S. Eddy and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Waterbury Center, Vt., in favor of the passage of a bill to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Also, petition of Rev. M. S. Eddy and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Waterbury Center, Vt., asking for the passage of the bill to raise the age of protection for girls—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petitions of Rev. M. S. Eddy and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Waterbury Center, Vt., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws and to forbid the interstate transmission of lottery messages by telegraph—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HUNTER: Petition of James Foltz, to accompany House bill granting him a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JENKINS: Petition of H. L. Humphrey and 37 other citizens of Hudson, Wis., in favor of the passage of a bill to prevent the desecration of the American flag—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LYBRAND: Petition of Jeremiah Cain, of Urbana, Ohio, late of the Eighth Battery, Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MCINTIRE: Petitions of James I. Carroll and other citizens of Baltimore, Md., in favor of legislation which will more effectively restrict immigration and prevent the admission of illiterate, pauper, and criminal classes to the United States—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of Rev. Henry C. Schlueter and other citizens of Baltimore, Md., opposing the bill for the further restriction of immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. MINOR: Petitions of physicians and other citizens of Greenbay, Wis., favoring legislation providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Greenbay, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation raising the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of the Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian, and Moravian churches of Greenbay, Wis., for the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SNOVER: Petition of the Michigan State Millers' Association, of Lansing, Mich., asking for the passage of a bill to prevent the adulteration of flour—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STEELE: Petitions of N. O. Ross, S. L. Beach, and 300 other citizens of Logansport, Ind., favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: Petition of ladies of Cisco, Tex., in favor of the bill to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. STRODE of Nebraska: Petition of R. E. Fenton, of Dawson, Neb., protesting against the taxation of proprietary articles in the war-revenue bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WISE: Papers relating to the claim of John F. Whitehurst, of Norfolk County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 3, 1898.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.
Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.
On motion of Mr. HALE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

LAND-OFFICE FEES IN ALASKA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office relative to section 6 of the act of March 21, 1864, regulating the fees and commissions of registers and receivers, and requesting that the provisions of the section be extended to the District of Alaska; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 886) for the relief of Charles T. Plunkett, of Lynchburg, Va.;

A bill (H. R. 8110) granting an honorable discharge to John Dinsbeer, late second lieutenant in Company C, First Regiment of Missouri State Militia;

A bill (H. R. 8871) for a survey for a channel leading from Ship Island Harbor, Mississippi, to the railroad pier at Gulfport, Miss., and to Biloxi, Miss., and for a survey of Ship Island Pass;

A bill (H. R. 9338) to restore to the State of New York the flag carried by the One hundred and fourth New York Volunteer Infantry; and

A bill (H. R. 10565) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BERRY presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Arkansas, remonstrating against the proposed tax on life-insurance policies; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SPOONER presented a petition of the Epworth League of Darlington, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the congregations of the Welsh churches of Wales and Bethesda, in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the memorial of Leonard Kluber and 23 other citizens of La Crosse, Wis., remonstrating against the proposed tax on life-insurance policies and praying that the proposed stamp tax be modified; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MCBRIDE presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Astoria, Oreg., and a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Portland, Oreg., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Pleasant Hill Grange, No. 284, Patrons of Husbandry, of Oregon, praying for the enactment of legislation to secure protection against the use of adulterated food products; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Pleasant Hill Grange, No. 284, Patrons of Husbandry, of Oregon, praying for the enactment of legislation to secure to the people of the rural sections of the country free rural mail delivery; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of Pleasant Hill Grange, No. 284, Patrons of Husbandry, of Oregon, praying for the enactment of legislation to secure to the people of the country the advantages of postal savings banks; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. THURSTON presented a petition of sundry temperance workers of the First Baptist Church, of Nebraska City, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors at Chickamauga Park; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the memorials of D. J. Scanlon, of Sydney; of R. E. Fenton, of Dawson; of C. A. Gibbon, of St. Edward; of F. V. McDonald, of Murdock; of A. E. Wanek, of Milligan; of George B. Williamson, of Aurora; of Stockwell & Co., of Bassett; and of C. A. Luce & Co., of Stamford, all in the State of Nebraska, remonstrating against the adoption of Schedule B of the war-revenue bill, placing a tax on proprietary medicines; which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MURPHY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 7) directing the Secretary of War to submit estimates for work upon Wallabout Channel, New York, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4462) to provide for a municipal building and court-house in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported an amendment relative to the appropriation of $35,000 to prevent the threatened destruction of the south pier at St. Josephs Harbor, Michigan, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROADS INVESTIGATION.

Mr. FORAKER, from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report, accompanied by testimony authorized under the resolution of the Senate adopted May 17, 1897, relating to the issue of patents for lands of the United States to the Pacific railroads and to the California and Oregon Railroad, and also the amount due the sinking fund of the Union and Central Pacific roads on account of subsidies paid the Pacific Mail Steamship Company by said roads and deducted from the gross earnings of said roads and charged to the operating expenses; which was ordered to be printed.

MISS M. O. CHAPMAN.

Mr. MONEY. The bill (H. R. 10420) for the relief of Miss M. O. Chapman, of Paulding, Jasper County, Miss., was referred to the Committee on Claims. It should have been referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I ask that the change of reference be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

Mr. NELSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10235) authorizing certain life-saving stations to be opened and manned during June and July, 1898, to report it back favorably without amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration. It is a bill of importance in connection with the present war, and is recommended by the Treasury Department and by the Navy Department as a matter of urgency.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent that the amnesty bill may be taken up in order to concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4578) to remove all disabilities imposed by the fourteenth article of the Constitution.

The amendments of the House were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the disability imposed by section 3 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States heretofore incurred is hereby removed.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act to remove the disability imposed by section 3 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States."

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 4707) to provide for the compensation and expenses of special counsel for the Government in prize cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MCBRIDE introduced a bill (S. 4709) to extend the privilege of immediate transportation to the port of Astoria, Oreg.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THOMAS WILLIAMS.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Thomas Williams the sum of $1,500, for injuries received while in the discharge of his duties as an employee of the Senate in the year 1892; said sum to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, and to be considered as in lieu of any allowance for medical attendance or other expenses incurred on account of said injury.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 8119) granting an honorable discharge to John Dinsbeer, late second lieutenant in Company C, First Regiment of Missouri State Militia; and

A bill (H. R. 9398) to restore to the State of New York the flag carried by the One hundred and fourth New York Volunteer Infantry.

The bill (H. R. 8871) for a survey for a channel leading from Ship Island Harbor, Mississippi, to the railroad pier at Gulfport, Miss., and to Biloxi, Miss., and for a survey of Ship Island Pass, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 886) for the relief of Charles T. Plunkett, of Lynchburg, Va., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 10565) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898 was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1702) granting an increase of pension to Nancy G. Allabach;

A bill (S. 4169) granting an increase of pension to Simeon Stevens; and

A bill (S. 4491) granting an increase of pension to Susan D. Yates.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the following bills, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, and Mr. DRIGGS managers at the respective conferences on the part of the House:

A bill (S. 769) to increase the pension of Clark W. Harrington; and

A bill (S. 1119) granting a pension to Cassius M. Clay, sr., a citizen of Kentucky, and a major-general in the Army of the United States in the war of the rebellion.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 189) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to locate a cab service, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

WAR REVENUE BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the revenue bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures.

Mr. TURLEY. I wish to ask a question for information. I believe we have gotten through with all the committee amendments in the revenue part of the bill. The amendment I intend to offer, and also the one the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] intends to offer, apply to the revenue part of the bill. Would it not be better to take up those amendments before we go to the provisions in relation to the issuance of greenbacks and coining the seigniorage?

Mr. ALLISON. The unanimous understanding was that the committee amendments should be considered before other amendments were offered, and I hope that course will be pursued. The Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] offered an amendment on behalf of the majority of the committee last night.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from California offered an amendment which is to be pending, and it seems to me that it would be a reasonable course to vote on amendments such as the one offered by the Senator from Tennessee and the one offered by the Senator from California, because if Senators have not their minds made up to vote for the issue of bonds anyway, the necessity for issuing bonds would be affected by the action of the Senate in either putting in those amendments or refusing to incorporate them in the bill.

They would raise considerable sums of money, and before the Senate can intelligently determine whether or not bonds ought to be issued the bill ought to be so perfected that Senators could form some idea of the amount of revenue to be raised by the bill. If there is to be revenue enough raised by the bill to defray the current expenditures of the Government for twelve months, the Senator from Iowa would certainly admit that there would be no necessity for selling bonds. No one can tell how much money will be raised by the bill until we know what is put in the bill and what is not. It seems to me it would be a very reasonable thing to do to dispose of these amendments before the others are taken up.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think, if all the amendments which have been introduced for raising revenue from one source and another should be adopted and become law, there is a possibility that they would in any great proportion cover the expenditures of the war?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no doubt that the provisions suggested by the Democratic members of the committee would provide amply for all the reasonable expenses of the war.

Mr. HALE. For a year?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. But I am just as well satisfied that the Senate will put the bond feature on the bill, whether it is necessary or not. However, I do think that if Senators only intend to vote for bonds in so far as they are necessary it would be a wise thing for us to know what would be the probable revenue resulting from the bill before determining how many bonds shall be issued.

Mr. HALE. I was not seeking to call the Senator's attention to the subject of bonds, but only as to what the Senator believes the war will cost. I have no doubt that if the war continues for a year it will cost seven or eight hundred million dollars.

Mr. TELLER. For a year?

Mr. HALE. For a year. I have no doubt of that. It is not a matter of any account what a man predicts, but I put myself on record, with some knowledge of the appropriations already made and already reported and already considered by the Committee on Appropriations in one branch or the other, that if the war continues for a year it will cost from seven to eight hundred million dollars.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In all human probability that much money may be spent, but I am just as well satisfied that there is no necessity for spending $400,000,000 as the war expense as I am that probably seven or eight hundred million dollars may be spent. I do not believe that the war is going to last for twelve months nor six months, nor anywhere near it; but if it should continue for twelve months, the most extravagant estimates made for the expenses of the war were less than $400,000,000, and these were made by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Treasury, gentlemen who should certainly have some idea about what the expenses will be.

Mr. HALE. The trouble with all that is, as always in such cases, that none of those estimates are much, if any, more than half of what will be the actual cost, for war never was so expensive as it is at the present day. No war is as expensive as an expeditionary war, a war that involves ships and soldiers sent away from our own shores to other countries, near and far. It has always been the history of all military operations that you can maintain an army that does not have to embark and go abroad at half the expense that you can maintain an army when conducting a war by expeditionary forces, as must be the case in this war. I have heard all the estimates, and I have studied them all as well as I could, and I venture again the prediction that if the war lasts a year it will cost seven or eight hundred million dollars. I hope I shall be wrong. I would pray very greatly that I may be wrong. I hope it will be as the Senator says, that the war will end sooner and we shall stop it. If it were stopped to-day, it would have cost us nearly half that sum.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it seems to me there is great force in what the Senator from Arkansas says about determining the amount that the bill will raise. There are two features of the bill. One is the revenue feature and the other is a loan feature. The two might have been, and I think should have been, disconnected. I think if the House had sent us two bills, one to be considered as a revenue measure solely and the other as an emergency measure, if there were one, to make a loan, we would have been in a very much better condition to have legislated on this revenue portion of the bill. But the committee, I believe—I mean now the committee in another place—feeling that there was some doubt whether the Senate might accept a separate and independent proposition to borrow money disconnected from the revenue, felt that it would be good politics probably for them to put on the loan feature.

Mr. President, we ought to know what this revenue measure is going to produce before we vote on either the proposition to issue greenbacks or the proposition to issue bonds or Treasury notes. It is utterly impossible for us to know what we ought to do until we learn what the bill will produce. I know the difficulties in determining that, and yet there can be an approximate, reasonable determination of it, beyond all question. The member of the committee who has this bill in charge has attempted it, and some other members of the committee have attempted it on a bill different from what we are getting. When this bill is all completed and we have got all the amendments on it, then, it seems to me, somebody should make a fair estimate of what it will produce and how rapidly it will produce the revenue.

Mr. President, I am particularly interested in this revenue scheme. I am interested in it because I know it is not to be a temporary scheme, as was stated in another place. It is not to be a scheme to be repudiated at the close of this war, whether that is within ninety days or two years.

It can be demonstrated that the present system of collecting money under the Dingley bill, so called, and the existing internal-revenue taxes will not produce enough money to run the Government in time of peace. Our deficit this year, if we take out all the extraordinary expenses, can not be less than $80,000,000. I think it can be demonstrated that the deficit this year will be fully up to $80,000,000. I am not now, of course, counting the extraordinary war expenses. Those are to be added to our great expenditures.

The truth is that every year now for several years we have had a deficit. We would have had a deficit if the Wilson bill had never passed, and I believe every conservative Senator here will admit that now. It was known at the time the so-called McKinley bill was passed that we were going to run very close to a deficit, if not make a deficit. I know a number of Senators who were not members of the Committee on Finance protested to the Committee on Finance that the reduction of rates upon sugar, and some other things, would involve us ultimately in a deficiency. We succeeded in getting out that first year with a bare two million and something of surplus, and then our deficiency began.

While it has been attributed to the fact of a change of Administration, everybody knows honestly, when he comes to look at it, that it was a deficiency because of the reduction more than was required and more than was proper in the McKinley bill. The Wilson bill was not a revenue bill; that is, I mean it was not a bill getting sufficient revenue. It was professedly a revenue bill, and not a protection bill. The difference between it and the McKinley bill was simply one of degree. It was just as much a protection bill as was the McKinley bill, except in degree. They were both laid for the purpose of revenue in one instance and protection in the other.

Now, if you will take the returns of the last four or five years and go over them you will see that there has been a steady deficiency. For many years we had a large surplus. We gradually reduced that surplus in the interest of relieving the people from taxation, although it was the policy of the party then in power to ultimately pay the debt. We had run our public debt down to a comparatively small sum, so that the interest-bearing debt February 1, 1894, had got down to $585,000,000. At the rate we were going on up to 1890 we would have soon completed the payment of the public debt. For instance, in 1888, not going further back than that year, we had a surplus of $119,000,000. The next year we had a surplus of $105,000,000, and the next year, 1890, we had a surplus of practically the same amount, one hundred and five million and some odd thousand dollars. In 1891 we had a surplus of only $37,000,000. In 1892 we had a surplus of only $9,000,000, and in 1893 we had a surplus of $2,341,000. This was under the McKinley bill.

There is not any reason to suppose that there would have been any greater surplus if the bill had not been interfered with and if there had been no change in the administration of public affairs. But in 1894 the deficit was $69,000,000, or almost $70,000,000. The next year it was $42,000,000, in round numbers. The next year it was $25,000,000, in round numbers. The next year it was $17,000,000, in round numbers—that is, in 1897—and if there had been no war or no rumors of war there would have been a deficiency this year of at least $60,000,000.

Mr. President, it may be that in time we shall get a revenue sufficient under the present bill to meet all the expenditures of the Government, but if you will look for a moment and see how our expenses are increasing, I think that will hardly be expected. In 1885 our pension list was $56,000,000. In 1887 it had risen to $75,000,000. In 1890 it had risen to almost $107,000,000. In 1892 it had risen to $134,000,000. In 1893 the pension appropriations amounted to $159,000,000; in 1894 to $141,000,000, and in 1896 it was a little less than $139,000,000. This year it will be one hundred and fifty-odd million dollars anyway.

Mr. ALLISON. About $151,000,000.

Mr. TELLER. It will be about $151,000,000 this year. For years that item of expense will increase rather than decrease. I need not repeat what I have said before, and what everyone knows, that when this war is over, whether it be in six months or six times that period, we will enter upon expenditures in different directions that have been unknown to this country. I believe that the American people will with one voice demand that this country shall have a navy commensurate with its strength and its importance and the danger it may be in from foreign attacks. I believe that every city on the Atlantic coast and the Pacific coast where there is any number of people and much wealth will demand adequate protection from foreign bombardment.

Mr. President, this can not be done without great expense. It is a continual expense to build ships and to run them. How much soever we may dislike it, we ought to face the inevitable. We ought to remember that our expenses are bound to be increased very rapidly from the close of the present war, not simply because of the growth of the country, but because of the increased demand for expenditures in the direction that I have named.

It does seem to me that it is the duty of the Senate, the only place where a revenue bill can be properly considered and where it can have any attention whatever under modern legislative practices, to take sufficient time upon the revenue feature of this bill to secure to the Government of the United States an adequate revenue not only in time of war, but in time of peace. I shall not myself be contented to vote on this bill or for the various amendments to it, but I may do it, unless I can have some kind of an idea as to the amount it is going to produce.

I confess, Mr. President, that after the different amendments which have been put in here I can not myself form any judgment as to what it will raise, and I do not believe anybody else can except members of the committee who have the means of determining much better than we who are not on the committee. They can call upon the Treasury Department to assist them; and it seems to me that it is the duty of the committee first to settle the revenue portion of the bill. Then there can come in later all controverted questions as to whether we shall issue bonds, and if so, how many, whether we shall coin the seigniorage, or whether we shall issue greenbacks, and if so, how many. It seems to me that that is the logical and practical method of proceeding.

I protest that there is not now any necessity for such haste that the bill should be passed in a way that it will not accomplish what everybody here knows the interests of the country demand—a fixed and determined revenue. I do not care what party is in power, these expenditures must go on. I do not want to delay the bill for a moment, but I do want, if possible, to have a bill which, when we shall have put it on the statute books, may remain there and may furnish a sufficient amount of revenue to maintain this Government as it ought to be maintained.

Of course I am very much opposed to the increase of the public debt. I myself would never agree to increase the public debt except in the case of emergency, and then I suppose I would feel just as every other good American—that if the necessity comes, we must go in debt. I am not so much afraid of debt that I would not maintain the honor of the country by going in debt if it were necessary. I believe we are only differing as to whether there is a necessity to increase the interest-bearing public debt at this time or not. I do not care to go over the debate that has been gone over.

I merely want to appeal this morning to the committee, who seem to suppose that they are charged with some duty of reaching a vote upon the bill this afternoon or to-morrow, that the Government is not suffering in the slightest degree by a failure to pass the bill. The Government will not be hampered in the slightest degree if the bill does not pass for ten days yet. The Government has all the money that it wants now, and it will have all the money it wants if the bill should not pass until the 1st of July. It can pass, and ought to pass, before that time, but it ought not to be crowded here upon us until everyone feels that it accomplishes what we profess to have started to accomplish, and that is to get an adequate revenue not only for this occasion, but when this occasion of emergency, as we call it, shall have gone.

Mr. MILLS. I rise to ask if the bill is now open to amendments.

Mr. ALDRICH. The committee amendments are not yet disposed of.

Mr. President, I fail to understand the force of the suggestions made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. The bill as it stands in its present form, it is agreed upon all hands, will produce from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 of revenue. It is also agreed upon all hands, without any dissent, that the extraordinary expenditures on account of the war up to the 1st of July, 1890, will amount at least to $400,000,000.

Mr. TURPIE. I do not assent to that.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Indiana says he does not assent to that. I will then say $300,000,000, although we have added 75,000 troops since that estimate was made; and I think all Senators upon the other side will agree that if those troops are put in the field, it will probably increase the expenses of the Government at least $75,000,000.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Rhode Island will allow me, I will state that the deficiency bill alone which will come into this body from the House will appropriate from $300,000,000 to $350,000,000. That one bill alone will carry that sum.

Mr. ALLISON. And running only to January.

Mr. HALE. And running only to January.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I call his attention to the fact that 50,000 men from the second call will be used to fill up skeleton regiments, and that the estimates have been fully made for 125,000 men. That leaves only 25,000 men to be allowed for, and that expense is fully covered and more than covered by the contingencies provided for in the pending bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not understand that to be the case. I understand that the first call of 125,000 men has been filled, but filled by a larger number of regiments than would be required under the maximum number.

Mr. GRAY. I am quite sure that is right. The deficiency the Secretary of War speaks of, unless I am very much mistaken, is not in the total aggregate of 125,000 men, but it is a deficiency in the organization of the different regiments that go to make up the 125,000. For instance, while the State of Pennsylvania has furnished its quota, its requisite part of the 125,000, it has done it by putting a number of regiments into the field that have 600 men instead of 1,000 or 1,200, or whatever the number is, and it is proposed to fill all these regiments to the maximum strength. That is what I understand to be the case, unless I am very much mistaken.

Mr. TURPIE. That is not what I understand. We have here the estimates made by the three Secretaries on the ground of the regiments being filled to the number of 125,000 men, and counting 1,000 men at $1,000,000 it makes $125,000,000. That is the basis of the calculation, and it is not increased by the second call, except as to 25,000 men, which is more than covered by the calculation of contingencies added by the two Secretaries in making their calculations, which included transportation to the West Indies and to the Philippines, and 10 per cent added to the estimated cost of transportation.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Rhode Island will permit me to add a word on the question of appropriations, I will state that the bill which will come from the House, carrying appropriations ranging from $200,000,000 to $250,000,000 will be based upon the present conditions. It will be based upon the proposition that a large number of men under the second call will be put in the first-call regiments to fill them up.

Mr. GRAY. Not to fill up the quota, but to fill up the organizations.

Mr. HALE. To fill up the organizations. Something is saved in that, but not a very large proportion. All the men have to be cared for just as if they went into new regiments. The item of saving is not very great in officers. It will be a question of saving, perhaps, $150,000, but the great expense to the country will be almost the same it would have been if they had been put into new organizations.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Iowa, who a few days ago made an estimate of the expenses of the war for a year, including the extra 75,000 troops, put the amount at only about $375,000,000 a year.

Mr. ALLISON. There ought to be and there can be no serious difference as to what these expenditures will be. The estimated expenditures of the Secretaries before the Committee on Finance amounted, in round numbers, to $379,000,000 up to July 1, 1899, and the estimate was on the basis of 125,000 men.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly the Senator—

Mr. TURPIE. No, no.

Mr. ALLISON. And on the basis, practically, of a thousand dollars to a man. I will yield to my friend from Indiana in a moment.

Mr. TURPIE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. Since that estimate has been made and since this bill has been under consideration there have been added, according to every just estimate, $75,000,000 to our expenditure for troops alone. So upon any rational or reasonable calculation you must add $75,000,000 to $379,000,000, without including the extraordinary expenses which we all know are occurring from day to day. So there can be no reasonable difficulty about this matter. I now yield to the Senator from Indiana, if he wants to correct my statement.

Mr. TURPIE. I think the Senator is wrong in his statement of $379,000,000. Two hundred and seventy-nine million dollars was the estimate, and the rest of the amount which run up to $320,000,000—that was the limit—was made up by the contingencies, calculated at not less than 10 per cent on the expeditionary expenses, which means to Cuba and to other places.

Mr. ALLISON. I made these estimates with as much care as I could and stated them in the beginning of this debate. I fixed the amount at $379,000,000, giving the items, which, of course, included the $50,000,000 that was appropriated before the war began. That made $379,000,000. Now, we have added distinctly and without reserve $75,000,000 to that estimate. I submit to Senators that when the Committee on Finance reported the pending bill, including in it the estimate of the amount that would be raised from what are known as the amendments of the majority of the committee (that majority provided for $42,000,000 in one item and $150,000,000 in another), it was suggested that with all they put in the bill there would be $192,000,000 required in addition.

Since the bill was reported and since the debate commenced, if that was an approximate estimate, there must of necessity be added $75,000,000 to the $192,000,000, as shown by the majority. So, while we may add by committee amendments here and there $5,000,000 or $10,000,000, it is as plain to me as noonday that we must provide, under existing conditions and circumstances, either for an issue of noninterest-bearing notes to the extent of $250,000,000 or $300,000,000 or we must provide at least that sum, upon the basis of the estimates made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], in interest-bearing securities. I do not think it is a matter of great moment that we shall ascertain with mathematical accuracy the exact expenditures.

Mr. GRAY. You can not do it, anyhow.

Mr. ALLISON. And it is impossible to do it here in the Senate, because all the additions we have made and all the taxes we have imposed must undergo the crucible of debate or consideration in the other House, and must finally pass through its final stages by the action of a conference committee. Whether this amendment or that amendment shall be added, it is impossible for us to get rid of a very large amount of money that must be raised outside of taxation and by means of the methods proposed in the two last amendments to the bill. So I think the wiser and better course would be to proceed, as we have agreed to proceed by unanimous consent, with the bill as prepared by a majority of the committee and by the committee, act upon its amendments, and then go on with such other amendments as may be proposed by Senators.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, when I was interrupted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]—

Mr. ALLISON. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about saying that it makes no difference from my standpoint whether the actual expenses of the Government within the next year shall be $300,000,000 or $600,000,000; and I think the latter sum will be very much nearer the amount than the former. It is evident that there must be an additional sum to the amount raised by taxation provided for in the pending bill. The question is whether it shall be provided for as the majority of the committee suggest, by coining the seigniorage and the issue of United States notes, or as suggested by the minority, by the issue of certificates of indebtedness and the use of bonds. We fix no amount of bonds to be issued absolutely. They are to be issued only for a certain and definite purpose, and that is to pay the expenses of the war; and they are to be issued only as fast as they may be required for that purpose.

So it seems to me there is no good reason why we should undertake to consider these other items in the bill before we go on and consider the provisions in relation to bonds. I presume there is no man in the Senate who does not know at this instant how he is going to vote on these propositions. I assume that his vote will not be changed whether we shall add to or subtract from the amount of taxes which we have now in the bill, or whether the final result shall be an addition or subtraction of that amount. Those of us who will vote for bonds and certificates will vote for them without regard to the amount of taxes that are imposed by the bill, because we know that those provisions are necessary to supplement the amount of taxation that may be contained in the measure when it finally becomes a law.

Mr. ALLEN. Would the Senator vote for the issuance of bonds or certificates of indebtedness if we could raise the money by ordinary taxation?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is simply impossible to raise it by the method of ordinary taxation. I know that as well now, and the Senator from Nebraska knows it as well now, as twenty-four or forty-eight hours or a month from now.

Mr. ALLEN. But the Senator says we can raise $200,000,000 by taxation under the bill in its present form.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is my estimate, from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000.

Mr. ALLEN. If we can raise $150,000,000 more or $175,000,000 more by the coining of the seigniorage and the issuance of greenbacks, would the Senator still persist in issuing bonds?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the very question which is now before the Senate. It is whether we shall raise $175,000,000 in that way. That is the question which we ask the Senate to consider and decide upon now. I will agree with the Senator from Nebraska that if we should change the plan of the bill in the manner suggested by him and should coin the seigniorage and issue $150,000,000 of greenbacks, there would be less reason for the issue of certificates and bonds than there would be otherwise.

Mr. ALLEN. Is it good business policy to issue interest-bearing obligations when you can meet the indebtedness without doing so?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the question for the Senate to decide upon, which is next after—

Mr. ALLEN. Would that be good business policy for an individual or a private corporation, I ask the Senator?

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Nebraska should owe me, or rather, to put it in a more reasonable form, if I should owe him a thousand dollars, which he had a right to demand at any time, I should think it would be very unreasonable, very inequitable, and very dishonorable if I should go to him and say, "You must take my note without interest for the payment of that debt."

Mr. ALLEN. But suppose the Senator owed me a thousand dollars, and had the money in his pocket to pay, would it be good business policy for him to issue an interest-bearing note when he could pay cash?

Mr. ALDRICH. If I had the money, money which I did not propose to create by some act of mine; in other words, if I did not intend to force him to take my note. That is a different question. If the Government of the United States had the cash in its Treasury to pay all the expenses of this war, I assume we should not be discussing as to the ways of raising money for that purpose.

Mr. ALLEN. The Government has $305,000,000 cash in the Treasury now, and with the $200,000,000 that can be raised by taxation under the bill we would have $505,000,000 more than the estimated cost of the war.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, since my service in the Senate with the Senator from Nebraska, for whom I have the greatest respect, I have never been able to agree with him as to one single fact in regard to the Treasury of the United States and its condition and its need; and I believe if I should stay here a hundred years longer I should never be able to agree with him at all upon any of those questions.

Mr. ALLEN. The fact that the Senator has never agreed with me is very strong evidence to me that I am right. [Laughter.]

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I think even though we propose to raise all the money by taxation in this bill that we will spend during the next year, and even though it was agreed that $150,000,000 of greenbacks or Treasury notes should be issued, this Government would have to borrow money, either by certificates or by bonds, before the money could be provided by taxation or by the issue of Treasury notes. That is perfectly apparent.

The Senator from Nebraska says we have $202,000,000 in the Treasury. I suppose nobody would desire to trench upon what is called the reserve fund at this time, when it is so necessary to maintain the credit of the Government. That takes out $100,000,000 at once.

I apprehend that we have, at least, obligations which are already contracted to meet the other $100,000,000. More than that, they have got to be met, and they have got to be met in large sums immediately. We can not begin to receive money from the taxation provided in this bill to any extent in thirty days nor in sixty days. The stamps have got to be provided; there has got to be a time fixed when the bill shall go into operation, and that time has got to be somewhat in advance, and we are not going to receive money from the taxation in this bill certainly under thirty days and probably not under sixty days. If we issue greenbacks or Treasury notes, they can not be prepared and printed quickly enough to replenish the Treasury and enable the Government to make its payments already contracted for and which are to be contracted for.

I apprehend, Mr. President, no matter how much taxation we may have in this bill, no matter whether or not the bill may contain a provision for the coinage of the seigniorage and the issue of Treasury notes, this Government has got to borrow money or cease paying before there can be sufficient money coming into the Treasury from the operation of the bill to meet its obligations.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not believe that there is any warrant for the statement made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] that this bill will produce $200,000,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. I said from one hundred and fifty million to two hundred million dollars.

Mr. TELLER. Nor $150,000,000. That is a mere Yankee guess, and it is no better because the Senator comes from New England than would a guess made by me because I come from Colorado and guess the other way. It is a guess. That is what I complain of. We are guessing as to what the bill will produce; we are guessing as to what the war is to cost. If there is any doubt as to what the war is to cost, why do not the committee call the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of War before them, when in an hour they could find out whether the guess on this side is correct or the guess on the other side?

Mr. HALE. If the committee should call the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy before them every week for a month or two months, they would find the estimates of those heads of Departments varying every time, and varying in the direction of increased estimates. There is no power, there is no human ken, that can do much more than guess on this subject. If the Senator were at the head of the War Department and I were at the head of the Navy Department, any estimate we should make would not be much better than a guess, an approximation, an estimate, that would change in his mind and mine every week and every month, and always in one direction.

We all of us know that nobody anticipated, either here or in the executive branches, two months ago what the war would cost. It is not that men are not bright, not keen, not shrewd, and have not good judgment, but things proceed so fast and the circumstances are so vast and controlling that nobody can tell in advance.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, there is a great deal of force in what the Senator says. I admit that. I have not supposed that you could get at the exact amount that will be raised under this bill; but it seemed to me, and it seems to me now, that, with the aid of the Treasury Department and with the experience that we have had in making collections of this kind, we ought to be able to arrive at something more than a guess between $150,000,000 and $200,000,000. If I knew this bill would raise $250,000,000, or even $300,000,000, I should be very well content with it. But I am not content with it as it is. I do not believe it will raise enough.

I know, on the other hand, you can not tell what the war will cost, and I think there is great force in what has been said, that we always underestimate the cost in such cases. I have anticipated myself, when I have heard these estimates, that you will find coming in later a great many expenditures which nobody had calculated upon, which will not come in during the fiscal year, and the estimates made by the Department, I have no doubt, were ample for that time, but the aftermath is what will add to the cost. I do not myself know what the war will cost, but it seems to me that the Department ought to know about what it would cost to put 285,000 men in the field and keep them there six months or a year, and we are entitled to know something about that.

We can only learn these things through our committee. None of us feel at liberty to go and ask the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Treasury for such estimates. The courtesies and the relations between the Senate and the executive department require that we should do those things as a rule through our committees.

What I complained of was that we had but a guess—absolutely a guess. It may be that we will be just as well off with a guess, especially if the Senator from Rhode Island is correct, that no matter what the bill provides, no matter what the war costs, whether it be little or whether it be large, that there is to be a bond issue; if that is settled, and the Senator is sure of his votes, then there is no use of wasting a great deal of time over it, I suppose.

Mr. President, I am in favor in an emergency of issuing some of this paper money, which has done very well in the past. If Senators say that there is danger to our financial institutions by issuing $150,000,000 of greenbacks, that is a mere declaration, and there is not a single reason for it. We will have, as I demonstrated the other day, less per capita of paper money than we had in 1878, when it was the policy of the Government to stop contraction and to keep the greenbacks in circulation. We will have less paper money and we will have less demand upon the gold than we had then.

Mr. GEAR. It was at a discount at that time.

Mr. TELLER. It was at a discount before that time. Practically at the time we passed that act gold and paper money had got together.

Mr. GEAR. Oh, no.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; they had in 1878 practically got together, and the very fact that we stopped the contraction of paper money gave to the business of the country an impetus that helped to bring the two together. They were then very nearly together. That was long before the resumption act of January. Following that act, the paper money of this country was as good as gold, to all intents and purposes, and could be exchanged for gold.

I do not care about going over that question any further, except to say that I have not been particularly anxious to issue paper money; but if paper money is to be issued, I want it issued by the Government of the United States. I believe that will be safer and better than to issue it by the banks. I know that a bond issue means ultimately that the paper money of this country is to be issued by the national banks; and ultimately it means the retirement of every greenback and of every Treasury note afloat, and the only paper money will be the money which the corporations of the country will issue when they want to do so and retire it when they wish to do so, without any control by the Government. That they will do under this proposed system.

But I do not care to go into a debate of that question, and I did not rise to debate it. I rose simply in the hope that the committee would give us something satisfactory as to what this bill will produce. If the committee desire to go on in the way they are doing, I shall myself offer no obstruction. I am willing to stand by any agreement they have made as to these amendments when they shall come in and govern myself accordingly.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. When this bill was first taken up for consideration in the Senate the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], apparently representing the full committee, made a statement, which seemed to be made after fair consideration and proper inquiry of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy before the committee as to what the bill would probably yield and how much money ought to be raised. I am myself unable to see how the committee is going to come any nearer to the amount, except as developments have occurred since that time, by delay and having another investigation and summoning the heads of Departments before the committee and having a report. I should like to know, of course, as we all would, how much money we shall have to raise; but is it possible for us to come any nearer than a guess, if you please, as to the amount the bill will raise? And that has been already done.

Mr. TELLER. I have no desire to go over that question any further than I have done, and I have no desire to delay this bill; but it does not strike me as a proper way of doing business, though I may be mistaken. If I had this bill to deal with, I would sit down and figure out mathematically, if I could, what this bill is likely to produce. I would go over every item that is to be taxed, or I would have an estimate made on it by somebody, or I would make a guess on it myself. That is what we have not had, except in a general way. We are told that such a tax will produce seven or eight or ten or fifteen million dollars, and that something else will produce $45,000,000. The bill has been materially changed from what it was when it came into the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], on the 16th of May, made an itemized statement of what the bill would probably produce, and he estimated it at $215,063,069.

Mr. TELLER. That is as the bill then stood.

Mr. ALLEN. As the bill then stood.

Mr. ALDRICH. There has been no substantial change since.

Mr. TELLER. There have been very great changes made in this bill. The corporation tax certainly has been stricken out of this bill and something else substituted in its place. Nobody knows what the bill will produce, and I can not guess at it myself.

Mr. ALDRICH. The estimates made by the acting chairman of the committee as to the corporation tax were stated separately from the estimates of what the other taxes would produce. The estimate made by the Senator from Iowa was that, exclusive of the corporation tax, the bill would produce $151,000,000.

There have been no changes of any consequence in the bill as it then was reported from the committee, except in a few instances to increase taxes, but there have been no changes which would decrease the amount at all. The Senator from Iowa did exactly what the Senator from Colorado says he would have done under the circumstances. He took these items up one by one, he gave his own ideas upon them, and his judgment was assisted by the best experts he could call to his counsel as to what this bill would produce in each of its items. No man could have done anything more than that. The Senator from Colorado, with all his ability, could not have done any better, and he would not have done any differently. The committee have given the Senate and the country their best judgment as to what this bill will produce.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I think I should have done differently. I have had some experience in this body, and I assert here that this is the first time that a revenue bill of this kind has ever been presented to the Senate when we did not have some definite information regarding it. I think I may say that it is the first time in the history of a revenue bill that we did not have an estimate from the revenue department as to what the bill would probably produce. We have not got it, and it is not proposed to give it to us; and, in my judgment, Mr. President, one great reason is that certain people want to lay the foundation for the issue of a great amount of bonds, and they would rather that we should be in the dark when they propose to issue a large amount of bonds, which far exceeds any estimate of the expenditures which will occur within the next fiscal year. They would rather we should not know. I know I am not likely to get information, that the Senate is not likely to get information, and the country is not likely to get any, because the bill is in the control of those who do not propose to give the information to us, and therefore I do not propose to interfere any further with the transaction.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to put a question to the Senator from Colorado before he takes his seat. I wish to ask him if it has not occurred to him that the reason why the committee have not taken the pains to inform the Senate as to the amount of revenue to be raised from these different items of taxation, or probably can be raised from these items, is the fact that they know that they have the power, and they intend to execute it, of raising this money by interest-bearing bonds and Treasury notes, and that we had just as well come to that point at once as to be beating about the bush or trying to fight?

Mr. TELLER. I have reached that point.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, it had not been my purpose to make a speech on this subject, and I want to say only a word or two now. I have, from circumstances beyond my control, been able to give very little attention to the consideration of the bill, or not as much as I usually devote to such bills.

We all know that the revenue derived from the duties on imports are always greatly diminished by war. Here we have a bill which does not touch duties on imports, but is confined entirely to internal revenue. In addition to what is to be estimated as the amount which will accrue from internal-revenue taxes, we have to estimate the loss which will be sure to follow upon the amount of our duties on imports in consequence of war.

The proposition comes to us from the Populist side of the Senate to issue greenbacks and to coin the seigniorage, and that has been suggested by some other Senators, even by some of our own naughty boys. We are, therefore, in the condition of Dame Partington, who had a naughty boy, who had ascertained that he could show his impudence and sauce when he was in company without receiving any reprimand or talking back by his mother, and so here Republicans have had to endure some impudence and some sauce, and the Republicans have not been willing to talk back any more than Dame Partington was inclined to do when she and her boy were in company. [Laughter.] We have not been willing to talk back because, if we should do so, it would retard the progress of the bill.

Mr. President, of course the proposition here to coin the seigniorage and to issue greenbacks is not a very timely proposition to be considered in the face of our exigency now requiring further recruits for the Army. I do not think it will promote the rapid increase of volunteering by proposing to coin the silver seigniorage into dollars worth less than 44 cents, and then use them to pay our soldiers and sailors.

I have never voted against any proposition that was a fair one in relation to bimetallicism, but we all know very well that if bimetallicism is ever to occur in this country it will be brought about by a different ratio than that of 16 to 1. Therefore, any dollars that we now have which are coined on that ratio, or that may be hereafter coined on that ratio, will have to be melted up as so much bullion, and the loss will be sustained by our country. We have already bought silver to the extent of losing something like $300,000,000 by its purchase. We now have $100,000,000 in silver bullion, and by the proposition of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] it is proposed to have that coined at the rate of $4,000,000 per month. It would take, therefore, over two years to have it coined, and I trust that long before that time we shall have closed this war, and certainly that coinage would be of little use, even if part of it were to be paid out before this war shall have been closed.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope, in recruiting the additional 75,000 troops we want and to prevent a future loss of what we shall have to make up in any future bimetallic proposition that may be agreed to by our people and by other nations, that we shall do nothing which will injuriously affect our credit at home or abroad.

I know that we have some here who think that by the free coinage of silver by the United States alone they are going to make it worth par, or they say so, but they are parties who probably might be able to squeeze champagne out of an apple. So far as increase of value is concerned, the idea of squeezing any value here into silver by its free coinage is as impossible as Dean Swift said it was to squeeze wind out of a dead ass.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, if the chairman of the Finance Committee is to deliver a speech on the free coinage of silver, that is an invitation to everybody to take a hand, and everybody ought to take a hand in the discussion of it. If he is going to tell us that we must discard silver because we shall lose money if we do not; if he is going to tell us that money is a mere commodity and that law has nothing to do with it; if he is going to tell us all that kind of nonsense, that we can not use silver or paper as money; if he is going to controvert the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States that law makes money, that opens up a large field here, and you will start a discussion that will last a month or two.

I do not like to hear men talk in the Senate of the United States about the commodity of money, saying that they have not learned that law creates money, and that they do not seem to be able to learn it even when the Supreme Court has so decided over and over again. Silver is just as good as any other money, and paper is just as good as any other money when you issue it under the authority of law. You use the metal for the purpose of having stability; but when you talk about the parity between two metals without talking about the parity between money and commerce and property, it is foolish.

I merely wish to say a word or two in regard to the matter which has been discussed as to the amount of money to be raised by this bill. I think my friend from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] was unreasonable to ask anybody to make an estimate upon the probable outcome from taxation without knowing what will be the volume of money. This is a tax on business, and the revenue to be derived from it will be larger or smaller, depending upon the condition of business. If there is no money upon which to do business, your receipts will be very small; and if there is plenty of money, they will be large. Consequently, before you can form an estimate within gunshot, you must have some idea of what the condition of business is to be. If you put out bonds, you furnish an investment for money, and the money will be put in the bonds, and the result will be that there will be contraction of money and very little business.

The majority of the committee say we will put out of new money $42,000,000 of silver and $150,000,000 of greenbacks and we will put on taxation. They offer more revenue from taxation than the minority. The minority say, "Very well, we will put out $300,000,000 of bonds, so as to get the money." I undertake to say, from the experience of the past, that the $192,000,000 of new money proposed by the majority of the committee, with the taxes which are imposed, will produce more money in the next year than will the $300,000,000 of bonds and more than even $500,000,000 of bonds. That is shown to be true by the history of the past, but I shall not go into that at this time, as it has nothing to do with the pending question.

The issuance of bonds will make business stagnant, for money will be withdrawn from the channels of business and invested in bonds. No matter how you put out bonds, they will absorb the money of the country. You are now carrying on extensive operations all over the world, which will require more money, in the Philippine Islands, in Hawaii, in Cuba, and in Puerto Rico. You are expanding your expenditures without any expansion of your money, and you are furnishing bonds in which idle money can be invested. Can you expect, therefore, that you will have active business to tax?

I venture to say that the report of the majority of the committee will provide more money in the next year than the report of the minority. With greenbacks and silver taxation it will produce more ready money in the year, and at the close we shall be free from debt. As I have said, if you take a period of two years the majority report will produce more money than will $500,000,000 of bonds, and it will leave the country out of debt and in prosperity. There is no doubt about that.

We understand what bonds are for. They are not to carry on the war. Everybody knows they are not needed for that purpose. They are for the purpose of carrying on the banks, for the purpose of changing the control of the finances of this country and the issuance of money from the Government to the banks. This is a part of the gold scheme. If the purpose is to raise revenue we have the ordinary ways of raising it.

How did we raise revenues in extraordinary emergencies previous to the last war? It was by issuing Treasury notes, drawing interest, running one year, which were payable for Government dues and payable for taxes, and they were paid in right along. We paid as we went along. That answered in the war of 1812 and the Mexican war. During the war of the rebellion we followed the same policy. Then we issued greenbacks. After that followed the bonds. There was no large bonded indebtedness on long term created during the war. The committee have proposed to follow the system that was followed in the last war by Mr. Lincoln. They have taken Lincoln's policy, and if that is voted down, I will offer the policy inaugurated by Mr. Madison and followed until 1862.

First, we will vote on Lincoln's policy. Then we will vote on the policy of Madison, of Monroe, of Jackson, of Van Buren, of Polk, and of Buchanan. During all those Administrations this was adopted. When we vote on the committee's proposition, we are voting on Lincoln's proposition. If you repudiate that, if you vote down greenbacks, you vote down Lincoln's policy. Then I am going to propose Madison's policy, which lasted for seventy years or more. I suppose you will vote that down and will vote in the policy of Wall street and Lombard street, the policy of bonds and gold, the new policy. That is what I expect you will vote in, but you will have a chance to vote on each one of these schemes before you get to that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, what is the pending question? The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question, the Chair understands, is, on page 70, to strike out sections 27 and 28 and insert the amendment proposed on behalf of the minority of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the exact question which was pending when this part of the bill was last before the Senate was the motion made by myself to strike out the provisions offered by the majority of the committee and insert those offered by the minority of the committee. That was the motion I made; and I understand that that is the motion now pending.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President—

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado that we find out whether that is the exact status of the case. My recollection is that the provisions of the majority of the committee were read and that I then made a motion to substitute the minority provisions for the majority provisions, and that, pending the determination of that question, the Senate adjourned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the exact statement which the Chair thought it made.

Mr. ALDRICH. All right; then I am content.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I believe a motion to perfect would be acted upon prior to a motion to strike out; and if that be the rule, I desire to call up the amendment which I offered looking to the coinage of the silver bullion in the Treasury of the United States at a minimum of $4,000,000 a month, and issue upon that bullion, as coined, certificates to the extent of the bullion in the Treasury against which certificates have not been issued; and I ask to do that. I call up the amendment and ask that it be reported.

Mr. CULLOM. What do you propose?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The amendment shows. It amends the seigniorage provision.

Mr. ALDRICH. As I understand it, my motion being in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the committee, before the motion to strike out is acted upon it is in order to perfect the original amendment. I understand the Senator from Colorado desires to perfect the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I very much prefer to do that, if the Senate is willing.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator has a right to do that.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is so much confusion in the Chamber that I do not understand what conclusion was reached or proposed just now. I understand the bond proposition, amendment 182, headed "Loans," is now to be disposed of by the Senate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It was stated by the Senator from Rhode Island, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas, that the motion made prior to adjournment—the Senator from Rhode Island made it—contemplated substituting the report of the minority of the committee for the report of the majority of the committee upon these amendments, whereupon a motion to perfect would be in order.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Which amendments?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Amendment 182 of the old bill, not the reprint.

Mr. ALDRICH. My motion was to strike out on page 71—

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Which print of the bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. The print which has just been furnished us.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The new print?

Mr. ALDRICH. The new print, commencing with the words "coinage of silver seigniorage," down to and including line 8, on page 73.

Mr. VEST. That includes all.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Do you propose to pass over "loans?"

Mr. ALDRICH. No; it includes everything.

Mr. VEST. All of our amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It seems to me the vote comes first on the proposition to strike out, on page 70, section 27.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; that is the committee amendment, and I propose to amend the committee amendment by striking out and inserting the minority report.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Which is printed at the end of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Which is printed at the end of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Why not get through with all the amendments to the bill before taking up the question of the coinage of seigniorage and loans?

Mr. ALDRICH. All the other amendments have been disposed of. This is the only committee amendment undisposed of.

Mr. ALLEN. I am talking about individual amendments. Suppose some of the amendments offered by different Senators are adopted. It would make a very great difference in the revenue to be raised by the bill and will have much to do in determining whether we shall vote for a loan or not. Now, why not wait right here before taking up the bond issue and perfect the taxing features of the bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the point which was under discussion this morning, and I think everybody agreed except the Senator from Nebraska—

Mr. ALLEN. I participated in the discussion and did not hear that point raised.

Mr. ALDRICH. It was raised by Senators, and we are proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement to dispose of the committee amendments first.

Mr. ALLEN. Does not the Senator see any propriety in my suggestion?

Mr. ALDRICH. I fail to see any propriety in it.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well; I see it myself.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The pending committee amendment is to strike out section 27, if I understand it correctly.

Mr. ALDRICH. To strike out sections 27 and 28 and to insert certain provisions, and I move to amend the amendment by substituting in place of it the amendment reported by the minority of the committee, and that is the pending question. Now, the Senator from Colorado desires to perfect the amendment reported by the majority of the committee by changing the phraseology, and I think he is in order.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Colorado desires to do that, you say?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Colorado desires to do that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to offer the amendment which I propose for the coinage of the seigniorage, and ask to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Under the head of "Coinage of silver seigniorage," on page 74, line 17, of the print of May 13, the old print—

Mr. FRYE. Page 71 of the new print.

Mr. MILLS. I hope we can have order, so as to know what is going on.

The SECRETARY. Under the heading "Coinage of silver seigniorage," after the word "dollars," insert "to an amount of not less than $4,000,000 per month."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Where will the amendment be inserted in the new print of the bill?

Mr. MILLS. At what line?

Mr. FAULKNER. I suggest that, as we have the new print, these amendments ought all to be proposed to it, so that we can trace the connection of the amendment with what has already taken place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair makes that suggestion to the Senator from Colorado.

The SECRETARY. The amendment comes in on page 71 of the new print, line 24, after the word "dollars."

Mr. MILLS. I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado what is the object he has in view in limiting the coinage? Why not coin all the silver and let the Government take the money and purchase army supplies?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The reason is that possibly the Secretary of the Treasury would view with some difference an order which required him to coin the seigniorage generally at once and a specific law of Congress requiring him to coin at a minimum $4,000,000 a month. On the appropriation bills we can make the proper appropriations for the coinage of the seigniorage, and if we designate a minimum of $4,000,000 a month (we know that the capacity of the mints is nearly $5,000,000 a month), we are certain to get that much out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is, in line 24, page 71 of the new print, to insert the words "to an amount of not less than $4,000,000 a month."

Mr. ALLEN. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 71 of the new print, beginning with line 21, under the head of "Coinage of silver seigniorage," it is proposed, after the word "dollars," to insert "to an amount of not less than $4,000,000 per month."

On page 72, line 1, after the word "law," insert the word "all."

On page 72, line 2, after the word "Treasury," strike out the remainder of the section; so that the section will read:

SAC. — That the Secretary of the Treasury shall immediately cause to be coined, as fast and as soon as possible, into standard silver dollars, to an amount of not less than $4,000,000 per month, which shall be of like weight and fineness, and of like legal-tender quality, as those provided for under existing law, all the silver bullion now held in the Treasury.

Mr. ALLEN. That is to be substituted for what?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Secretary has just read what it is to be substituted for.

Mr. ALLEN. I know; but the coinage of the seigniorage has not been—

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska is making an inquiry.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I thought the Senator from Nebraska was through.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Arkansas can proceed.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I would very much prefer the proposition of the Senator from Colorado to no legislation on this subject, but I would prefer the proposition of the committee to the Senator's proposition. I do not want to vote against the proposition except in defense of the provision as it stands in the bill. For the purpose of bringing this question squarely before the Senate, I ask him to make his motion in this way: First, move to strike out this part of the bill, giving notice that he intends to move to insert, if his motion carries, the substitute for it as it was read at the desk. I will in that case vote against striking this out, but if a majority of the Senate strikes it out, then I will vote for the proposition of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think we both want to reach the same end; that is, to get the seigniorage out of the Treasury and into circulation. There are a number of Senators on this side of the Chamber who want that seigniorage out. They are anxious, however, that instead of issuing at once forty-two millions of paper money, of certificates, while the bullion is still uncoined, we shall coin it as rapidly as possible and issue the certificates upon it as soon as coined, and at the rate of $4,000,000 a month it gets it out in ten months. We get it out as speedily as it could otherwise be got out.

There is a further reason for the amendment to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas. Under existing law we have a provision that certificates shall be issued against all the silver bullion purchased, not counting the gain, or seigniorage; that the bullion shall be coined as rapidly as may be necessary for the purpose of redeeming the silver certificates when redemption is called for. Now, if we exhaust the capacity of the mints for a time to come, we apparently ignore or inferentially repeal, certainly postpone, that provision of law which calls upon the Secretary of the Treasury to coin this bullion as redemption may be demanded.

Therefore, if we can have it all coined with the saving provision at the end of the section that the dollars as coined shall stand as well for the redemption of these certificates as for the certificates heretofore issued under the act of 1890, we avoid any possible legal complication. I do hope that the Senator from Arkansas will yield, to the extent of the immediate issuance of these certificates, to this suggestion, in order that those who want that silver coined into dollars and put in circulation may vote together, because there are some members of the Senate, I think, possibly, who would not care to vote for the coinage of the seigniorage if the certificates are to be immediately issued, who are anxious to have it out of the way and will vote for it if there is a postponement; and there are others, and to this I invite especially the attention of the Senator from Arkansas, who are so anxious for the coinage of this seigniorage that they want it out anyway, but they do desire if possible to have this safeguard about it, and they desire as well to secure as strong a vote as possible from those members of the Senate in each and all political parties who want to dispose of this bullion forever.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to my colleague that the latter part of the amendment, I think, needs some modification. The amendment says:

That all said moneys so coined, including the amounts of the gains or seigniorage so coined, shall be held, both for the redemption of the Treasury notes heretofore issued under and by virtue of the act of July 14, 1890, and for the redemption of the certificates issued under this act.

I am afraid in that case the Secretary would hold all the money. He would only hold for the redemption of the Treasury notes so much as may be required, say $102,000,000—

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not understand that the word "held" means "to retain."

Mr. TELLER. That is what I am afraid it will be construed to mean.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Not for a moment. The only meaning is to be held liable.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that it be changed to "used."

Mr. WOLCOTT. "Shall be used." That is just as well as "held." That was the meaning in which the word "held" was used.

Mr. TELLER. I understand it was, but I am afraid they would keep it in the Treasury and not issue any of these dollars, if they could help it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In line 13, page 2, of the amendment, by unanimous consent, change the word "held" to "used;" so as to read "used, both for the redemption, etc."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think it would be satisfactory to Senators on this side of the Chamber to agree that the amendments of the Senator from Colorado shall be adopted, but we prefer the present provision. We would much prefer to have the present arrangement, and we give notice that when we get into the Senate we will offer to substitute the present measure. However, we agree that it shall go into the bill now.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am obliged to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado that, on the second page of his amendment as printed, after the words "gains or seigniorage," there should be inserted "hereafter accruing." As the Senator has it here it might be held to cover the gain or seigniorage which has already been covered into the Treasury. Nineteen million dollars of gain or seigniorage has been covered into the Treasury and certificates issued against it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island? I think it has value.

Mr. ALDRICH. To say, in line 8, "the amounts of the gains or seigniorage hereafter accruing."

Mr. WOLCOTT. "Gains or seigniorage hereafter accruing."

Mr. ALLISON. It means that now.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I suppose so.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to make it perfectly clear. We do not want to take any chance of covering the seigniorage already turned in.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Nobody does.

Mr. BACON. I ask the Senator to state what the change was? We can not hear on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In line 13, page 2, it is proposed to say "gains or seigniorage hereafter accruing," so that it shall not cover the gain or seigniorage which has been already turned into the Treasury of the United States. The words mean the same thing now.

Mr. ALDRICH. In order that this matter may go on in as simple a way as possible and that we may get a direct vote upon the proposition of the Senator from Colorado, I withdraw my amendment, or modify it so that it shall only apply to that portion of this amendment after line 16, on page 72. I propose to substitute the minority for the majority provision, or that part of the majority report, and let a separate vote be taken at once upon the question of the seigniorage.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Why does not the Senator, as his proposed amendment relates to the issue of bonds, substitute it for the proposition to strike out sections 27 and 28?

Mr. ALDRICH. Because I prefer to do it in this way, and I want a vote upon the minority provision instead of the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. CHILTON. In other words, your proposition now comes up squarely between issuing bonds and issuing United States notes?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I did not so understand it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think this is the simpler way of getting at it. I will allow a vote to be taken upon the provision in regard to the seigniorage as modified by the Senator from Colorado.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment as now modified and proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

The SECRETARY. On page 71, beginning with line 23, it will read as follows:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall immediately cause to be coined, as fast and as soon as possible, into standard silver dollars, to an amount of not less than $4,000,000 per month, which shall be of like weight and fineness and of like legal-tender quality as those provided for under existing law, all the silver bullion now held in the Treasury.

Then strike out, on page 73 of the new print, lines 9 to 16, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue, as said silver is coined, silver certificates of similar design and denominations and of the same quality, payable and redeemable in like manner as those authorized by law, to the amount of the gain or seigniorage derived from the purchase of silver bullion by the Treasury under the act of July 14, 1890.

That all said moneys so coined, including the amounts of the gains or seigniorage so coined, shall be used, both for the redemption of the Treasury notes heretofore issued under and by virtue of the act of July 14, 1890, and for the redemption of the certificates issued under this act.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Secretary has not read the amendment I suggested in line 9, before the word "derived" to insert the words "hereafter accruing."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; and not in line 13. It was a mistake. It should be in line 9.

Mr. ALDRICH. In line 9, before the word "derived."

The SECRETARY. After the word "seigniorage," at the end of line 8, it is proposed to insert "hereafter accruing."

Mr. WOLCOTT. That leaves line 13 as printed.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is right.

Mr. STEWART. The whole of it is to be coined and silver certificates only issued for that part which is seigniorage.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; because silver certificates have already been issued on the rest of it.

Mr. STEWART. It will take two years or more to coin it all at the rate of four millions a month.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; but only about nine months to coin the seigniorage.

Mr. STEWART. Do you issue certificates for the seigniorage?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Immediately.

Mr. STEWART. The full amount of the coinage is made available for certificates?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Immediately.

Mr. STEWART. We will get that much.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Immediately. Certificates for the forty-two millions will be issued at once.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to have explained the significance of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is not up.

Mr. ALLEN. It is up now.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I did not so understand.

Mr. ALLEN. The amendment reads, "the amounts of the gains or seigniorage hereafter accruing." What is meant by the words "hereafter accruing?" I am addressing myself to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. There has been about $19,000,000, in round numbers, of gain or seigniorage already covered in the Treasury, for which silver certificates have been issued. The amendment is to make it clear. I desire, as the Senator from Colorado and all other Senators desire, that the silver certificates hereafter issued shall be against only the forty-two millions of seigniorage which will accrue when the silver in the Treasury is coined.

Mr. ALLEN. The amendment does not express that. The amendment expresses the thought that silver certificates are to be issued against the seigniorage hereafter accruing.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is what we all understand.

Mr. ALLEN. No; we have that seigniorage on hand—$42,000,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. Gain or seigniorage does not accrue until the silver is coined.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, well, I do not take that view. That very provision nullifies the whole amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, no, if the Senator from Nebraska will allow me. We have already had a lot of profit which has been turned in.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No seigniorage accrues until the bullion is turned into dollars and a certain number of ounces are left. This provision requires the Secretary of the Treasury to coin that, but does not affect that already turned into the Treasury.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not accept that interpretation as being correct. Whenever the silver was purchased the difference between the purchase price and the coin value of the silver, if it had been coined, was seigniorage, and it became seigniorage at that time. That is all there is about it, and to insert the words "hereafter accruing" is simply to nullify this portion of the amendment. If we had a Secretary of the Treasury who was anxious to carry out a provision of law on the subject of the coinage of silver, I would have no particular objection to the form of this amendment, but the amendment, if adopted, is capable of the construction I have placed on it, and it simply operates to destroy itself in the hands of a very smart and acute Secretary of the Treasury. There is another portion of the proposed amendment, if I can have the attention of the Senator from Colorado for a moment—

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask the attention of the Secretary. Let the words "hereafter accruing," which have been inserted, be stricken out, and add after the word "ninety," in line 11, a comma and the words "until the sum of $42,000,000 shall have been issued."

Mr. ALLEN. Is that the amount?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes, sir; that is the amount.

Mr. ALLEN. There is another fact to which I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado. This amendment provides "that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue, as said silver is coined, silver certificates," etc.

That is merely permissive. It is not mandatory nor obligatory upon the Secretary of the Treasury. I ask the Senator from Colorado to accept this proposed amendment: after the word "authorized," in line 5, on page 2 of the amendment, insert the words "and directed;" so that there may be no escape from carrying out the provision of the amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. All right. That is perfectly acceptable to me. As I share the Senator's confidence in the Secretary, I am willing to have the words "and directed" inserted in the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. A law that is made so that a man must carry it out puts an end to all doubt. It is the latitudinarian constructionist who nullifies a law.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to have a statement now of the exact condition of the question before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Colorado is attempting to perfect the text of the amendment of the committee, so that it will read as the Secretary will now read.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; let the Secretary read it as it is now.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the committee amendment beginning on line 9, page 73, of the new print of the bill, and to insert in lieu the following, as modified:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to issue, as said silver is coined, silver certificates of similar design and denominations and of the same quality, payable and redeemable in like manner as those authorized by law, to the amount of the gain or seigniorage derived from the purchases of silver bullion by the Treasury under the act of July 14, 1890, until the sum of $42,000,000 shall have been issued. That all said moneys so coined, including the amounts of the gains or seigniorage so coined, shall be used both for the redemption of the Treasury notes heretofore issued under and by virtue of the act of July 14, 1890, and for the redemption of the certificates issued under this act.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask for a vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to one feature of this proposed amendment, with which amendment, I want to say, I am in sympathy. As modified according to the suggestion of the senior Senator from Colorado, its last clause, as I understand it, would now read that all said moneys so coined shall be for two purposes—that is, for the redemption of Treasury notes and silver certificates. What I want to ask is whether the expression of those two uses may not be construed as excluding all others?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will say to the Senator from Utah that there are no other purposes for which these silver dollars can be issued. They are held in the Treasury, those now coined, for exchange for the certificates issued against them under the law of 1890. The new coinage will be held as against the certificates issued; the certificates issued will be held as against the coinage of the $42,000,000. This simply provides that all of it shall now be held for either or both purposes. If the redemption of certificates is called for, they would use these dollars indifferently for the redemption of certificates issued under the law of 1890 or for the redemption of certificates issued under this act.

Mr. RAWLINS. There is one other question as to the practice of the Treasury Department with which I am not entirely familiar. Suppose a silver certificate issued as directed in this amendment is presented to the Treasury, it may be redeemed in silver dollars?

Mr. WOLCOTT. In silver dollars.

Mr. RAWLINS. Would that certificate then be subject to reissue?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Not while the silver dollar is out.

Mr. RAWLINS. Not while the silver dollar is out?

Mr. WOLCOTT. One takes the place of the other.

Mr. RAWLINS. It might be returned and a silver certificate obtained for it?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Certainly, and reissued; but both dollars and certificates can not be out as against the same silver.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Arkansas just what course is proposed. I would prefer this proposition to nothing, but in voting for it I do not wish to have a record made that I am antagonizing the report of the committee, which I much prefer. I should like to have the Senator from Arkansas explain just how he proposes to give us an opportunity to express our views on both propositions.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Nevada has expressed my idea very clearly. I would very much prefer the committee's proposition—the proposition now in the bill—but I would very much prefer to have the proposition of the Senator from Colorado to having no legislation at all upon this subject. To avoid a conflict between the two I shall now vote to insert the proposition of the Senator from Colorado in the bill, with notice distinct to him and to the Senate that when we get the bill in the Senate we shall move to strike out this proposition and substitute what is now in the bill as the committee's proposition. If we lose that, then we shall save what the Senator from Colorado proposes. This is the purpose exactly in the course I propose to pursue.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It seems to me the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado accomplishes but very little. There can be no seigniorage only so fast as the dollars are coined, and then the seigniorage will be the difference between the cost of the bullion and the dollars issued. Under this provision it will take about two years to coin the bullion in the Treasury. Therefore during the first year but very little seigniorage will be secured, perhaps twelve or fifteen million dollars, by the time we have issued 42,000,000 silver dollars. So we are not really getting the benefit of this seigniorage within nine months or a year, as has been stated, but we shall only get the benefit of the whole of it when all the bullion is coined, which will take two years' time.

I am going to vote for the provision—I do not care what shape it is in—not because I like it, but because I think I shall have a chance to vote for a better proposition—the committee's provision—when the bill comes into the Senate, and if we should defeat this now, we would have nothing to act upon then. I suppose we could offer the committee's proposition, even if this amendment were defeated. I consider this provision, however, of but very little consequence.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to say only a word. I think the Senator from South Dakota is mistaken as to the position occupied by the amendment of the Senator from Colorado. These certificates are issued as the silver is coined, so that $4,000,000 a month of the certificates would go out.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator this question: At the same time, under the law, are they not required to retire them and Treasury notes now out against the bullion?

Mr. ALLISON. No; because the modification here which the Senator proposes is that this silver shall be held for the redemption of both the Treasury notes and the certificates.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Does the Senator undertake to say that we shall have out silver certificates against the silver dollars coined and also Treasury notes out against the bullion out of which they are coined? Is that the proposition?

Mr. ALLISON. Hardly that. It would not be my proposition. The bullion is in the Treasury, and these dollars are held as well as the bullion against the Treasury notes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Previously, when we bought the bullion, we issued Treasury notes against it. When we coined the bullion, we issued silver certificates against the dollar. Therefore there is nothing left with which to redeem the Treasury notes. If I am wrong about that, I should be glad to know it. The consequence is we are obliged to redeem those notes. The law requires their redemption.

Mr. ALLISON. The law of 1890, if that be the law, provides that the bullion in the Treasury shall be held for the redemption of the Treasury notes, and that there shall be from time to time bullion coined to redeem the Treasury notes outstanding. The result of that proposition has been, when silver bullion has been coined, to redeem Treasury notes, and the surplus, or seigniorage, has gone into the Treasury. So now there is bullion enough to make dollars sufficient to redeem the Treasury notes, and 42,000,000 coin dollars in addition.

The Senator from Colorado proposes that all the bullion shall be coined at the rate of $4,000,000 per month until it is all coined. Then he provides that until $42,000,000 is reached certificates may be issued against the bullion coined, and that those certificates shall be held for the redemption of the certificates outstanding as well as the Treasury notes outstanding. There is still back, however, all the time a sufficient amount of bullion which when coined will redeem all the Treasury notes and all the certificates, when this process is completed. So I do not think the amendment is subject to the criticism made by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am not yet clear in regard to it. Of course when we coin these dollars, $4,000,000 for instance, there is at once an excess of Treasury notes out.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, no.

Mr. WOLCOTT. How?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Suppose we should coin all the bullion and issue dollars against it, would not the Treasury notes be retired? Do they not have to be retired as fast as you coin?

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all.

Mr. PETTIGREW. They are issued against the bullion.

Mr. ALLISON. The Secretary can now coin all this silver bullion if he wants to do so.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I understand that.

Mr. ALLISON. And when he coins it, he will have ninety million or over of Treasury notes to redeem. Then they are all redeemed. Then he still has bullion to coin in excess to meet the certificates proposed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Does he not redeem them as fast as he coins? Has not that been the practice? Does the Senator pretend to say that we have as many Treasury notes now as we had when we bought the bullion?

Mr. ALLISON. If I did say so, I said what I know not to be the fact.

Mr. PETTIGREW. We have retired—

Mr. ALLISON. We have retired a large amount of Treasury notes. It has been the custom of the Treasury, under all Administrations, to have an excess of coin money, $10,000,000 or $15,000,000—I believe it is now between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000, over and above the bullion—in order to redeem currently such Treasury notes as come in, and we have redeemed about $50,000,000 of these notes.

Mr. TELLER. Fifty-three million dollars.

Mr. ALLISON. Fifty-three million dollars.

Mr. COCKRELL. Nineteen million six hundred and forty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. ALLISON. Here are two doctors disagreeing.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the seigniorage. We have redeemed $53,536,000 up to the 13th day of May.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. The Senator from Missouri is always accurate, and he has the figures there. We have redeemed those notes from the bullion coined.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the seigniorage.

Mr. ALLISON. And the seigniorage arising from that coinage has gone into the Treasury, and silver certificates have been issued for it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Over $19,000,000 of seigniorage.

Mr. ALLISON. We have still a large amount of bullion in the Treasury. When we have coined it all we can redeem all the Treasury notes with it, and redeem all the certificates proposed by the Senator from Colorado besides. The Senator from Colorado proposes to so modify the law of 1890 that the Treasury may issue certificates against the $42,000,000 as it is coined, and hold those dollars for the redemption of the certificates, as well as for the redemption of the Treasury notes. That will never happen, because the Secretary of the Treasury who wants to redeem Treasury notes will always be sure to have enough coin in addition to the $42,000,000 to meet the demands of the Treasury notes as well. So, whilst there may be a little circumlocution about it, it is perfectly apparent that it can be accomplished.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It seems to me that the situation is about this: When we have coined $42,000,000 we will have retired whatever number of Treasury notes the bullion cost, out of which the dollars are made—

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all.

Mr. PETTIGREW. And the increase in currency will be the difference between the cost of the bullion and the dollars that are made out of it, and that is the seigniorage.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I do not want to delay the vote, but the last paragraph of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, it seems to me, ought to be made plainer than it is.

That all said moneys so coined, including the amount of the gains or seigniorage so coined, shall be used both for the redemption of the Treasury notes heretofore issued under and by virtue of the act of July 14, 1890, and for the redemption of the certificates issued under this act.

It was claimed, if not officially, at least semi-officially, during the Cleveland Administration that every ounce of silver in the Treasury under the act of 1890, including the seigniorage, was by that act mortgaged for the redemption of the notes then in existence. It has been claimed ever since. I do not know that I make myself exactly plain. It was claimed, for instance, that if we had 200,000,000 ounces of silver and had issued but $100,000,000 of certificates, the whole 200,000,000 ounces of silver were pledged as a mortgage to the redemption of the $100,000,000 of certificates.

Mr. President, I do not believe any honest man can make that claim; but, nevertheless, if that is to be claimed hereafter, what is to prevent the Secretary of the Treasury, under the paragraph which I have just read, from saying that that is the true interpretation of the law and holding that a portion of these certificates shall be redeemed in gold, and thus create disturbance in the policy the Senator from Colorado now seeks to establish? Are there not some words that can be inserted in this provision putting an end to that possible construction?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think it is perfectly clear.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendments offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the committee amendment. Is there objection to those amendments? The Chair hears none. The yeas and nays are called on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as modified.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea" upon this proposition. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. ALLEN (when Mr. TURNER's name was called). The junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] is paired with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If the junior Senator from Washington were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], and on the announcement made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] that he would vote "yea" if here, I shall take the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PASCO (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON], who I observe is not in the Chamber. I have arranged with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that we transfer our pairs so that the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] will be paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], and we will each let our votes stand. We have both voted.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. ELKINS] is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay" on this amendment and the Senator from Washington would vote "yea."

Mr. BACON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. CLAY] is temporarily absent from the Chamber. If he were present, he would vote "yea." He stands paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] by a transfer effected between the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. MASON. I desire to announce my pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN]. If he were present, I am informed he would vote "yea." I would vote "nay." I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BUTLER (after having voted in the affirmative). I suggest to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] that we transfer our pairs so that we may vote. I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON].

Mr. MASON. I should be very glad to do so.

Mr. BUTLER. I have already voted "yea," and the Senator from Illinois is at liberty to vote.

Mr. MASON. Then, with that transfer, I shall vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—48.

Allen,	Faulkner,	Mantle,	Boach,
Bacon,	Gray,	Martin,	Shoup,
Bate,	Hansbrough,	Mills,	Stewart,
Berry,	Harris,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Butler,	Heitfeld,	Money,	Thurston,
Cannon,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,	Tillman,
Carter,	Jones, Nev.	Pasco,	Turley,
Chandler,	Kyle,	Perkins,	Turpie,
Chilton,	Lindsay,	Pettigrew,	Vest,
Clark,	McEnery,	Pettus,	Warren,
Cockrell,	McLaurin,	Pritchard,	White,
Daniel,	Mallory,	Rawlins,	Wolcott.

NAYS—31.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Hawley,	Nelson,
Allison,	Foraker,	Hoar,	Platt, Conn.
Baker,	Frye,	Lodge,	Platt, N. Y.
Barrows,	Gallinger,	McBride,	Proctor,
Caffery,	Gear,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Cullom,	Gorman,	Mason,	Spooner,
Davis,	Hale,	Morrill,	White,
Deboe,	Hanna,	Murphy,	Wetmore.

NOT VOTING—10.

Clay,	Penrose,	Sullivan,	Wilson.
Elkins,	Quay,	Turner,
Kenney,	Smith,	Wellington,

So the amendment of the committee as modified was agreed to. Mr. CLAY subsequently said: Mr. President, during the time when the vote was taken on the committee amendment providing for the coinage of $42,000,000 of silver, I was temporarily absent from the Senate Chamber, having been called to the other House on official business. I desire to state that I was paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. Had I been present, I should have voted in favor of the committee amendment providing for the coinage of $42,000,000 of silver.

Mr. ALDRICH. Now, Mr. President, I renew my motion to substitute the amendment suggested by the minority of the committee for the provision in regard to the issue of United States notes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island moves the amendment which appears on page 75, sections 27 and 28.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the figures "27" and "28" be stricken out, so that they will be left blank sections and numbered hereafter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is before the Senate. Mr. ALLEN. Let the amendment be stated.

Mr. GORMAN. What is proposed to be stricken out?

Mr. ALDRICH. It strikes out the provision reported by the majority of the committee in favor of the issue of United States notes and inserts the provisions reported by the minority of the committee in favor of issuing certificates of indebtedness and bonds.

Mr. GORMAN. It does not deal with the silver question?

Mr. ALDRICH. It does not touch the silver question at all.

Mr. STEWART. Is the amendment amendable?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think not. It would be an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. STEWART. You propose an amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. But it is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. STEWART. But the amendment of the committee was to be treated as the text of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; there was no such agreement made. It can be amended in the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to move an amendment to it right here. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object.

Mr. ALDRICH. I object. The Senator has a right to offer his amendment when the bill is in the Senate, if he wants to do so.

Mr. ALLEN. I heard very indistinctly the colloquy between the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Rhode Island about an amendment, but I gather that the Senator from Rhode Island holds that his amendment is not subject to amendment.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Rhode Island said that my amendment was an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Rhode Island holds that no other amendment can be offered and that no change can be made.

Mr. ALDRICH. This is an amendment to a committee amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. What has that got to do with it?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is an amendment in the second degree, and therefore a further amendment to that would be an amendment in the third degree, and not in order.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand that may be true. I do not profess to indulge in the refinements of that kind of parliamentary law or knowledge, which is about as useless as the dust on a shelf; but here the Senator—

Mr. ALDRICH. It is perfectly competent for the Senator from Nebraska or any other Senator to offer as an additional provision any amendment he may see fit. This cuts off nobody. What I desire is simply to have a vote on this proposition as it stands.

Mr. ALLEN. What I desire is to modify the amendment, and the Senator from Rhode Island informs me that it can not be done.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not at this stage. It can be done when the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I am told it can not be done, under some peculiar parliamentary rule which the Senator does not disclose. I do not care about knowing anything about it.

Mr. GEAR. The bill as it came over from the other House was an original proposition, and the Senate committee has made an amendment to that. Now the Senator from Rhode Island has offered an amendment to that amendment, and that cuts off all further amendments except by common consent.

Mr. ALLEN. I understood that before the Senator told me, but I do not believe that is the rule.

Mr. GEAR. That is the rule.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator can assert it as much as he sees fit and as openly as he may see fit, and yet the Senator can not justify it even by a respectable subterfuge, to say nothing about the reason for the enforcement of a rule of that kind. It is not the parliamentary law. It may be some man's construction of a rule, but it is not the rule itself, and it has not been the rule in this Chamber heretofore.

Mr. President, this simply illustrates what has manifested itself all the way through this discussion, that when we come to this infamous bond feature, which is to place on the country a perpetual interest-bearing national debt, parliamentary usage and common sense and ordinary decency are to be thrown aside and ignored and a gag law instituted in their stead. If any man alive can justify himself for doing wrong, he ought to be willing to stand on his feet in this Chamber and proclaim the reason; he ought not to seek to skulk and hide himself behind obstructions of his own creation. I know the Senator's constituency will probably support him in this scheme.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose, from his tone, the Senator from Nebraska is really feeling hurt about this matter.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not feel hurt at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will suggest to him that it will only take two minutes to dispose of this proposition, and then the Senator from Nebraska can offer any proposition he sees fit of any nature or description as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not feel hurt at all.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Rhode Island has said an amendment can not be offered to his amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. When we get into the Senate the Senator can offer any proposition he sees fit. He can move to add to or to take from it.

Mr. ALLEN. I only feel hurt, Mr. President, at anything that savors of smallness or unfairness.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Nebraska must understand that I simply desire to have a vote upon this proposition as it stands. If the Senate votes it down, that is all right.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand that.

Mr. ALDRICH. And if the Senate adopts it, the Senator from Nebraska can, when the bill is in the Senate, move any amendment he sees fit. He can offer as an additional provision to the bill any amendment he chooses.

Mr. ALLEN. Of course the Senator from Rhode Island wants us to accept the dose he himself prescribes without any diminution or extraction or elimination—

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senate can reject it.

Mr. ALLEN. But the Senator from Rhode Island is not willing that the harsh, cruel, and criminal features of this amendment shall be softened or modified by amendment or modification. He proposes to apply the Procrustean bed, and every man who is too short is to be drawn out and every man who is too long is to be cut off.

Mr. President, there never was an infamous scheme on the face of the earth for which some reason could not be assigned, and there never was a tyrant who did not invoke some reason or supposed reason for his action. The first argument of tyranny always is discretionary power; the first argument of cruelty and unreasonableness in the advocacy of any proposition is to invoke some supposed rule to cut off discussion or to cut off modification.

I am satisfied the American people will not believe with the Senator from Rhode Island that there is any real or supposed reason why an amendment should not be offered at this time. I am utterly surprised, absolutely amazed, that any Senator can have—Mr. President, I use the proper expression—the hardihood to impose upon the people of this country interest-bearing obligations when we have ample power by taxation to raise the money with which to conduct this war. It is absolutely inexcusable, and no man who has a conscience can ever appeal to that conscience to justify himself for such a vote. We simply add to the thousand millions of interest-bearing obligations we have to-day $400,000,000 more—more than one-half of the bonded indebtedness of this country at the close of the late civil war. That sum is to be augmented by the issuance of bonds under the act of 1875, and the interest to be paid by the United States is to be increased from $23,000,000 to practically $50,000,000 a year, and that, too, Mr. President, without the shadow of an excuse.

I would not complain so much or so bitterly if this was not sought to be accomplished by the enforcement of a gag rule, by which the Senator holds up his amendment in all its hideousness and in all its deformity, and says to Senators, "You must take this without modification or get nothing."

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, this is a motion to strike out and insert, and I believe it is in order to amend the original proposition before the motion to strike out and insert properly comes in. I therefore offer the amendment which I send to the Chair, and I wish to have it read. It is certainly in order.

Mr. ALLEN. I offered here a day or two ago an amendment, which I supposed was pending, to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], to the effect that after the passage of this bill no bonds shall thereafter be issued without a specific declaration of Congress to that effect, and that, I understand—

Mr. STEWART. My amendment is in order now to add to the provision for issuing greenbacks, and I ask that it be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after line 8, on page 73 of the reprinted bill, the following:

SEC. — That the Secretary of the Treasury be hereby authorized to cause Treasury notes, payable to bearer, for such sum or sums as the exigencies of the public service may require, but not to exceed at any time the amount of $500,000,000, and of denominations of $10 and multiples thereof, to be prepared, signed, and issued in the manner hereinafter provided.

SEC. — That such Treasury notes shall be paid and redeemed by the United States at the Treasury thereof after the expiration of one year from the date of issue of such notes; from which dates until they shall be respectively paid and redeemed they shall bear such rate of interest as shall be expressed in such notes, which rate of interest shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury at not exceeding 5 per cent per annum: Provided, That after the maturity of any of said notes interest thereon shall cease at the expiration of sixty days' notice of readiness to redeem and pay the same, which may at any time or times be given by the Secretary of the Treasury in one or more newspapers at the seat of government. The redemption and payment of said notes herein provided shall be made to the lawful holders thereof, respectively, upon presentment at the Treasury, and shall include the principal of each note and the interest which shall be due thereon. And for the payment and redemption of such notes at the time and times therein specified the faith of the United States is hereby solemnly pledged.

SEC. — That such Treasury notes shall be prepared, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be signed in behalf of the United States by the Treasurer thereof, and countersigned by the Register of the Treasury. Each of these officers shall keep, in a book or books provided for the purpose, separate, full, and accurate accounts, showing the number, date, amount, and rate of interest of each Treasury note signed and countersigned by them respectively, and also similar accounts showing all such notes which may be paid, redeemed, and canceled, as the same may be returned; all which accounts shall be carefully preserved in the Treasury Department. And the Treasurer shall account quarterly for all such Treasury notes as shall have been countersigned by the Register and delivered to the Treasury for issue.

SEC. — That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, with the approbation of the President, to cause such portion of said Treasury notes as may be deemed expedient to be issued by the Treasurer in payment of warrants in favor of public creditors or other persons lawfully entitled to payment, who may choose to receive such notes in payment at par; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, with the approbation of the President, to issue the notes hereby authorized to be issued at such rate of interest as may be offered by the lowest responsible bidder or bidders who may agree to take the said notes at par after public advertisement of not less than ten days in such papers as the President may direct; the said advertisement to propose to issue such notes at par to those who may offer to take the same at the lowest rate of interest. But in deciding upon those bids no fraction shall be considered which may be less than one-fourth per cent per annum.

SEC. — That said Treasury notes shall be transferable by delivery.

SEC. — That said Treasury notes shall be received by the proper officers in payment of all duties and taxes laid by the authority of the United States, of all public lands sold by said authority, and of all debts to the United States, of any character whatever, which may be due and payable at the time when said Treasury notes may be offered in payment thereof; and upon every such payment credit shall be given for the amount of principal and interest due on the note or notes received in payment, on the day when the same shall have been received by such officer.

SEC. — That every collector of the customs, receiver of public moneys, or other officer or agent of the United States who shall receive any Treasury note or notes in payment on account of the United States, shall take from the holder of such note or notes a receipt on the back of each, stating distinctly the date of such payment and the amount allowed on such note; and every such officer or agent shall keep regular and specific entries of all Treasury notes received in payment, showing the person from whom received, the number, date, and amount of principal and interest allowed on each and every Treasury note received in payment, which entries shall be delivered to the Treasury with the Treasury note or notes mentioned therein; and, if found correct, such officer or agent shall receive credit for the amount, as provided in the thirty-second section of this act.

SEC. — That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized to make and issue from time to time such instructions, rules, and regulations to the several collectors, receivers, depositaries, and all others who may be required to receive such Treasury notes in behalf of, and as agents in any capacity for, the United States, as to the custody, disposal, canceling, and return of any such notes as may be paid to and received by them respectively, and as to the accounts and returns to be made to the Treasury Department of such receipts, as he shall deem best calculated to promote the public convenience and security, and to protect the United States, as well as individuals, from fraud and loss.

SEC. — That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be paid the principal and interest of such Treasury notes as may be issued under this act, at the time and times when, according to its provisions, the same should be paid. And said Secretary is further authorized to purchase said notes at par for the amount of principal and interest due thereon at the time of such purchase. And so much of any unappropriated money in the Treasury as may be necessary for the purpose is hereby appropriated for the payment of the principal and interest of said notes.

SEC. — That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to cause a statement to be published monthly of the amount of Treasury notes issued and paid and redeemed under the provisions of this act, showing the balance outstanding each month.

SEC. — That a sufficient amount of money necessary to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, this amendment is the same as the system which was devised originally by Mr. Madison and was in vogue from his time until 1862. In brief, it is to issue Treasury notes bearing interest at such rate as will make them current, payable in one year, and receivable for all Government dues.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator allow me a question?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. They are payable in one year or thereafter at the option of the Government, are they not?

Mr. STEWART. No; payable in one year.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But the interest is to run on them until sixty days' notice has been given by the Government of its desire to redeem them. That makes them payable at the option of the Government after one year.

Mr. STEWART. The interest will run until the Government gives notice.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. This system worked admirably in the war of 1812 and in the Mexican war, and relieved the country from incurring a permanent national debt.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator hold that it is necessary that these notes should draw interest in order to float them?

Mr. STEWART. Let me make my statement for a moment and then I will answer any question which the Senator desires to propound.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well.

Mr. STEWART. I want to state what the amendment is. I say this system was the only system in vogue during the war of 1812 and during the Mexican war. Notes of this precise character were issued during the Administrations of Madison, Monroe, Van Buren, Tyler, and Polk. In December, 1860, the last bill was passed putting out this particular kind of notes. In 1861 the act of 1860 was extended in a modified form, and the Government finally came around to issuing greenbacks.

This system operated well, because it furnished a means of paying taxes and enabled the Government to collect large revenues much more easily than in any other way.

The introduction of this system grew out of a long discussion in which Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe took part. Jefferson wrote various letters about the system. One of the first was written in January, 1814, which commended this system and deprecated any system which would entail a permanent national debt.

Inasmuch, however, as the majority of the committee has reported a provision for the issuance of greenbacks, I do not wish to antagonize that; and Senators suggest to me that they would rather have a straight vote on the greenback question, and have my amendment offered later. With that view, in order not to embarrass some Senators, I withdraw the amendment for the present, and give notice that I shall offer it later, and shall desire a vote on it, because it would be a substitute for all the bond provisions and furnish ample money.

We shall be able to double the revenue and carry on the war and have no burden of debt upon us at the end of it if we follow the system devised by Madison and pursued rigidly until the late war, and then only departed from when the Government issued legal-tender notes. That was the first departure from it through all the years of the Republic. This is the same system. It is not original with me. It is modeled on acts that were passed from time to time during all that long period, and its admirable working and the fact that it kept the nation out of permanent debt is much in its favor.

I give notice that I shall offer the amendment later.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, as I understand, the proposition is to substitute bonds for the amendment of the committee to the bill providing Treasury notes.

Mr. ALDRICH. For greenbacks.

Mr. DANIEL. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this amendment involves these elements: First, a heavy public indebtedness; second, paper currency instead of hard money; third, a possibly much larger inflation of that paper currency than the Senate committee's amendment; fourth, the control of the volume of currency by banks which may expand or contract it at their pleasure.

By the House bill now before us there is an authorized and possible inflation of the paper currency of the country to the extent of $450,000,000. By the amendment proposed by the Republicans and offered by the minority of the Finance Committee there is an authorized and possible inflation of the paper currency to the extent of $270,000,000. By the amendment proposed by the majority of the Finance Committee, and supported by the Democratic members thereof, there is an authorized and possible inflation of the paper currency to the extent of only $150,000,000.

The authorized and possible inflation of paper currency by the Republican House measure is three times that authorized or possible under the Democratic Senate measure and is three hundred millions more in amount.

The authorized and possible inflation by the Republican Senate measure is nearly twice that of the Democratic Senate measure and is one hundred and twenty millions more.

Who the inflationists are is evident. Who the paper-currency advocates are is also evident. The curious matter about this debate is that the inflationists express abhorrence of inflation and the paper-currency advocates express abhorrence of anything but hard money.

The House bill authorizes the issue of $500,000,000 of bonds, bearing 3 per cent interest, in quarterly installments, redeemable after two years from date, payable twenty years from date, in coin. The cost of this scheme is primarily the cost of printing and issuing the bonds, and ultimately $500,000,000 in coin, and each year in interest to the people $15,000,000, which will amount to $150,000,000 if the bonds are redeemed in ten years and to $300,000,000 if paid at the end of twenty years. If the Senate Republican amendment is adopted, the bonds will amount to $300,000,000, the annual interest cost will be $9,000,000, interest for ten years will amount to $90,000,000 and for twenty years to $180,000,000.

To sum up, the House scheme has a maximum cost of $800,000,000 and the Senate Republican scheme a maximum cost of $480,000,000. The Democratic scheme has a maximum cost of only $150,000,000; six hundred and fifty millions less than the House scheme, three hundred and thirty millions less than the Republican Senate scheme.

The Democratic scheme of issuing as they are needed one hundred and fifty millions of legal-tender Treasury notes would apparently gradually inflate the currency to the extent of their issue; but it is to be remembered that the inflation would be more apparent than real, and would have no great effect upon prices. It would only stop a contraction of the currency. For this reason: We are providing by this bill for an estimated annual levy of $150,000,000 of extraordinary war taxes. We are therefore in the act of calling for annually—and as long as the necessity lasts the call will be annually repeated—just as much money as the whole volume of the contemplated issue of Treasury notes. There will be just as much more money coming in under this levy annually into the Treasury from the pockets of the people as there will be going out in issues of Treasury notes. Output and income will counterbalance each other. No more money will be in circulation, because it will come back as fast as it goes out, and no shock to business and no disturbance of values can occur.

Inflation under the Republican scheme may come in this fashion: As soon as the $500,000,000 of bonds are issued under the House bill, or the $300,000,000 under the Republican Senate amendment, or as soon as any portion of these bonds is issued, they become the basis of national-bank issues to the extent of 90 per cent of their par value—a possible inflation of $450,000,000 in national-bank notes if the House view be adopted, a possible inflation of $370,000,000 in such notes if the Senate Republican amendment be adopted.

This currency will cost the people not only 3 per cent interest on the bonds, it will cost them through the borrowers from banks 6 per cent when loaned by the national banks; that is to say, $27,000,000 per annum if the whole amount be issued and loaned them, and on lesser amounts in proportion.

The Democratic increase of currency to the extent of $150,000,000 will cost nothing in interest to the Government or the people, whereas the same amount of national-bank currency would cost annually the interest annually paid on $165,000,000 of bonds put up for their security, with the principal of the bonds added.

I present herewith a table showing the amount of national-bank circulation from 1875 to 1897:

National-bank circulation from January 1, 1875, to January 1, 1897, inclusive.

Year.	Amount.	Year.	Amount.
1875.....	$354,128,250	1887.....	$296,771,981
1876.....	346,479,756	1888.....	268,398,878
1877.....	321,595,006	1889.....	253,600,027
1878.....	321,672,506	1890.....	197,230,405
1879.....	323,701,674	1891.....	177,287,846
1880.....	342,387,366	1892.....	173,078,585
1881.....	344,355,203	1893.....	174,404,424
1882.....	362,431,988	1894.....	206,538,844
1883.....	362,661,169	1895.....	206,005,710
1884.....	350,482,828	1896.....	213,842,063
1885.....	329,158,623	1897.....	235,673,117
1886.....	317,443,454

The total amount of their circulation in 1875 was $354,000,000. The lowest amount of their circulation for any one year was in 1892, when it amounted to only $173,000,000, showing a falling off of $181,000,000. The variable scale of the amount in circulation of national-bank notes discloses to us this other objection to the Republican scheme, that it puts the control of the volume of currency of the country into the hands of the banks, and that they may contract or expand it at pleasure and make hard times whenever fancied to their interest to do so.

I have no desire to extend my observations upon the subject. I merely present this analysis of the costly, cumbrous inflation which will tax the people for many years in contrast with the simple, inexpensive, and well-trying Democratic scheme of Treasury notes. I may say in conclusion that the scheme of thus both taxing a few of the people heavily and exempting those most able to pay and the bonding of the country for an immense amount of money is indeed "a dainty dish to set before a king."

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President, do I understand we are about to vote upon the proposition substituting bonds in lieu of the committee report for the issuance of greenbacks?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Chair will state to the Senator from Montana that that is the question before the Senate.

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President, at this point of the debate upon this measure I desire to say just a few words expressive of my views. I have not yet taken any of the time of the Senate in the discussion of the bill and do not intend now to consume more than a few moments.

The questions presented to me for determination are most perplexing, in view of the opinions I hold upon the financial question. I may say that I am not wholly satisfied, and I presume there is scarcely anyone here who is, with the whole character of this revenue measure. I am in sympathy with those who feel that its application has been narrowed too much, and that it ought to have been spread over a broader area, to the end that its burdens should be more generally diffused over the industries, the business, the sections, and the people of this country, and thus have lain more lightly. I am also in sympathy with the efforts which have been made here to compel those who own the great bulk of the wealth of this country to bear their fair share of the burdens of these taxes. I feel that as the bill is now constructed they will not be compelled to do so. I say this with many regrets.

It is evident that in a state of war a great expenditure of money is required. The conditions are unusual. The ordinary revenues are insufficient, hence extraordinary means must be used in order to provide money for the carrying on of the war. The natural channels through which this may be done are taxation first and then by borrowing in one form or another. But it is manifest that the necessary amount of money can not possibly be raised by taxation without imposing present burdens upon the people of the country that they can not and ought not to be asked to bear. So, Mr. President, in order to meet this emergency we are reduced to a choice between borrowing upon interest-bearing bonds of the Government upon the one hand and borrowing from the people of the country by the issuance of greenbacks which bear no interest upon the other hand.

Mr. President, I am not wholly in sympathy with the proposition to issue at this time $150,000,000 of greenbacks. I am not a believer in what is generally called fiat money. I am essentially a believer in hard money, so called. All my opinions and my convictions, as the result of such investigation as I have been able to give to this great question, are that the thing which we call money and which possesses the unusual prerogative, if I may so express it, of being convertible, exchangeable, and transmutable into all other forms of property, must be something which in and of itself represents human sweat and toil and struggle and effort in order to obtain it.

I may be wrong in my conclusions, but I believe that is the consensus of all human experience upon this question, and it has found its expression, generally speaking, in the adoption of gold and silver to represent the money of the world, these having been selected because nature has limited them in quantity, because they possess those precious qualities which so admirably fit them for the discharge of this great function.

Unfortunately, one of these precious metals has been practically discarded by an unwise policy, by unjust legislation, and perhaps by means which would bear stronger characterization and more emphatic condemnation. But I care not to go into that question at this time. The fact remains that silver has been denied the right of coinage, and as a result there has occurred a contraction in the volume of the money of the world. The money which has been left has consequently been enhanced in value, and this in turn has been reflected in a lowering of the prices of all other commodities. Out of this condition of affairs has grown a desire, a natural desire, for an increase in the volume of the money of the world; and the principal reason, it seems to me, at this time for the adoption of the plan for the issuance of $150,000,000 of greenbacks lies in the fact that there is confessedly and indisputably an insufficient volume of money with which to carry on the enterprises of the country and to maintain a just parity between property and money.

Mr. President, I do not think that any serious harm can result from the issuance of this limited amount of greenbacks. There may be some slight inflation of prices as a result, because if there is any one principle that is well established, it is that an inflation of the volume of money will inflate prices and values, and that per contra a reduction in the value of money will be followed by exactly the opposite conditions; but the amount here named is not sufficient to produce the harmful results which history teaches has generally followed sudden and large increases in the volume of the currency through paper issues.

I do not believe, as stated by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], that the issuance of this amount of greenbacks will result in a divergence between the value of gold and silver and paper money. If I so thought, I could not bring myself to vote for it, because I believe such a result is undesirable from every point of view. I can conceive of no possible benefit that could accrue to any human being by the issuance of a volume of paper money so large as to bring about a divergence in the purchasing power of the different kinds of money by sending one kind to a premium over another. Much as I desire the restoration of silver, holding as I do the question of bimetalism to be paramount to every other public question in time of peace, as it relates to the happiness and the welfare and prosperity of the masses of the people, if I thought that the opening of the mints of this country to the free coinage of silver upon equal terms with gold would result in debasing the currency, I never would give it my vote.

But I do not so believe, and so far as I can discover there is nothing in history, there is nothing in human experience, to warrant the assumption that such a result would follow. Hence I am earnestly in favor of the free coinage of silver as well as gold, but I make a wide distinction between the opening of the mints of this country to the free and unlimited coinage of silver upon equal terms with gold and the issuance of paper money.

Mr. President, another phase of this question which presents itself to me now, and which will no doubt press upon us in the future, in this connection is, this: If we can issue $150,000,000 of greenbacks, may we not be called upon to issue $300,000,000; and if we issue $300,000,000, may we not be called upon to issue twice that amount? And the question arises, Where shall we stop, assuming that it is within the range of probabilities that the war may continue for some time and that a tremendous outlay of money as well as a vast number of men may be required before it is brought to a successful termination?

Holding the views I do in favor of metallic money—gold and silver jointly—I confess I can not regard with complacency the prospect of being asked to vote for practically unlimited quantities of paper money. Such a policy would not, in my opinion, be beneficial to the people or the country, and would undoubtedly hinder and delay rather than promote the cause of bimetalism. It must be borne in mind that every dollar of greenbacks issued is simply an evidence of a debt redeemable under the terms of the law in "coin," but, as a matter of fact, in actual practice redeemable in gold.

I apprehend that the principal objection to the issuance of bonds at this time arises not so much out of opposition to borrowing money for the purpose of carrying on the war, but because of the fear, deeply imbedded in the minds of a great many people, that this measure as it came from the House of Representatives, carrying a provision which at that time called for far more bonds than were necessary or justifiable by the conditions then existing, was in reality designed to furnish a basis through which and by which the powers of the national banks of this country might be enlarged and extended and the desires and purposes of the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to retiring the greenbacks and turning the issuance of the paper money of this Government wholly over to the banks might in an indirect manner be successfully carried into effect.

I think a great deal of the opposition to bonds at this time has originated in the well-grounded fear that behind this bond issue might lie hidden that purpose upon the part of the Secretary of the Treasury, who, in season and out of season, has urged and advocated the retirement of the greenbacks, an enlargement of the powers of the banks, and the permanent establishment of the single gold standard; and I confess, Mr. President, that I share in that general apprehension.

I am glad to be able to say that, so far as the bond feature of the bill is concerned, the amendments proposed by the Senate committee, in reducing the amount of the bonds to be issued and in providing that under no circumstances shall any of the proceeds arising either from the sale of the certificates or the bonds be used for any other purpose whatever than that of carrying on this war, are a vast improvement, because they offer an assurance that there is no ultimate hidden purpose in the issuance of these bonds or the application of the proceeds of their sale except for war purposes. Much of the feeling among the people of the country against any form of bonds for any purpose is no doubt also due to the sale of bonds in time of peace and the very questionable methods employed in disposing of them to a syndicate which made enormous profits.

Again, Mr. President, I have another fear. It is well known that in this country there are a great many people who hold to the belief that a piece of paper bearing the stamp of the Government, possessing legal-tender qualities and made payable and acceptable for all dues, public and private, is just as good money as any money that was ever made; and if those who hold this belief could have their way, there would be no coinage of either gold or silver, because it follows that if all that is necessary to make money is paper and a printing press and the stamp of the Government, it is a waste of time and energy and labor to explore for and develop gold and silver mines for the purpose of converting these metals into money. I can not accept this view; and I fear that if we resort to large issues of paper money, we shall strengthen this class in their contention and weaken our own argument in favor of hard money.

I hold that the Government is in some respects like an individual. It may, if the necessity arise, put forth a certain amount of paper obligations. What that amount shall be must of necessity rest upon its resources, just as it would in the case of an individual; and if at any time an individual puts out paper to an amount which his resources do not warrant, the result will be that his paper will be discounted, and ultimately it will become worthless. I believe that the principle holds true in relation to the Government. I believe there is another principle which holds equally good as to governments and as to individuals, and that is that so far as it is possible to do it we should pay as we go.

Mr. President, I feel that in the issuance of greenbacks there is danger to the great cause of bimetallism; and I say this with the utmost deference and respect to those members of the committee who have made this recommendation as well as to those who are supporting it upon the floor. I feel that it may return to plague those of us who have made bimetallism the supreme issue in our politics; and for one I should dislike very much by any act or vote of mine, after the tremendous struggle which has been made in this country, after all the sacrifices which have been offered in behalf of the cause of bimetallism, to do aught that could minimize its importance or in any wise weaken that great struggle, for I believe that the contest for bimetallism is now organized upon a basis in this country where, if nothing is done to injure it, it will ultimately achieve victory, because I believe the principle is inherently right and just.

Still, Mr. President, while entertaining these general views upon the subject, I shall yet defer to the greater wisdom and riper judgment, to the sagacity and experience, of those leaders in the cause in which I have enlisted and for which I have left the political party with which I have affiliated all my life. I know that their patriotism can not be questioned, and so I shall vote at this time for the issuance of this amount of paper money. I shall do it, however, with the apprehensions which I have endeavored to express, but with the hope that I may be mistaken. And then, too, Mr. President, it is a choice between two evils.

Mr. President, perhaps it is inherent in the situation and can not be avoided, but I have had a sort of feeling, and I think I have seen it reflected in others here, both in their public and private expression, that there has been an effort in framing this measure to put those of us who have always been in hearty sympathy and accord with the objects of this war in a false light by incorporating in it provisions which would of necessity call forth vigorous opposition. I do not want to be placed in an attitude of obstruction. For three years, since I have been a member of the Senate, I have cast my vote for every proposition that looked to extending aid and sympathy and recognition to the people of Cuba, because I have felt from the bottom of my heart that they were entitled to our aid and sympathy. I have cast my vote for this war, and no vote that I have ever cast here has so satisfied my conscience. Having voted for war, I do not want, even seemingly, to be put into an attitude where it can be said that I am not willing to do whatever may be necessary in order to carry that war to a successful and glorious termination. These are my feelings.

Again, it must be borne in mind this is a nation where majorities rule. It is a nation where parties rule. The party in power is the Republican party. It has its own plans and its own policies. Its policy is to levy this tax upon a few industries, upon a few articles, comparatively, and to make it wholly internal. Its policy is to issue bonds and to pay interest upon them and to redeem them in gold; and it is only fair to assume, having the Administration, having in the other branch of Congress a majority which is absolutely tractable, that its policy in this emergency must and will prevail. The responsibility of this measure therefore must and will rest upon the Republican party. I know that the exigencies of the situation will prevent any unnecessary delay or obstruction here, no matter what the convictions of those who are opposed to these policies may be.

So, Mr. President, this measure will ultimately reach its final stage, and we shall be called upon to vote. For my part I shall vote for those measures and those amendments which commend themselves to my judgment as being best and wisest and in the interest of the great masses of the people. Failing to accomplish that which I desire, I shall not consent to cast a vote which by any construction would seem to put me in an attitude of opposing a measure to provide the means with which to carry on this war—a war as holy, as just, as righteous as any ever waged on the face of this earth.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I would be very reluctant, indeed, to add anything at this moment respecting the question under consideration if I felt that by so doing I would delay a vote.

The pending bill originates in the necessities incident to the existing war with Spain. It is framed to meet an emergency which, it is hoped, will be but temporary.

It is not my purpose to discuss the details or revenue features of the bill. That has been done by the members of the Finance Committee, whose familiarity therewith enabled them to speak with special force. It is my desire to present a few general observations, briefly as may be possible, upon those provisions which are presented for reinforcing the Treasury otherwise than from the imposition of excise duties.

There should be, sir, in the consideration of this great measure no partisanship. Yet it seems to me that while there are many on both sides of this Chamber who share in this view, there is a minority which does not. If there is an occasional discordant note, however, it but emphasizes the prevailing harmony among the majority.

Sir, while the honorable Senators in opposition disavow any partisan purpose, some have paused at this critical juncture to attack the Dingley law and challenge the good faith of its authors. I feel that it is a prodigal waste of time to even briefly reply to the imputations cast upon the law and its authors, but a word may be justified.

The law will stand the sharpest comparison with the Wilson Act. In anticipation of the passage of the latter, importations were deferred until it should become a law, in order that the importers might enjoy the reduced rates which it established. This increased the receipts during the early months of the law. During the latter months when it was in force, importations were increased so as to avoid the higher duties which the Dingley law imposed. Ships from all quarters of the globe were impressed into the service of the importers prior to the enactment of the Dingley bill; and when it became a law, our warehouses were filled to the utmost with wool, sugar, tobacco, fabrics, etc., and the Treasury thereby lost millions of dollars. Do the assailants of the act take note of this?

During the first nine months of the operation of the Wilson law the receipts from customs were $110,544,893, and during the corresponding period under the Dingley law $105,089,693.23. More significant than this contrast is the fact that for the nine months prior to the passage of the Dingley law the receipts from customs were $146,274,106.76, while the total for the nine months following its enactment amounted to only $105,089,693.23. Those who are best qualified to estimate the loss to the Dingley law by anticipatory importations place the amount at quite $40,000,000.

I subjoin a brief comparison of the receipts and expenditures under the Wilson and Dingley acts for the first nine months of each. It will be observed that the receipts under the Dingley Act were $36,763,931 in excess of those under the Wilson law; and it also appears that the deficit under the Wilson Act was $57,413,081, and under the Dingley Act $57,561,523. Included in the expenditures under the Dingley law are large extraordinary amounts for coast defenses authorized by the Fifty-fourth Congress, and $13,540,000 paid for the national defense from the $50,000,000 appropriation. Consider in connection with this fact the $40,000,000 of loss by anticipatory importations, and it will be seen that the opposition is not justified in its criticism of the law. That it will produce adequate revenue to meet all requirements under normal conditions there is no reasonable ground to doubt.

I append a statement of the receipts from customs during the first nine months following the enactment of the Wilson bill, and for a corresponding period both prior and subsequent to the enactment of the Dingley law, which shows with striking force the serious loss to the receipts under the latter because of anticipatory importations, and justifies, it seems to me, the foregoing statement as to the amount thereof.

It has been urged in opposition that the provisions of the pending bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificates of indebtedness is for the purpose of concealing deficiencies of the Dingley law. A fair analysis of the operations of the act, as we have observed, will leave no reasonable doubt that under normal conditions it would meet every fiscal requirement.

Does the opposition perceive no difference between the issuing of bonds in time of peace to meet deficiencies, as was necessary during the last Administration, and the issuing of certificates of indebtedness and bonds in time of war?

Sir, the most casual observer must have perceived the rapid improvement in the commercial interests of the country which followed the enactment of the Dingley law, an improvement which has steadily increased in degree notwithstanding the adverse influence of actual war. Why do the honorable Senators pause in the face of the enemy to indulge in criticism of our economic policy, to discredit our revenue laws, and attempt to increase party division? Sir, in the present emergency there should be but one party, inspired by one purpose, exalted by one object.

It is conceded that the revenues to be derived from the Dingley law, the excises imposed by the pending measure, and the postal receipts will be insufficient to meet the extraordinary requirements of the coming fiscal year. It is necessary, therefore, to increase the levies contemplated or raise the additional money necessary in some other manner.

I do not believe it wise to undertake to cast the entire burden of the war on the present or coming fiscal year. The wholesome policy "pay as you go" has its reasonable limitations. It is good, sound peace policy as a rule, but should not be adopted in a time of expensive, burdensome war. Such has never been the policy of the country during any of the wars in which we have engaged, and there is no good reason for any departure from our uniform practice in that particular now.

We should bear a fair share of the burden of the cost of the war during its progress, and to that end increase the tax levies, and defer a reasonable proportion until after the restoration of peace. We should not overtax the energies and resources of the people so as to unduly burden and embarrass them in their enterprises.

In my opinion, we should pursue no parsimonious policy in making provisions for the necessities of war. At the best, they are great. We should place at the disposal of the President a sum adequate to meet all known requirements, and any reasonable, possible contingencies. There is nothing so essential in the prosecution of war as an abundant treasury. The war chest should be well filled. It has a reassuring effect at home and a wholesome influence abroad.

There are two widely divergent methods proposed for providing the money required in excess of that yielded by imposts, excises, and the postal service. One method is utterly unsound and vicious, and not to be tolerated under any present conceivable circumstances. It is the plan proposed by the opposition, and involves the emission of $150,000,000 of irredeemable paper money and the coinage of $42,000,000 of so-called seigniorage in the Treasury. It is a deliberate attempt, it seems to me, to inflate the currency and imperil the present gold standard.

The greenbacks when authorized in 1863 were justified by the lights which surrounded our statesmen and the grave and overwhelming exigency with which they were confronted. Then several States had adopted ordinances of secession and were attempting to leave the Union; the future was filled with doubt and uncertainty; what would be the result of the issue no one but Omnipotence knew. Specie payments were suspended; the Treasury was empty and the Government had no credit whereby it might readily supply it, and we were practically without currency. Now the country is united and bound together by indissoluble bonds; credit has no apparent limit; we have ample currency, as much, very nearly, as we ever had, a currency which nothing but our own improvidence and folly can impair; and no one is so pessimistic as to doubt the future.

It is well to recall the deep concern with which our statesmen approached the issue of paper money. They regarded the experiment as perilous and only justified by the severe necessities of the times and only to be employed to meet them.

Secretary Chase, in his recommendation of the issue of Treasury notes, forcibly expressed his opinion respecting the evils of fiat money. Said he:

The greatest care will, however, be requisite to prevent the degradation of such issues into irredeemable paper currency, than which no more certain fatal expedient for impoverishing the masses and discrediting the government of any country can well be devised.

Mr. Fessenden, chairman of the Committee on Finance, supported the legal-tender clause of the United States notes because it was a temporary measure made necessary by the exigency of the hour and not to become a settled policy. Said he:

All the gentlemen pretty much who have written on the subject, except some wild speculators in currency, have declared that as a policy it would be ruinous to any people; and it has been defended, as I have stated, simply and solely upon the ground that it is to be a single measure standing by itself and not to be repeated. * * * It is put upon the ground of absolute, overwhelming necessity.

Senator Sumner yielded his consent to the measure under the same imperious necessity.

A remedy—

Said he—

which at any other moment you would reject is now proposed. Whatever may be the national resources, they are not now within reach except by summary process. Reluctantly, painfully, I consent that the process should issue. And yet I can not give such a vote without warning the Government against the dangers from such an experiment. The medicine of the Constitution must not become its daily bread.

I might reproduce, if time permitted, the opinions of many of the colleagues of Mr. Fessenden and Mr. Sumner in the Senate—statesmen whose wisdom and patriotism in the nation's supreme crisis we admire and cherish—which were in entire accord with their views as to the evils of an irredeemable paper currency. They did not regard the emission of paper money as an opportunity to be welcomed, but a necessity to be regretted.

Mr. Lincoln, in his annual message to Congress, December 1, 1862, pointed out the evils of a fluctuating currency and the imperative necessity of guarding against such evils by providing for the convertibility of paper currency into coin.

And I pause to renounce the suggestion made by the honorable Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] yesterday, that he was supported in his contention here by Abraham Lincoln, and that the Republican party had departed from the policy and the principles of that great man, whose name I pronounce reverentially. Abraham Lincoln said:

The suspension of specie payments by the banks soon after the commencement of your last session made large issues of United States notes unavoidable. In no other way could the payment of the troops and the satisfaction of other just demands be so economically or so well provided for. The judicious legislation of Congress securing the receivability of these notes for loans and internal duties and making them a legal tender for other debts has made them a universal currency and has satisfied, partially at least, and for the time the long-felt want of a uniform circulating medium, saving thereby to the people immense sums in discounts and exchanges.

A return to specie payments, however, at the earliest period compatible with due regard to all interests concerned should ever be kept in view. Fluctuations in the value of currency are always injurious, and to reduce these fluctuations to the lowest possible point will always be a leading purpose in wise legislation.

Convertibility—

Said he—

prompt and certain convertibility, into coin is generally acknowledged to be the best and surest safeguard against them; and it is extremely doubtful whether a circulation of United States notes, payable in coin, and sufficiently large for the wants of the people, can be permanently, usefully, and safely maintained.

Is there, then, any other mode in which the necessary provision for the public wants can be made and the great advantages of a safe and uniform currency secured?

I know of none which promises so certain results, and is at the same time so unobjectionable, as the organization of banking associations under a general act of Congress, well guarded in its provisions. To such associations the Government might furnish circulating notes, on the security of United States bonds deposited in the Treasury. These notes, prepared under the supervision of proper officers, being uniform in appearance and security, and convertible always into coin, would at once protect labor against the evils of a vicious currency and facilitate commerce by cheap and safe exchanges.

The advocates of the proposed issue of greenbacks do not seem to regard with Mr. Lincoln's solicitude the necessity for maintaining the convertibility of greenbacks or other fiat obligations into coin; that is to say, into that money which is regarded as the standard of value among the leading civilized nations of the world.

The progress of the war of the rebellion and the continued necessity of increasing the issue of United States notes but emphasized our perils and the injury to labor and to those least able to bear the burden. Mr. Lincoln regarded the increased issue of United States notes as a calamitous necessity. In his message to Congress, January 17, 1863, he said:

I think it is my duty to express my sincere regret that it has been found necessary to authorize so large an additional issue of United States notes, when this circulation and that of the suspended banks together have become already so redundant as to increase prices beyond real values, thereby augmenting the cost of living, to the injury of labor, and the cost of supplies, to the injury of the whole country. It seems very plain that continued issues of United States notes, without any check to the issues of suspended banks, and without adequate provision for the raising of money by loans, and for funding the issues, so as to keep them within due limits, must soon produce disastrous consequences.

Pending the consideration of the first legal-tender bill the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means declared that it was intended to issue only $150,000,000 United States notes, and that it was his belief that this would be all that would be required. But, contrary to his expressed opinion, second and third issues of a like amount soon followed, and within the period of about a year from February 25, 1862, $450,000,000 of legal-tender notes were authorized. The first step taken, the others followed with little resistance.

The rapid and great depreciation in the value of this currency and the general disturbance in the value of property and commodities is well known.

It would seem that the evils of a disordered currency during the civil war were so great and so recent as to make impossible any attempt to return to a system which produced them. What was deemed wise and necessary under the stress of the civil war would seem to be unwise and unnecessary now.

The authors of the original greenback issues felt the necessity of redeeming them, and, in the absence of the requisite coin for effecting their redemption, they provided that they should be receivable for and convertible into the coin bonds of the United States. The rapid depreciation of this currency, even with such a safeguard, is a part of our familiar history. The necessity of redeeming it and thereby strengthening the public credit was early apparent, and the work of redemption was begun soon after the close of the war.

The House of Representatives as early as December, 1865, declared the necessity of the contraction of the currency and the early resumption of specie payments to be sound policy. The purpose of redeeming the currency notes was carried into various acts of Congress for the purpose of removing apprehension as to their nonredemption and strengthening faith in the public credit. These repeated expressions of the purpose of the Government to redeem its pledges and its provision for their redemption resulted in bringing our paper currency to an equivalency with gold.

In the act of 1869, passed to strengthen the public credit, the faith of the United States was pledged to the payment of its obligations in coin or its equivalent, excepting where other payment was provided for, and to the redemption of United States notes in coin. Under this pledge and the resumption act of 1875 the credit of the United States was strengthened and the way gradually paved for a return from the delirium of a disordered currency to the resumption of specie payments. Progress was not made without serious opposition. Each step was stubbornly disputed by the advocates of fiat money.

After the resumption of specie payments, in 1879, confidence in the integrity of the greenback currency became so general that it was not the source of any serious concern or peril until during the second Administration of President Cleveland, when, owing to the rapid addition to our stock of cheap money by the purchases of silver under the act of 1890 and the loss in the public revenue, doubt existed as to the solvency of the Treasury and the ability of the Government to maintain the convertibility of greenbacks and other demand obligations into gold coin.

Between January 1, 1879, and November 1, 1897, the holders of $346,681,016 United States notes demanded of the United States $507,614,473 in gold coin, or the sum of $160,933,457 more than the total amount of United States notes authorized and outstanding. Between July 1, 1892, and July 1, 1897, the amount of gold so withdrawn from the Treasury upon the demand of the note holders was $455,025,847.

Although the Government has more than paid the value of the notes in gold, their volume is undiminished. This is an illustration of the work of the "endless chain," and demonstrates what may be repeated if the credit of the Government is in the future impaired, or any doubt should arise as to its purpose and ability to maintain the interchangeability of its demand obligations with gold.

The operation of the endless chain has been suspended. There is now no demand upon the part of the holders of our demand notes for the gold in the Treasury because there is a well-grounded conviction that it is the purpose of the Government and that it has the ability to furnish gold for the notes whenever required.

If we depart from the past policy of limiting the United States notes and increase the issue to a larger amount than ever before reached by the addition of $150,000,000 as now proposed, there is serious danger that distrust of the Government's ability and purpose to maintain the convertibility of the notes into gold may arise, and we will have repeated a run upon the gold reserve which will disturb commerce, affect business credit, create distrust and demoralization, to the infinite injury of our soldiers in the field, our sailors on the sea, and all farmers, laborers, and wage-earners interested in the soundness of the dollar.

It is not proposed by the honorable opposition to safeguard in anywise the convertibility of the proposed issue of United States notes into coin. It is not proposed to give the holders of them the option of converting them into time bonds, as was done in the original acts authorizing such notes. With war upon us, there is necessity for increased governmental and individual credit. Certainly a time of war is the most unpropitious for exploiting unsound financial theories or adopting any experiments which might tend to impair and embarrass our credit in the remotest degree. We now want strength in our Navy, in our Army, and in our Treasury. Public credit is too sensitive and too important to be lightly placed in peril; its impairment is too far-reaching in its consequences to be contemplated with patience under any circumstances.

There is no present justification for the creation of additional promises to pay and the endowment of them with legal-tender power. There is no exigency likely to arise making necessary the creation of unsound money. Our credit is such that we can borrow the best money in the world to meet all our present and future requirements and at a rate of interest not exceeding 3 per cent. The people of the country will voluntarily furnish the Government all the money necessary at a rate of interest as low substantially as prevails in a time of undisturbed peace.

It is a significant fact, which will not escape intelligent observation, that the advocates of additional paper currency are those who believe in and advocate the free and independent coinage of silver. The policy of issuing additional greenbacks has its root in the same purpose, and that is "cheap money." The issue of irredeemable legal-tender paper money in sufficient quantity would tend to disturb its parity with gold, drive gold to a premium, and hence out of circulation. This would tend to open the way to free silver coinage. It has seemed to me that this intention to inflate our existing currency has its birth not solely in the professed desire to avoid the interest on bonds, for the interest involved is of comparatively small amount, but in the hope and confident expectation that the cause of free silver will be advanced by breaking down our currency. Such would undoubtedly be the direct, natural, logical tendency of the proposed measure.

The proposition to create $42,000,000 of currency by the coinage of the seigniorage in the Treasury is fraught with peril. It is another attempt to debase the currency.

Seigniorage is the profit remaining after the Government has coined the silver purchased by it; it is the difference between the cost and coinage values. Until the silver is coined there can be no profit.

It is a fact within the knowledge of everyone that the Government has never since the act of 1878 bought an ounce of silver which does not represent a loss to-day—a very considerable loss. Under the act of 1890 it purchased 168,674,682.53 ounces of silver, at a cost of $155,931,002, for which amount Treasury notes have been issued.

Some of them have been redeemed in gold, some in silver; but $101,981,280 of them are outstanding. For their redemption the uncoined bullion, amounting to 108,332,139 ounces, stands pledged. The market value of this bullion is now $63,769,218.94, or $38,212,061.06 less than the face value of the Treasury notes issued and now outstanding against it. Yet it was first seriously proposed by the opposition to issue $42,000,000 silver certificates (in advance of coinage) against the estimated profit on the coinage of this depreciated mass of silver and endow it with legal-tender power. The issue of greenbacks outright was much more to be commended than this indirect method of accomplishing the same end. Now it is proposed to coin the silver bullion held in the Treasury at the rate of not less than $4,000,000 per month and to issue certificates to the amount of the gain or seigniorage. As we have observed, there can not be at present prices of silver bullion any fair, actual gain or seigniorage, and any provision for coining it tends to increase unsound money and to defraud the holders of outstanding Treasury notes.

The outstanding Treasury notes, as we have seen, were issued for the purchase of the bullion, and it was provided that they should be "redeemable on demand in coin;" and—

That upon demand of the holder of any of the Treasury notes herein provided for the Secretary of the Treasury shall, under such regulations as he may prescribe, redeem such notes in gold or silver coin, at his discretion, it being the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other.

Could the Congressional purpose be more clearly expressed? The Secretary of the Treasury is invested with discretionary power, it is true, but that power is to be used to support and effect the established policy of the United States, and that is to keep the gold and silver coin into which the note holder may convert his obligation at an absolute, unvarying equivalency with each other. Any exercise of the discretion of the Secretary so as to endanger the parity of gold and silver with each other would be a plain, palpable violation of the policy of the Government, a positive violation of law.

The uncoined silver in the Treasury is pledged to enable the Secretary to redeem the notes issued for its purchase, and to enable him to keep the gold and silver coin in which he may redeem them at a parity with each other.

If there be any doubt as to the soundness of this view we should remove it. For in equity and good conscience the silver bullion which was purchased with the Treasury notes should be held to redeem them; or to enable the Government to maintain the parity between the gold and silver coin with which they may be redeemed.

It is not proposed by the pending bill to redeem outstanding Treasury notes, but to coin additional currency out of the very bullion which they purchased and which is much depreciated in value, and make more difficult the maintenance of gold and silver coin on a parity with each other, which the Government declared to the note holder to be its established policy.

There is no difference in principle between issuing greenbacks and coining the so-called seigniorage, except that in the former case there is no subterfuge, no indirection, no flagrant violation of faith already pledged. Each method involves the inflation, the debasement of our currency. Each is violative of sound finance and should be avoided.

The alternative method for supplementing our revenues for war purposes is proposed by this side of the Chamber. It contemplates issuing $100,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness bearing 3 per cent interest and maturing not later than one year from date of issue, and $300,000,000 of bonds, or so much thereof as may be necessary, bearing 3 per cent interest, redeemable after ten and payable twenty years from date of their issue.

It is wisely proposed that the certificates of indebtedness shall be issued in denominations as low as $50 and the bonds in sums of $25 or some multiple thereof.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Indiana permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. With pleasure.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Indiana speaks of the difficulty which the Secretary of the Treasury will experience in maintaining the parity between gold and silver. The question I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana is, under what statute has the Secretary of the Treasury the performance of any specific duty by which the parity of the two metals is maintained?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator will take the time to refer to the act of 1890, he will find there a full and complete answer.

Mr. BACON. I am quite familiar with that act, and I should like the Senator to point out what particular duty will be upon the Secretary of the Treasury by that act by which he can accomplish anything of that kind. I very well know the fact that in that act there is a declaration of the intention and policy of the Government to maintain the parity between the two metals. The words "the two metals," if the Senator will examine the act, he will see are used, not "the two coins."

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question now?

Mr. BACON. That is legitimate in certain localities.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. What does the Senator understand by this language in the act of 1890?

It being the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio, or such ratio as may be provided by law.

Mr. BACON. Why, Mr. President, that is exactly what I said. There is a declaration of policy on the part of the Government, but the question which I addressed to the Senator was this: What is the specific duty which, under that act or any other act to be found in the statutes of the United States, is to be performed by the Secretary of the Treasury or by any other governmental official which secures the parity of the two metals?

I will state to the Senator, before he replies, that my position—and I think it is the indisputably correct one—is that the thing which maintains the parity between the two metals is the fact that the silver dollar is made a legal tender; that if we take that away from it, there would be no parity, and that the Secretary of the Treasury has no power to confer that upon the silver dollar, nor has he the power to take it away, and that he has no more than any private citizen to do in the work of maintaining the parity between the two metals.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Then, according to the Senator's understanding of the language of the statute I have just read, it is a mere brutum fulmen, a mere idle declaration?

Mr. BACON. It is a declaration of principle, but it certainly does not clothe the Secretary of the Treasury with a single power or a single duty.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Congress of the United States says that it is the established policy of the United States to maintain the parity of the gold and silver coin, does the Senator object to the Secretary of the Treasury, who is the financial officer of the Government, executing in good faith that solemn declaration?

Mr. BACON. I say that there is nothing which he can do or which he can omit to do in obedience to law which has any effect upon it.

I say that the most serious blow that has ever been stricken at the maintenance of this parity is that where the Government gives up the option of determining in which money it will pay the debts of the Government, and it is only by reason of the fact that the legal-tender quality preserves it against even such a disastrous blow as that that the parity is maintained.

So far from the Secretary of the Treasury doing anything to maintain the parity, everything he does is destructive of the parity. The parity is maintained not by reason of anything he does, but in spite of everything he can do, and by reason of the legal-tender quality, and by that alone.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the parity is preserved by the mere force of the legal-tender quality that is conferred upon the two metals, then this language in the statute is wholly unnecessary.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] very pertinently suggests to me, what would become of the parity of the two metals if the Secretary of the Treasury should pay out nothing but silver and elect to pay that?

Mr. BACON. If we would elect to pay nothing but silver, most undoubtedly the parity would be maintained then, because it would very largely increase the demand for silver. It would do exactly what is accomplished in France all the time. The parity is maintained in France by reason of the fact that the Government will not pay out gold except when it wants to do it. It does exactly what the Senator suggests. Whenever you go to the French fiscal agent, which is the Bank of France, and present for payment a draft for any amount of money above a certain limited quantity—I have forgotten now what it is—the Government, speaking through that bank, or the Bank of France, if you please, speaking for the Government, does not hesitate to say it will not give it to you; and yet who denies the fact that in France a very much larger per capita of silver is maintained at a parity with gold than we have here maintained with gold?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I commend the policy of France to my honorable friend. France does not open her mints to the free and unlimited coinage of silver, so that the Senator does not approve of all the financial policies and practices of the French Government.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield further to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I do, certainly.

Mr. BACON. I do not desire to impose on the good nature of the Senator. I simply wish to say that his last observation was addressed to the question of the free coinage of silver, which is a very different question from the one we are discussing. If the Senator desires to open that question, he will be accommodated on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. At an appropriate time I shall be very glad to oblige my good friend from Georgia.

It is furthermore most properly and wisely provided that the bonds shall be offered for popular subscription at par; the allotments first made shall be made to the lowest subscribers, the manifest purpose being to give to the people of small means throughout the country the first opportunity to share in the financial support of their country in the time of war.

It has been intimated, for what good purpose it is difficult to say, that the bonds contemplated to be issued are already prepared, pledged, and promised for delivery. Such a suggestion can have no weight in the face of the positive and ample provisions of the bill, which imperatively require that the bonds shall be first offered for popular subscription. Furthermore, the Secretary of the Treasury gives assurance, if any were needed, that no bonds whatever have been either prepared, pledged, or promised for delivery.

On the contrary, the most ample preparation is made to offer such bonds as may be authorized for popular subscription, agreeably to the terms proposed by the minority amendment, through 60,000 offices located in almost every city, village, and hamlet throughout the country, so that the humblest citizen who is able to invest $25 may share in the subscription. The matter is left entirely in the hands of the people. The option rests with them to take the entire issue of certificates of indebtedness and bonds to be authorized.

Issuing bonds for the purpose of aiding in the prosecution of war is no untried experiment. The people of this country have invariably approved this method of distributing the burden, the very heavy burden, which war imposes over a period of years, so that it may fall as lightly as possible upon them. The battles we are fighting are not only for to-day, but for the future power and glory of the country.

Senators who oppose the issue of bonds maintain that it is unnecessary to incur so large a debt. This is possibly true. No one, however, can measure the cost of the prosecution of the war.

We have had nothing but rough approximates thereof, and in the very nature of the case can have nothing more.

To authorize the $400,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness and bonds is not to incur a debt of that amount, or for any amount whatever. We simply clothe the Secretary of the Treasury with authority to issue to this limit if, in the protection of our vast coast defenses or in the support of our Army and Navy, it should be found necessary to do so. Can not we rely upon the officers charged with the duty of prosecuting the war to exercise sound judgment as to expenditures? They have our confidence; they have in a special degree the confidence of the American people.

The opposition disavow any purpose to withhold needed support to the Government, and in this I believe most of them are sincere. They have, during the progress of this debate, frequently expressed their willingness to vote whatever is reasonably required. What sound objection can there be to granting authority now to meet the fiscal necessities which may arise during a reasonable period in the future? The proceeds of the bonds to be issued can not be used for defraying ordinary current expenses of the Government. Their issue is distinctly and absolutely limited to the purpose of meeting war expenses.

What these will be rests in any event mainly in the sound judgment of the officers charged with the conduct of the war. Their judgment must ultimately largely control; and it seems to me that they are doubly strengthened and fortified by placing within their reach ample means. I have no fear whatever that the discretion reposed in the Secretary of the Treasury will not be exercised in the utmost good faith and to the very best interests of the Government.

It would seem from the attitude of some of those in opposition that they demand the capitulation of the gold standard as the price of voting the necessary means for prosecuting the war.

Sir, we should no sooner debase our currency than we should weaken our coast defenses. We should no more think of introducing unsound currency into our money system than we should think of weakening the steel armor plates upon our great battle ships which are gallantly withstanding the storm of Spanish shot.

The protection and preservation of the soundness and integrity of our currency is protection to the masses of the workmen, merchants, manufacturers, and farmers of the country, and above and beyond all this, it is protection to our gallant soldiers and sailors. Their money must be gold or its equivalent. This is one of the great duties which is laid upon us in the present severe emergency.

This generation has not forgotten, nor will it soon forget, how arduous and tedious was the way from a paper currency back to the resumption of specie payments. We do not wish to be obliged to traverse it again. It will not be necessary to do so unless the opposition shall be able to force an issue of paper and silver certificates upon us so vast that our Treasury will be unable to maintain their interchangeability with gold.

We had hoped that the free-silver advocates might meet the present supreme emergency in a purely patriotic spirit; that they would not in this critical moment, when the Spanish fleet is seeking to destroy our own, prey upon our commerce, and place our Atlantic seaboard cities under contribution, endeavor to force the country to a depreciated, free-silver currency basis. Sir, the sharpest assaults of Spain can not, except in the deplorable loss of life, do us half the injury which the authors of the pending proposition would inflict if they were able to secure the adoption of their present inflated currency plan.

The Treasury is in pressing need of funds to support our Army and Navy, which are to win renown for us upon land and sea. Without prompt and ample aid we but encourage the enemy and offer him opportunity to reinforce his own treasury and supplement his naval and military forces.

But all this does not weigh against the unpatriotic demands of the free-silver forces. Free silver makes its stand in the American Congress and demands the surrender of the present gold standard as the price of its support of our Army and Navy, a Navy which has made obscure Manila as famous as Trafalgar, and an Army which must add even additional luster to our conspicuous achievements.

It seems to me that this is a time when we might well repeat one of the proudest achievements of the country when, without debate and without dissent, we voted to the President for the national defense a sum which would have beggared many governments. It has seemed to me that the advocates of free silver might have deferred their bold attack upon our currency and credit until we had emerged successfully from the smoke of war. Whoever attempts to rekindle the embers of past controversies in this patriotic hour for the purpose of making party capital is less patriot than partisan. Now is the hour when past differences should be forgotten and patriots should strike hands. We should stand together upon a higher platform than party ever decreed.

Sir, whoever seeks to gain more party advantage or to force upon the people unsafe policies in this critical moment is out of harmony with the present hope and aspiration of the American people.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., May 19, 1898.

SIR: In compliance with your request of this date, I have the honor to inclose herewith a statement of receipts and expenditures under the Dingley tariff act for the nine months in which it has been in operation, as compared with the receipts and expenditures for the first nine months under the Wilson tariff act.

Respectfully, yours,

O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

HON. CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS,
United States Senate.

Comparison of receipts and expenditures under the Wilson and Dingley tariff acts for the first nine months of each.

WILSON ACT.

Date.	Receipts.	Expenditures.	Deficit.
September, 1894	$22,621,229	$90,323,019	$7,701,700
October, 1894	19,139,240	32,713,040	13,573,800
November, 1894	19,411,404	28,477,189	9,065,785
December, 1894	21,866,137	27,135,461	5,269,324
January, 1895	27,904,400	34,523,447	6,719,047
February, 1895	22,888,057	25,096,035	2,807,978
March, 1895	25,470,576	25,716,957	246,381
April, 1895	24,247,836	32,990,676	8,742,840
May, 1895	26,272,078	28,556,214	3,284,136
Total	208,720,957	206,134,036	57,413,061

DINGLEY ACT.

August, 1897	$19,023,615	$33,588,047	$14,564,432
September, 1897	21,835,096	25,368,816	3,433,718
October, 1897	24,591,415	33,701,612	9,810,097
November, 1897	25,168,867	33,251,471	8,082,604
December, 1897	27,831,494	27,634,082	* 257,412
January, 1898	28,735,227	35,698,711	7,963,484
February, 1898	28,572,358	29,589,256	* 1,973,102
March, 1898	29,307,251	31,882,444	2,575,193
April, 1898	30,361,443	44,314,063	13,952,619
Total	235,484,868	1206,046,411	57,501,523

* Receipts in excess of expenditures.

+ Includes $13,540,000 paid for national defense from the appropriation of $50,000,000.

Receipts of the United States from customs.

First nine months under Wilson Act:

September, 1894	$15,584,900.55
October, 1894	11,962,118.17
November, 1894	10,280,082.56
December, 1894	11,203,049.40
January, 1895	17,361,916.25
February, 1895	15,134,091.90
March, 1895	14,929,789.22
April, 1895	12,459,093.42
May, 1895	12,474,558.43
Total	119,544,893.00

Last nine months under Wilson Act:

November, 1896	$9,930,385.81
December, 1896	10,779,412.67
January, 1897	11,270,874.15
February, 1897	11,587,200.37
March, 1897	22,833,856.48
April, 1897	24,454,351.74
May, 1897	16,885,011.55
June, 1897	21,560,132.36
July, 1897	16,898,801.65
Total	146,274,100.76

First nine months under Dingley Act:

August, 1897	6,987,702.84
September, 1897	7,943,100.28
October, 1897	9,713,494.62
November, 1897	9,580,625.00
December, 1897	11,060,788.74
January, 1898	14,299,492.08
February, 1898	15,040,680.74
March, 1898	15,450,431.94
April, 1898	14,193,978.90
Total	105,089,698.23

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, we are considering an extraordinary revenue bill—

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will suspend until the Senate is in order. It is impossible to hear him where I sit, and I sit within a few feet of him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will request Senators to suspend conversation and to preserve order.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I want to say that I do not care how much Senators talk, because, so far as I am concerned, it does not disturb me in the least.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But the rest of us care. We want to hear what is said.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, we are considering a very extraordinary bill, a war revenue bill. Our deficit for the last fiscal year, as reported by the Secretary of the Treasury, has been about $24,500,000. The friends and advocates of the protective-tariff bill which passed under the name of the Dingley bill feel hopeful that that bill will more than make good the deficit for the past year, and I sincerely hope that it will; but we have been called upon now to provide for extraordinary expenditures, and the committee have brought in a bill which, in its present stage, with its numerous amendments and changes, will produce upon the tax features of it about $200,000,000. So I am told by those gentlemen who belong to the committee, who have endeavored to keep pace with the numerous changes in the bill, and to make estimates which would be at least reasonable and approximate of the amount to be raised. Then we get down to the question of whether we shall supplement this taxing feature by issuing $150,000,000 of legal-tender paper or $300,000,000 of bonds, to be issued at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury if he may need the money.

Mr. President, the estimate of the Secretary of War and of the Secretary of the Navy is that this war will cost in twelve months $225,000,000. The estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury, who perhaps has a wider scope than the others, is that it will cost $300,000,000 in twelve months. According to the report made by the Secretary of the Treasury this morning, we have now a balance available in the Treasury of $105,000,000. Then, with the $200,000,000 to be derived from taxation under the bill, we shall have $305,000,000, which exceeds by $5,000,000 the highest estimate made by any officer of the Administration as necessary to be expended for one year. I do not believe there is a single Senator in this Chamber who honestly believes that this war will last for twelve months. If they do not, then I desire to ask what is the necessity of a bond measure or what is the necessity of a legal-tender measure?

We come back here in December, and meanwhile, if that which is available here and that which will be raised by taxation shall be expended, I am satisfied there is not a single Senator, whether he is an Administration man or not, who will not heartily join with his associates in providing everything that may be deemed necessary to carry this war to a successful conclusion.

I am one of those, Mr. President, who did all I could to bring about an armed intervention of the United States in the affairs between Cuba and Spain. I have labored for two and a half years in every possible way that I could to induce the people of this country to see their duty in the light of humanity and civilization, as well as from solid material interests, in making this armed intervention.

I am, therefore, under a double obligation—not only the patriotism of the Senator and of the citizen, but that of one who might be said to be accessory to the act, and I certainly will not for a moment hesitate to do what I regard to be my duty; but in considering the ways and means of raising this revenue, there must be some latitude allowed to gentlemen for individual judgment. No man can stand up here and read his written essays upon this question and accuse the people who differ from him of a lack of loyalty or a lack of patriotism. Gentlemen who burn the midnight lamp in making phrases talk pretty coolly about the patriotism of those who do not agree with them; but when I speak to this Senate it is "hot off the bat," and is exactly what I feel. I do not write essays, and I never expect to be very much interested in them when written by other people.

I want to say, Mr. President, that when it comes to the fact whether we are to raise a sum of money by greenbacks or by Treasury notes or by bonds, then I shall be found voting for the greenbacks or the Treasury notes—I care not which. I can not, to save my life, understand the position of the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS], who takes his choice coolly between $150,000,000 of Government debt bearing no interest and $300,000,000 of debt that bears interest. He has on every occasion here, together with his colleagues, favored the issuance of bonds as the basis for the further issue of paper money by the national banks of this country. I have no instance yet in mind of where that gentleman or his colleagues have ever failed to vote to give the banks a larger privilege in the issue of money. Is greenback money—the money of the people, and by our Supreme Court three times declared to be the money of the Constitution—more dangerous to the people of the country than the money issued by the banks, which must at last be supported and redeemed by the Government?

There was a great deal said to-day by the Senator from Indiana, in his speech, about the parity of the two metals, and in the little interchange of questions between himself and the honorable Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] I noticed that the Senator from Indiana insisted that the parity of the two metals has been maintained up to date by the action of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. President, speaking in the utmost sincerity and frankness, I believe the logical consequence of the action of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Administration has been to defeat the purpose of that declaration of policy which the Senator from Indiana read awhile ago. But it has not had that effect, because the transactions by the Treasury Department in the redemption of greenbacks have been small, a bagatelle, when compared with the enormous volume of the business of this great country. We have 75,000,000 people using indifferently in every transaction of life gold, silver, and paper money. They use that money because any one performs exactly the function of the others, and when you consider that these 75,000,000 people have a right to use this money to pay all their debts of every character, public and private, it seems to me that it can be easily understood why all that the Secretary of the Treasury has done has had no effect at all upon the result.

Suppose, instead of that declaration of policy, it had been declared by the two Houses of Congress that the disparity of the two metals should be maintained by the Secretary of the Treasury so far as he could in the redemption of greenbacks, I want to ask what that gentleman could have done to break down the parity except the very thing he has done? The very thing he has done he would have been compelled by statute to do, and yet, in the face of the declaration that the faith of the Government is pledged to maintain the parity of the two metals, he has done all he could to defeat that law.

I say, Mr. President, that in discussing this phase of this bill, in my mind there is a large preference to be given to the greenback currency of the country. I am sure of one thing—it will not disturb the parity between gold and silver. I am sure of another thing—that it will increase the demand for money from every section of the country. In order to revive business, as is claimed, a greater volume of currency will be demanded than we have to-day.

Mr. President, I am prepared to vote for this bill as it now stands. I believe that the taxation it proposes has not been adjusted with the same exactness and precision that it might have been so as to relieve the poor and to put the burden upon the rich. I do not believe that the corporations of this country, for whom the most legislation is made and which make the largest drafts upon the protection of the country, should have been relieved from the burden. In other words, I would have voted most cheerfully for anything that approximated most closely to an income tax, and I, therefore, was very anxious that that feature, the tax on corporations, should be maintained; but that will not hinder me from voting for the bill.

But, Mr. President, when it comes to voting for $300,000,000 of bonds, and those bonds to be made the basis for the issue of paper money, of which the Senator from Indiana has complained, then I shall hesitate about voting for it. I do not say that I will not, but it will make me pause when I consider the consequences. In the first place, we have not got to that point where we need to borrow a dollar in the world or to have any further issue of greenbacks or obligations of bonds, and when we consider the condition of our adversary, when we know there is neither money nor credit in Spain, and when we consider the unbounded resources of this country and the matters of taxation which have not been even considered by the committee, I think we should hesitate to do either.

I do not know whether or not the coinage of the seigniorage of silver which has been adopted by the Senate will be kept in the bill by the conferees. If the gentlemen representing the Senate are faithful to their trust, they will stand square upon that proposition so far as they can and not defeat the bill; but unfortunately the matter will not be in the hands of its friends, and I do not know whether that measure will at last be a part of the bill when it has been decided upon or not; but at any rate we have now a taxation provided for in the bill which makes it unnecessary to issue any bonds at all, and certainly it will be unnecessary to do so before we meet here on the 5th of next December.

It seems to me that there are some persons who are very much more anxious to get a bond issue than to conduct the war at all. Gentlemen who were the most reluctant to be pulled into a war with Spain now are the foremost champions of a bonded debt on this country. I recollect something that I read a great while ago in Thomas Jefferson, when he said that a debt which looked far into the future was a swindle upon our posterity; and I quite agreed with him when I read it, and I agree with him now. We have no right to do that. We used in his day for prosecuting war simply Treasury notes, and he even opposed them unless a sufficient tax was laid to speedily redeem them.

Mr. President, I do not, so far as I am concerned, feel like taking up the time of the Senate. I have not taken any of it at all up to this moment, and I would not have occupied the floor this long if I had not happened to have heard the speech of the Senator from Indiana.

I can only repeat that I see no necessity for a bond issue, and I will not vote for it. I should be willing to vote for a greenback issue if it were necessary, but I see no necessity for that before we meet in December. I can, however, assure the Senator from Indiana and any other gentleman who doubts the loyalty of the silver people or their desire to see the war ended successfully and gloriously that no man on this side of the Chamber feels any less interest in that than he does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I do not desire to make any extended remarks. I merely wish to say a few words, as much in explanation as otherwise, for the reason that I made a speech at length upon the questions involved in this bill a few days since, and I do not wish to reiterate what I then said.

The debate on this amendment has assumed rather an acute form. I look upon it as a practical question whether we shall, for the purposes of war, issue interest-bearing bonds or greenbacks and Treasury certificates in lieu of those bonds.

I do not see the necessity for issuing interest-bearing bonds, and I think after the revenue arising under this bill has been collected, if there is a deficit and there should be trouble in regard to getting the balance of the money, it would be relieved through that now on hand. It can not occur before Congress assembles next December, and if it should become absolutely necessary for us to issue bonds, then there would be ample time. I do not wish to set a precedent, simply because there is a war on hand, of issuing bonds for the purpose of meeting that indebtedness growing out of it.

The question has assumed a practical form as to whether we shall issue bonds or greenbacks and Treasury certificates. While I am not one of those men who blindly believes in the decision of the Supreme Court touching the constitutionality of legal-tender greenbacks, yet a war is upon us, and I think it is no time now, while war is flagrant, to hesitate and higggle over the question, while the decision of the Supreme Court stares us in the face, saying we have a constitutional right to issue them and that they are legal tender. I do not wish to speak to any point in the bill other than this one, having heretofore spoken upon the general principles involved in it.

Mr. President, there are exigencies in public affairs which at times greatly embarrass public men, compelling them to support measures for the public relief which do not accord in all respects to their ideas of constitutional rights, nor of policy. I do not believe in the power or propriety of making the Federal Treasury a bank of issue, without the ordinary safeguards of banking—issuing notes—whether called certificates or greenbacks, and compelling their acceptance in discharge of obligations as a full legal tender.

Yet the Supreme Court has affirmed their constitutionality, and so long as the highest judicial authority of the country maintains their constitutionality, we must recognize its finality, and there can be no constitutional reason assigned for not increasing their volume. If disaster follows an oversupply, the responsibility must rest with the Supreme Court, who, by its greenback decision, may possibly have provided a remedy to meet the embarrassment which follows its income-tax decision, and which deprives the Congress of the power to levy upon wealth that taxation which now must otherwise fall with heavy incidence on consumption.

Submitting to both, without approving either decision, I shall support, as a war measure, an increase of Treasury notes as a means of relieving the people from an increase of taxation, and, since the incomes of wealth are to be exempted, I shall hesitate to support an increase of taxes so long as we have the authority of the Supreme Court to issue Treasury notes. I hope yet to see the Treasury restored to its true constitutional function of collecting and disbursing the revenues, and all property subjected to taxation.

This would perhaps be regarded by some modern so-called progressive statesmen as taking a step backward, but, Mr. President, those of us who reverence the plain and economical teaching of "the fathers" and strive to follow in the paths they blazed out in our political highway are averse to enslaving by mortgaging to bondholders the energies and liberties of the present and coming generations. Were this substitute to the committee's amendment to become a law it can not well be doubted that the bonds issued under it would pursue the usual course of such financial products and in due time be converted into gold-paying credits. I am against such bondage and shall try to avert it.

These are the views I entertain, Mr. President, stated in a nutshell, in regard to this question, which has now assumed, as I said, the practical and acute form as to whether we are to have bonds or whether we are to have greenbacks and Treasury notes for war purposes, under the decisions of the Supreme Court, as a substitute. I prefer the latter and for the reasons I have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, upon which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. ALLISON answered to their names.

Mr. ELKINS. What are we voting on?

Mr. ALDRICH. For bonds.

Mr. ELKINS. Let the question be stated.

Mr. FRYE. The roll call has commenced, and there have been responses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll call has commenced, and there have been responses. The Secretary will continue the calling of the roll.

The calling of the roll was resumed.

Mr. KENNEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. He being absent and I not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MASON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. I see he is absent, and I therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. ALLEN (when Mr. TURNER's name was called). The junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If the junior Senator from Washington were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. I am advised by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] that if he were present he would vote "nay." Therefore I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MONEY. I will state that my colleague [Mr. SULLIVAN] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] was called from the Chamber a few moments since. I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLAURIN] that he transfer his pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] to the Senator from Utah. Then the Senator from North Carolina can vote.

Mr. McLAURIN. That is agreeable to me, and I vote "nay."

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] stands paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. The former Senator would vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. BUTLER. I suggest to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] that we transfer our pairs and both vote. That will protect the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], as he will stand paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON].

Mr. WARREN. That is agreeable to me, and I vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER. I vote "nay."

The Secretary recapitulated the vote.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that in my absence a pair was arranged for me with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. I wish to announce that had the pair not been arranged, which I propose now to observe, I should have voted "nay."

Mr. MASON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN]. The Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] is paired with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. We desire to transfer the pair, so that each of us may vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CANNON. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—45.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Hoar,	Platt, Conn.
Allison,	Faulkner,	Kyle,	Platt, N. Y.
Baker,	Foraker,	Lindsay,	Sewell,
Barrows,	Frye,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Caffery,	Gallinger,	McBride,	Spooner,
Carter,	Genr,	McMillan,	Warren,
Chandler,	Gorman,	Mason,	Wetmore,
Clark,	Gray,	Mitchell,	Wilson,
Cullom,	Hale,	Morrill,	Wolcott,
Davis,	Hanna,	Murphy,
Deboe,	Hansbrough,	Nelson,
Elkins,	Hawley,	Perkins,

NAYS—31.

Allen,
Bacon,
Bate,
Berry,
Butler,
Cannon,
Chilton,
Clay,

Cockrell,
Daniel,
Harris,
Heitfeld,
Jones, Ark.
Jones, Nev.
McEnery,
McLaurin,

Mantle,
Martin,
Mills,
Money,
Pasco,
Pettigrew,
Pettus,
Rawlins,

Roach,
Stewart,
Teller,
Turley,
Turpie,
Vest,
White.

NOT VOTING—13.

Kenney,
Mallory,
Morgan,
Penrose,

Pritchard,
Proctor,
Quay,
Smith,

Sullivan,
Thurston,
Tillman,
Turner,

Wellington.

So Mr. ALDRICH's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I now move that the section as amended be substituted for sections 27 and 28 of the House bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. That completes the committee amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Sections 27 and 28 are stricken out, and the amended matter inserted in their stead.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the last paragraph, prior to the last section, it is proposed to insert:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States not to commit the country more thoroughly to the gold standard, but that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to secure and maintain the use of silver as well as gold as standard money, with the free coinage of both under a system of bimetalism which will insure the parity in value of the coins of the two metals, furnish a sufficient volume of metallic money, and give immunity to the world of trade from violent fluctuations in exchange.

Mr. STEWART. I move to amend the amendment just read by striking out, in line 7, all after the word "will" down to and including the word "metals," and adding at the end of the amendment:

Therefore, no bonds issued under the provisions of this act shall be used as a basis of bank currency.

This amendment, if attached to the bill, would be contradictory if it were not amended. In the first place, it is not the sole and exclusive purpose of bimetalism to secure parity between metals. Parity is not a condition precedent to bimetalism; it is a condition subsequent. It followed, when we have had equal coinage laws for both, for thousands of years. It should not be put as a condition precedent and a paramount consideration.

Besides, the amendment declares that it is not the purpose or the policy of the Government to commit the country more thoroughly to the single gold standard, but the bill provides for the issuance of bonds, which is part of the scheme of the single gold standard. Bonds are to be issued to be used for bank circulation, with a view of retiring greenbacks and all other Government money and issuing bank circulation, to be expanded or contracted as suits the speculative purposes of the banks or those interested.

The issuance of bonds is a part of the scheme devised by the Indianapolis convention, and also its sister scheme devised and presented to the country by the Secretary of the Treasury. This bill provides for the issuance of bonds, to be used for bank circulation, in order that they may dispense with greenbacks and silver certificates and more thoroughly commit the country to the single gold standard. The bill as it now stands is a part of the scheme more thoroughly to commit the country to the gold standard, and it would stultify Congress to say that it was not the policy to do the thing which they are actually doing in the bill under consideration.

Then there is another thing about this. It says that it is not the policy of the Government to commit the country more thoroughly to the gold standard. I am aware that the Republican party—the gold party—have attained great success by saying one thing and doing another, by saying they were for bimetalism and continually legislating for monometallism. They have done that for the last twenty years—a policy of duplicity—and to put squarely, fairly, boldly this palpable falsehood into a statute it seems to me is out of place, and I will not vote for it.

I should like to vote against more thoroughly committing the country to the single gold standard, but I do not want to vote for it in a bill which is designed for that purpose, declaring we mean one thing and doing another. So if we do not intend that this shall be used for the purpose of carrying out the scheme of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Indianapolis convention, we should provide that the bonds issued under it shall not be used as a basis for national bank circulation. That will help some. It certainly ought to go that far. To say it is your policy to do one thing and then to go on consistently and continually doing another has already raised a strong suspicion against candor and fair play, if not the common honesty of the goldbug party.

Mr. MORGAN obtained the floor.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the amendment of the Senator from Nevada be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Alabama permit the amendment to the amendment to be stated?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in line 7, to strike out the words "insure the parity in value of the coins of the two metals," and insert at the end of the resolution "that no bonds issued under the provisions of this act shall be used as a basis of bank currency."

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to make a few observations on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada, but before doing so, I have an amendment which I wish to propose to the bill, and I ask that it may be read and printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following as new sections:

SEC. —. The Secretary of the Treasury is required to proceed with the assessment and collection of taxes imposed by sections 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, and 37 of the "Act to reduce taxation, provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 28, 1894.

SEC. —. If the Secretary of the Treasury omits or refuses to proceed with the assessment and collection of any of the taxes imposed by any of the sections of said act of 1894 that are hereinbefore mentioned by their numbers, it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to institute proceedings in a circuit court of the United States against the Secretary of the Treasury to compel him to perform the duties in that behalf that are imposed upon him by this act.

And if the Attorney-General shall omit or refuse to institute such proceeding on the application, in writing, of any person who is liable to pay any tax imposed by this act, such person is authorized to institute such proceedings in any circuit court of the United States, in the name of the United States of America, to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to execute the mandate of this act. And an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States may be taken by the unsuccessful party in such proceeding, which shall be advanced upon the docket of said court and heard with all convenient speed.

No costs shall be taxed against the petitioner in any such proceeding, and no such proceeding shall abate in consequence of the death or resignation of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall be revived, on motion, against his successor in office.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have in my own mind, and I think everybody in the Senate has, a forecast of the result which has just been realized in the vote to issue bonds for the purpose of raising money to carry on the war, it is said. I am not at all disappointed in the result. I am only surprised that it has been reached quite as soon as it has been. None of those opposed to the issue of bonds at this time in preference to the issuance of greenbacks or the coinage of silver or the collection of taxes under the amendment which I propose, and which has just been read, has undertaken in the slightest degree to delay legislation which we consider to be fatal to the best interests and rights of this country.

I have been concerned to know who it was that was really moving in this matter, what particular interest or power in the United States it was or is that has compelled the Congress of the United States to transfer the control of money that is to be used in conducting the war with Spain into the hands of some particular syndicate or some particular establishment in this country. I have had no doubt at all from the beginning that these men intended to exploit the financial part of the war for the purposes of private gain. I have no observations to make upon the patriotism of a course like that. The world will make its deductions, and the men who are engaged in it are so far beyond reproach and so far out of the reach of the ordinary sensibilities which belong to honorable American citizenship that they will do anything in order to make money out of the people in peace or in war. They will use the power of this Government, under all circumstances and on all occasions, to coin money out of the laboring and industrial classes of the community.

I wish to call attention to an editorial in the New York Shipping and Commercial List and New York Price Current, dated May 18, 1898, first stating, as I think I am perfectly authorized to do, that that is a very enlightened and able newspaper and that it is a sincerely honest one in all the statements that it makes. It is a paper that can be credited in the statement of any fact that it brings to the attention of the American people. This paper is in favor of the issue of bonds and opposed to the issue of greenbacks. It is opposed to the free coinage of silver, and opposed, also, to the coinage of the silver that is now in the Treasury of the United States, falsely denominated seigniorage. I will read the editorial:

A DEMAND FOR WAR BONDS—SHIPMENTS OF CURRENCY TO THIS CITY TO PAY FOR THEM.

Numbers of national banks have been applying to the Comptroller of the Currency in advance to have bank notes printed for them in anticipation of purchasing war bonds, by deposit of which the new notes will be secured. Charles G. Dawes, Comptroller of the Currency, said last week that the Bureau of Engraving and Printing was actively printing bank notes in anticipation of the demand. The applications have come from all sections of the country and the understanding is pretty general that bonds will eventually be issued.

Some of the local banks have been making arrangements to take bonds for themselves or their correspondents, and there have been shipments of currency to this city intended to pay for bonds. It was pointed out yesterday by a local bank officer that the out-of-town banks will fare better by sending in their applications for bonds direct to Washington than by subscribing for them through their New York correspondents, as the loan is to be a popular one, which it will be the intention of the Government to have taken in all parts of the country.

There is a full, candid, and sincere exposure of the bottom facts in all of this conspiracy against the people of the United States. I am not quoting the fulminations of some blatant man who puts forward his opinions for the purpose of influencing legislation in Congress, but a man of responsibility who states facts. The facts are that the printing office of the Government has already been put to work for the purpose of stuffing up the different avenues of national demand with bank notes in anticipation of the vote that the Senate and House are going to give for the issue of these bonds.

We have come to the point where we take the choice between fastening upon the people of the United States—I am talking about the taxpayers now—an obligation under these bonds which will give to the national banks the power to handle all of the finances to be employed in the conduct of this war. We have come to the point where the alternative is presented whether we will avail ourselves of the actual resources we have in hand under the tax laws that exist and have not been repealed and have not been decided against by the Supreme Court of the United States, I will say now, and by the silver produced in our mines and the silver that is already the property of the United States and in the Treasury, and the resources of taxation upon a great many different industries that have been left entirely unnoticed and untouched in this bill, which would yield ample taxation for all the purposes of the war, and increase legal-tender paper money, whose character has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States on various occasions, and has not been disputed by a judicial tribunal in the United States, taking off the restriction that limits the issue of those notes to $946,000,000 and raise it to about $500,000,000, and thereby get an abundance of the same kind of paper, or whether we shall issue these bonds, which are already destined to become the basis of national banking, through which the people will have to pay to the national banks a very large amount of premium for the purpose of getting from them money to carry on the war.

Now, sir, what is a national bank? It is an incorporation created by the Government of the United States, authorized to issue bills to circulate as money upon the basis of the bonded debt of the United States. They put up no money except in the purchase of the bonds, upon which they draw the regular allowance of interest, while the bond is at work as the basis also of an issue of 90 per cent of their face value as money that the national banks handle by loaning out to the people.

I do not think that a more favored institution could exist in any country in the world, and, so far as I am able to judge of their effect now upon the circulation of the country, I do not think there is one which has ever existed in this country that is of less use. Who has seen a national-bank note in the last month? What money are we using in all the transactions of life? What money are our salaries paid with and the salary of every officer of the Government of the United States? Silver certificates. There is no other money actually in circulation but a very few greenbacks and a large mass of silver certificates. The national banks have retired from the field of circulation because they can find at the present time, or have found hitherto, a better use for their money than to circulate it in the forms of bills issued by the Government of the United States. They operate upon the credit of the Government. They are allowed great privileges. The amounts of money that they have piled up in their reserve funds are to-day almost incalculable. The wealth that they have harvested out of the people of the United States exceeds that of any other establishment of a like kind that ever existed in any other country in the world.

The national banks have piled up their wealth and increased their numbers and have extended their power and influence until they are a solid corporation from the heart of the city of New York through almost every city and town in the United States. Such a financial combination never existed in the world. It is stronger to-day than the 125,000 to 150,000 men who are in the field bearing arms under the flag of the United States. It has more power. It can do more to control the destiny of this country than those 150,000 soldiers can ever be able to do. They issue their bills. Are they required to redeem them? Not at all. The Government of the United States is required to redeem those bills and they are merely required to put up a small percentage of their money to create a fund in the Treasury of the United States that shall stand ready for the redemption of those bills.

There is not a dollar of gold or silver that is required to be kept on deposit in the Treasury of the United States or in the vault of any bank for the redemption of any of these notes. In fact, the whole duty and responsibility of their redemption comes directly upon the Government of the United States by the operation of law.

Then what is a national-bank note? It is a bill that is issued upon the credit of the United States, to be redeemed by the United States. But it is issued into the hands of a bank that has the privilege, I will say in my State, of using it at 8 per cent per annum of lawful interest, and the other privileges which belong to banking institutions of raising that 8 per cent interest obligation as high as 16 and sometimes 24 per cent in a single year.

Who must pay the national banks for this enormous amount of usury that is filched out of the people in the name of the United States and on the credit of the Government of the United States? What else is it but fiat money, authorized by the Government of the United States to be limited to the extent of 90 per cent of the bonds which may be held by a national bank?

How does it compare with the greenback note in these respects? A greenback note is the obligation of the Government of the United States redeemable in coin, redeemable, of course, at the Treasury of the United States. The national-bank note is an obligation of the United States redeemable at the pleasure of the Government of the United States, or when presented for redemption, in other money of the United States. Not even coin is required. It is required to be redeemed in greenbacks.

Now, let us contrast this to pieces of paper which circulate as money, and let us ascertain upon the honest statement of the facts which is fiat money. In what respect do they differ from each other? In no respect in the world except that the national-bank notes are turned over to these corporations with the privilege of using them for the purpose of discounting the paper of the people and repeating the discount from month to month or some other period, making out of the people of the United States interest and usury in the use of the credit of the Government.

Now, why shall we give to the national banks the exclusive use of this credit of $300,000,000 or $600,000,000 to be used in this war time? What advantage have they in their redeemability or their respectability or in any other regard over the greenback issues of the United States? What are they, when brought to the last analysis, but the promise of the Government of the United States that they shall circulate as money and shall be redeemed by the Government of the United States?

Mr. President, we understand the whole affair by referring to the facts stated in this newspaper which I have just read. There is not a Senator on this floor who can deny or who will undertake to deny those facts. I assume, sir, that they are absolutely true, and that this scheme of legislation is intended to corral this $600,000,000, because that is what it amounts to, not as the amendment of the Senate is, but the bill of the House. They intend to corral the $600,000,000 in the hands of the national banks of the United States, already prepared to take the whole of it, and they will use it for the purpose of speculation upon the necessities of the people, soldiers and producers alike.

Sir, I presume there never before was a government that permitted itself to be ridden by such an incubus. I do not believe that there is another government in this world which has the cowardice to permit its credit and its financial power to be used in the scheme that is now developed into a vote by the Senate of the United States on this afternoon. That is what I wanted to say about it, and all I want to say.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to lay the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] to the amendment upon the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to lay the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada to the amendment on the table. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. WOLCOTT. On that let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. BACON. I ask that the amendment to the amendment be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out of the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire the words "insure the parity in value of the coins of the two metals," and at the end of the amendment to insert the words, "Therefore no bonds issued under the provisions of this act shall be used as a basis of bank currency;" so that, if amended, the amendment would read:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States not to commit the country more thoroughly to the gold standard, but that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to secure and maintain the use of silver as well as gold as standard money, with the free coinage of both under a system of bimetalism which will furnish a sufficient volume of metallic money, and give immunity to the world of trade from violent fluctuations in exchange. Therefore no bonds issued under this act shall be used as a basis of bank currency.

Mr. STEWART. I ask leave to modify the amendment to the amendment by leaving off the last provision. I think it a very serious matter to vote to lay it on the table. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, I wish to make a few remarks before he makes the motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. Of course I withdraw the motion if the Senator insists upon debating it. I had not supposed, however, that there was a single Senator in the Chamber who wished to cast a vote against maintaining the parity of the coins of both metals or would refuse to express a willingness to have the parity maintained of the coins of both metals under a safe system of bimetallism. Therefore I will withdraw the motion, but I hope the Senator will be brief.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to explain it, because I think it a very serious matter to make such a motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw the motion with pleasure, but I hope the Senator will be brief.

Mr. STEWART. I shall not be particularly brief, because it is very important. There will not be any trouble about that.

Mr. CHANDLER. I noticed that the Senator had in his hand a very new and able work on money, written by himself, and it is open at the first page. I was afraid that the Senator might make a long speech.

Mr. STEWART. Very well. I will gratify the Senator by reading from it. I do intend to read from it. I shall read from one of the standard authors.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to lay on the table is withdrawn. The Senator from Nevada will proceed.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I will read the chapter on bimetallism. It is as follows:

BIMETALLISM.

The indiscriminate use of gold and silver for coinage into standard money is the use of the two metals for the single purpose of creating money, and not for the purpose of creating a double standard of money. The money of one metal has precisely the same functions in its debt-paying and purchasing power as the money of the other. It is a mistake to suppose that the exclusive use of one metal for the time being, because the other is not equally available, creates a single standard of gold or of silver. The right to coin and use the metal which is cheapest, at the option of the debtor, is the cardinal result of bimetallism. There is no more difference in the functions of the money that different metals produce than there would be in the functions of steam, whether generated by wood or coal. In the former case it is one money; in the latter it is one steam.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator give us the name of the standard author from whom he is reading?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly. The book is entitled "Analysis of the Functions of Money, by WILLIAM M. STEWART, United States Senator from Nevada." I regard it as about the highest authority.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me.

Mr. STEWART. Please do not interrupt me now.

Parity between the two metals has nothing to do with bimetallism, but parity between the volume of money in circulation and the property for sale is of paramount importance. As long as the supply of money and the property for sale bear the same ratio to each other, the parity which equity and justice require is preserved. The coincidence of parity between the two metals during all the ages previous to 1873, when both had unlimited coinage, has led people to suppose that parity is a condition precedent to bimetallism and not a condition subsequent, produced by equal coinage laws for both metals. The reason why bimetallism produces parity is very plain. If a certain amount of money can be coined out of a given quantity of silver and a like amount can be coined out of a given quantity of gold, such given quantity of silver and such given quantity of gold each represents the same amount of coin, and there can be no difference whatever in their value.

If it is more convenient to obtain a dollar by the coinage of 25.8 grains of standard gold than by the coinage of 412½ grains of standard silver, gold will be used for that purpose; and if a dollar can be more readily obtained by the coinage of silver, then silver will be used for that purpose. When either of the two metals becomes dearer than the other, the entire demand falls on the cheaper metal until the increased demand raises the value of that metal equal to or in excess of the value of the other, the cheaper metal being always in demand in preference to the dearer. Their relative value is thereby automatically equalized.

The relative production of the two metals for the last four hundred years illustrates the fact that under the equal coinage of both their relative quantities have nothing to do with their parity. From the discovery of America to 1803, according to Von Humboldt, there were 44 ounces of silver produced to every ounce of gold, and at no time during that whole period would an ounce of gold buy more than 15½ ounces of silver. From 1803 to 1850 there were about 35 ounces of silver to 1 ounce of gold produced, and still an ounce of gold would buy just 15½ ounces of silver, no more, no less. From 1850 to 1873 there were only 6 ounces of silver to 1 ounce of gold produced; and yet an ounce of gold continued to buy 15½ ounces of silver. At the last-named date the United States and various European countries commenced closing their mints to silver, until the right of the depositors of silver bullion to have it coined into money was denied by the entire western world.

Since 1873 the production of silver bullion has been a little less than 16 ounces to 1 ounce of gold, while an ounce of gold will now buy between 22 and 30 ounces of silver. It will be observed that it was the option of the debtor to have either metal coined for his use in payment of debts which maintained the parity. It will also be observed that it was the closing of the mints which took away that option and transferred the coinage demand, which both metals had supplied, to gold alone which has created the present disparity.

The only parity which interests mankind is that parity which exists between money and commodities. The parity between silver and commodities has remained substantially stationary. Four hundred and twelve and a half grains of standard silver will buy very nearly as much of all things in general to-day as 412½ grains of standard silver or 25.8 grains of standard gold would have bought twenty-five years ago, but 25.8 grains of standard gold to-day will buy more than twice as much property in general as they would have bought a quarter of a century ago. The disparity between money and property, created by the disuse of silver, has depreciated all kinds of property, caused stagnation in business, and produced universal distress. It is the greatest calamity that has afflicted the human race for more than five hundred years. The bondholders, annuitants, and others enjoying fixed incomes are being unjustly benefited by this monetary revolution at the expense of all other classes of society.

Thus it is shown that open mints for the unlimited coinage of all the gold and all the silver brought to them to be converted into money without limitation or discrimination against either, and the right of the debtor to pay his debts and taxes in the coin of either metal at his option, is bimetallism.

In preceding pages it was shown that money is the creation of law, and that every sovereign State may create full legal-tender money by the use of metal, paper, or any other suitable material upon which to stamp or print the sovereign mandate.

It may be asked, if paper will answer the same purpose as the precious metals, why not use paper and avoid the cost of mining for gold and silver? The reply is that the precious metals, so long as the mines are reasonably productive, furnish a more reliable, stable, and certain method of regulating the volume of money than any rule or theory advanced for limiting or regulating such volume by legislative enactment. Gold and silver have been used as money metals since prehistoric times. When the mines were productive, ancient civilization developed; and when the mines were exhausted, barbarism followed the shrinking volume of money with as much certainty as night followed day.

In the zenith of her power Rome had, according to the estimate of W. Jacob, F. R. S., and the historian Gibbon, about $1,800,000,000 of gold and silver coin in actual circulation. The mines became exhausted, and the production of the precious metals for about fourteen hundred years was very limited. The supply of gold and silver in the country which had comprised the Roman Empire was reduced during that long money famine from eighteen hundred millions to less than one hundred and fifty millions, and the descendants of the warriors and statesmen of the great and glorious civilization which was strangled by fourteen hundred years of contraction became feudal slaves and were sold with the land.

Modern civilization had its origin in the discoveries of gold and silver in Mexico and South America. The supply of the two metals was continuous for about three hundred years, and a new civilization was created. At the beginning of the present century the Spanish-American wars created a money famine by interrupting mining in Mexico and South America. From 1810 to 1850 all Europe was disturbed by anarchy and civil war, and afflicted by poverty and want. The United States was relieved to a great extent from the horrors of the money famine, in the first half of the present century, by the great Mississippi Valley, in which our generous Government gave a farm to every man who would take, occupy, and improve it. Millions of hardy pioneers from Europe sought homes in the marvelous valley of the West, bringing with them their money and their belongings, and by their labor and enterprise added enormously to the prosperity of the United States, and mitigated in this country the miseries of the money famine which sorely afflicted the people of the Old World.

The gold from California and Australia marked a new era in the progress of civilization, set in motion the productive agencies of the human race, revived commerce, stimulated learning and science, inspired invention, and was the means of accumulating greater wealth in twenty-five years than in any preceding century. The automatic rule of allowing the volume of the circulating medium to be regulated by the supply of the two metals worked to perfection. When there was a slight decrease in the output of gold, the discovery of the great Comstock lode revived silver mining throughout the world; and if the product of both metals had been used according to the laws of the better days of the Republic and the universal custom for thousands of years, there would have been no shrinkage of the volume of money, no increase in the purchasing power of dollars, or decrease in the value of property, and the progress and prosperity of the wonderful period of human advancement between 1850 and 1873 would have been indefinitely continued.

The power of the Government to create money by the use of paper is undoubted, but the experiment of a proper limitation of the volume of money by human laws, without the automatic rule of regulating that volume by nature's supply of the two metals, is yet untried. The apprehension that an undertaking by the Government to substitute legislation for the automatic rule of regulating the volume of money might result in ruinous inflation or destructive contraction is at present an insurmountable obstacle to dispensing with the use of gold and silver.

The abandonment of the automatic rule by the demonetization of silver has created a necessity for further action. If only gold is to be used, the certainty in such case of reestablishing feudal slavery in Europe and America and destroying every vestige of free institutions ought to induce all intelligent and patriotic citizens to make a desperate effort to free themselves from the chains of financial bondage. If silver is deprived of its money functions, gold must share the same fate, and paper must be substituted for both to rescue civilization from decay.

The experiment of abandoning the precious metals for use as money is so full of doubt and danger and the gold standard is such an ominous precursor of ruin and destruction that an intelligent people fear to adopt either alternative. This momentous question is brought to the attention of the people by the grinding effect of continually falling prices. They compare the prosperity their ancestors enjoyed while the mints were open to both metals, and the opportunities which then existed for acquiring comfort and independence, with the bankruptcy, want, and poverty of all who are now so unfortunate as to depend upon productive enterprises for a livelihood. They are certain of relief if they reverse the legislation which caused their calamities and reenact the coinage laws of Jefferson and Hamilton. They must take the Constitution and the uniform custom for thousands of years for their guide if they would find the way to relief.

It is the common plea of the goldites that we must have one dollar as good as another; that we must have parity; and they get us committed to the proposition that we must have parity. Then they say, you can not have parity; there is no such parity; the silver bullion in a dollar is not worth more than half as much as a gold dollar, and it has fallen 50 per cent. You talk about parity, and say "we will coin the silver when it gets at a parity; we are willing you should do it, if you only have parity; that is all we ask."

I do not want to vote for a proposition which makes it necessary to have parity precede bimetallism, because if you admit that in any possible form it will come right back to you. If you admit parity must precede bimetallism, you never can have bimetallism, because it was the closing of the mints that produced the disparity. If 16 grains of silver will buy as much as 1 grain of gold, coined into as much, then you have parity.

Now, bimetallism never was parity. Exact parity is where there is no difference in exchange or anything else; where the metals can be coined at the same mint. But then it is more convenient to get one metal than the other. Sometimes the production of one is greater than the other, and that will bring the cheaper metal up, because the entire demand falls upon it. Parity has followed bimetallism, it has followed free coinage, through all time.

Now they say we must have it precede international bimetallism, which is an outrage, when we see what a terrible construction has been put upon this declaration in the act of 1890, in which the phrase was used "it being the established policy of the United States to maintain the parity between the two metals." Everyone supposed at the time the bill passed for the purchase of more silver that it had reference to that; that it would create a demand for silver, and bring about parity in that way. It was said that the only way we could bring about parity was to use the one metal entirely, to put the demand on gold, and use no silver at all. That is the way they wished to produce parity—not to use silver unless you could have a parity.

I appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire that his amendment will be stronger by leaving out that phrase, and it would express everything he intends to express if it be left out. He wants to declare a policy which is at variance with the bill, but it will be better if he leaves out the words "insure the parity in value of the coins of the two metals," and let it read "which will furnish a sufficient volume of metallic money." How do you know it will insure bimetalism? It is said by some that it will, and by others that it will not. There you have it. You have got a side issue to be fought out; and that has been one of the most troublesome issues we have ever had. When you admit you must have parity to precede bimetalism, you have given away your whole case, and I appeal to the Senator not to put such a vicious clause in the amendment. It will be just as strong without it, as it is very well worded. Let it read—

With the free coinage of both under a system of bimetalism which will furnish a sufficient volume of metallic money, and give immunity to the world of trade from violent fluctuations in exchange.

Some will say that bimetalism which will insure that is impossible; and there you are. That argument is made so frequently that I hate to vote for an amendment containing such phraseology; but I do not want to vote against it. I am for bimetalism which will insure honesty between debtor and creditor; which will insure parity between property and money.

It will be said that the United States can not do it alone, and some say that even with other nations we can not maintain parity. Whenever you take that position, you have got an element in your discussion which you can not overcome; it is pernicious; it is against bimetalism; it is an obstruction. I am opposed to the amendment in toto with that phrase in it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I renew the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to lay the amendment to the amendment on the table.

Mr. BACON. I understand in reality that there are two amendments here.

Mr. STEWART. I have withdrawn mine.

Mr. BACON. The last one?

Mr. STEWART. I have withdrawn the last one.

Mr. BACON. I was simply going to ask that the question be divided; but of course it is not necessary to do so if the Senator's amendment has been withdrawn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island moves to lay the amendment of the Senator from Nevada to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire on the table.

Mr. STEWART. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MARTIN. I inquire if the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. MARTIN. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BUTLER (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I will withdraw my vote, as I have a pair with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—44.

Aldrich,	Clark,	Foraker,	Hansbrough,
Allison,	Cullom,	Frye,	Hawley,
Bacon,	Davis,	Gallinger,	Hoar,
Burrows,	Deboe,	Gear,	Lindsay,
Caffery,	Elkins,	Gorman,	Lodge,
Carter,	Fairbanks,	Gray,	McBride,
Chandler,	Faulkner,	Hanna,	McMillan,

Mason,
Mills,
Morrill,
Murphy,

Nelson,
Perkins,
Platt, Conn.
Pritchard,

Proctor,
Sewell,
Shoup,
Spooner,

Thurston,
Wetmore,
Wilson,
Wolcott.

Allen,
Bate,
Berry,
Cannon,
Chilton,
Clay,
Cockrell,

Daniel,
Harris,
Heitfeld,
Jones, Ark.
McEnery,
McLaurin,
Mallory,

Money,
Pettigrew,
Pettus,
Rawlins,
Roach,
Stewart,
Sullivan,

Teller,
Tillman,
Turley,
Turpie,
Vest,
White.

NAYS—27.

NOT VOTING—18.

Baker,
Butler,
Hale,
Jones, Nev.
Kenney,

Kyle,
Mantle,
Martin,
Mitchell,
Morgan,

Pasco,
Penrose,
Platt, N. Y.
Quay,
Smith,

Turner,
Warren,
Wellington.

So the motion to lay on the table the amendment of Mr. STEWART to the amendment of Mr. CHANDLER was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the amendment by adding to it what I send to the desk. Perhaps the Senator from New Hampshire will accept it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment the following:

And to this end to relax no effort to secure the cooperation of the principal commercial nations of the world.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BACON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask that the amendment be read as it will stand if the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as proposed to be amended will be read.

The SECRETARY. If amended as proposed the amendment would read:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States not to commit the country more thoroughly to the gold standard, but that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to secure and maintain the use of silver as well as gold as standard money, with the free coinage of both under a system of bimetalism which will insure the parity in value of the coins of the two metals, furnish a sufficient volume of metallic money, and give immunity to the world of trade from violent fluctuations in exchange, and to this end to relax no effort to secure the cooperation of the principal commercial nations of the world.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 35, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Aldrich,
Allison,
Burrows,
Carter,
Chandler,
Clark,
Cullom,
Davis,
Deboe,

Fairbanks,
Foraker,
Frye,
Gear,
Hanna,
Hansbrough,
Hawley,
Hoar,
Kyle,

Lodge,
McBride,
McMillan,
Mason,
Mills,
Morrill,
Nelson,
Perkins,
Pritchard,

Proctor,
Sewell,
Shoup,
Spooner,
Thurston,
Wetmore,
Wilson,
Wolcott.

NAYS—33.

Allen,
Bacon,
Bate,
Berry,
Cannon,
Chilton,
Clay,
Daniel,
Gallinger,

Harris,
Heitfeld,
Jones, Ark.
Jones, Nev.
McEnery,
McLaurin,
Mallory,
Mantle,
Martin,

Mitchell,
Money,
Pasco,
Pettigrew,
Pettus,
Rawlins,
Roach,
Stewart,
Sullivan,

Teller,
Tillman,
Turley,
Turpie,
Vest,
White.

NOT VOTING—21.

Baker,
Butler,
Caffery,
Cockrell,
Elkins,
Faulkner,

Gorman,
Gray,
Hale,
Kenney,
Lindsay,
Morgan,

Murphy,
Penrose,
Platt, Conn.
Platt, N. Y.
Quay,
Smith,

Turner,
Warren,
Wellington.

So the amendment of Mr. HOAR to the amendment of Mr. CHANDLER was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire so as to make it read as follows:

And it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States not to commit the country more thoroughly to the gold standard, but that the efforts of the Government in all its branches should be steadily directed to secure and maintain the use of silver as well as gold as legal-tender money, with the free and unrestricted coinage of both at the present legal ratio, under the same conditions and limitations, in order to insure the parity in value of the coins of the two metals and to maintain at all times a volume of legal-tender money sufficient to meet the needs of increasing population and business.

Mr. STEWART. I will suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that he can improve that very much by striking a phrase from it. We are making a great mistake when we say we are doing this in order to secure parity. If you can not secure parity, that ends it. I would suggest to the Senator that with a slight change his amendment can be made a great deal stronger.

Mr. BUTLER. I will say to the Senator that this is the only way under high heaven to maintain the parity.

Mr. STEWART. We shall get no bimetalism under it. I should like to suggest an amendment which I think the Senator will accept.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will pardon me, I prefer not to change the phraseology, for it has been so worded for a good reason.

Mr. STEWART. Then I will move to amend the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina is not subject to further amendment, it being an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Then I shall vote against it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] for the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to lay the substitute on the table.

Mr. BUTLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. I suggest to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] that, if agreeable to him, we transfer our pairs. I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON] and he stands paired with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. WARREN. It is agreeable to me.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well. I vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—45.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Kyle,	Proctor,
Allison,	Foraker,	Lindsay,	Sewell,
Baker,	Frye,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	McBride,	Spooner,
Caffery,	Gear,	McMillan,	Thurston,
Carter,	Gorman,	Mason,	Warren,
Chandler,	Gray,	Mitchell,	Wetmore,
Clark,	Hale,	Morrill,	Wilson,
Cullom,	Hanna,	Nelson,	Wolcott,
Davis,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,
Deboe,	Hawley,	Platt, Conn.
Elkins,	Hoar,	Pritchard,

NAYS—33.

Allen,	Daniel,	Martin,	Teller,
Bacon,	Faulkner,	Money,	Tillman,
Bate,	Harris,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Berry,	Heitfeld,	Pettigrew,	Vest,
Butler,	Jones, Nev.	Pettus,	White,
Cannon,	McEnery,	Rawlins,
Chilton,	McLaurin,	Roach,
Clay,	Mallory,	Stewart,
Cockrell,	Mantle,	Sullivan,

NOT VOTING—11.

Jones, Ark.	Morgan,	Platt, N. Y.	Turner,
Kenney,	Murphy,	Quay,	Wellington.
Mills,	Penrose,	Smith,

So Mr. BUTLER's substitute was laid on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to amend by striking out the words "more thoroughly," in line 3; striking out the word "steadily," in line 4, and inserting "immediately;" striking out the words, in lines 6 and 7, "under a system of bimetalism which will insure the parity in value of the coins of the two metals," and insert the word "and" before the word "furnish," in line 8.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3 of the amendment it is proposed to strike out the words "more thoroughly;" in line 4 to strike out the word "steadily" and insert "immediately," and in line 6 and 7 to strike out the words "under a system of bimetalism which will insure the parity in value of the coins of the two metals" and insert the word "and;" so that if amended the amendment will read:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States not to commit the country to the gold standard, but that the efforts of the Government should be immediately directed to secure and maintain the use of silver as well as gold as standard money, with the free coinage of both, and furnish a sufficient volume of metallic money, and give immunity to the world of trade from violent fluctuations in exchange.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to lay the amendment to the amendment on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the amendment be again stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire to withdraw his motion for the time being, until I can explain the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw the motion with pleasure.

Mr. ALLEN. The amendments have considerable significance, as I believe. The first amendment is to strike out the words "more thoroughly." The amendment as offered by the Senator from New Hampshire has the vice in it that it implies, if it does not express, the thought that we are now on the gold standard, and I protest against that assumption. It says, "It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States not to commit the country more thoroughly to the gold standard." The country is not committed to the gold standard by statute. If it is committed to the gold standard at all, it is committed in violation of the statute, in open, flagrant violation of positive law, and as a bimetalist I protest that the amendment should not contain even an implication that we are on the gold standard.

The next amendment is, in line 4, "that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to secure and maintain the use of silver," etc. Now, the word "steadily" signifies many things. It does not mean that we are ever to accomplish or consummate bimetalism at a fixed and steady ratio, but that we are to steadily use our efforts to bring about bimetalism, which is not defined. There is not a man, woman, or child in the country who does not know what bimetalism means, and why should we not use language that means something—that we should immediately, without hesitation and without halting and without stammering on the question, use the efforts of every branch of the Government and of the whole Government to bring about bimetalism? It seems to me the effect of this is simply to postpone and to delay the consummation of bimetalism.

Then, in lines 6 and 7, it says:

With the free coinage of both, under a system of bimetalism which will insure the parity in value of the coins of the two metals.

It is inconceivable that two forms of money, having equal debt-paying and purchasing power, and having the function of legal tender, can exist in commerce without there being a parity between them. In other words, the commercial value of the material employed in the money or upon which the money function is stamped has nothing whatever to do with the parity of the dollar as money, and I do not myself want to be committed to the doctrine that we are to coin gold and silver on a commercial ratio or a commercial parity as it exists to-day, with one dishonored and demonetized and the other given twice its purchasing value in consequence of such demonetization.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to have the indulgence of the Senator from New Hampshire for a few moments on this question.

Mr. President, events have developed a new situation in the United States for which we have got to provide immediately, a very important one in its effect upon the currency of the United States. I am afraid that the Democrats, the silver men, on the Committee on Finance, which has been considering this bill, have not extended their observations so far as they ought to do, under the apprehension that if the silver question had been raised, as it really is in this country, upon the basis of the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, it would perhaps shock a political party in the other end of the Capitol to such an extent that the views of the Senate, which have been very often expressed in favor of the free coinage of silver at the ratio I have stated, would lead to antagonism at that end of the Capitol of such a character as to defeat the appropriations for the support of the war. I have not felt that the Republican party in the other end of the Capitol was amenable really to such an unpatriotic insinuation as that would be, that in order to resist the sentiment and will of the American people it would prevent any supplies being voted or provided by the Congress of the United States for the conduct of the war.

But now our relations with the outside world comprehend a new and peculiar condition in reference to the Spanish possessions in the Western Hemisphere and also in the East Indies. I suppose there is not a man in the Senate who could now get his consent that at the end of this war, if we should be successful in it, the Philippines, the Carolines, Cuba, and Puerto Rico should be brought back under Spanish dominion. I take it that a new form of government and a new form of sovereignty are to prevail in that vast area of country, which has from ten to eleven millions of population—almost as much as the entire peninsula of Spain—and which has had an enormous amount of trade with the United States in the past, and will have very much more trade in the future, for which we have to provide in some way.

Now, in all the Spanish possessions from Puerto Rico to the Philippines the standard money is silver, and the unit of money there is the peseta, a coin that corresponds in its weight and fineness exactly to the French franc. We find that the Spanish people consider themselves very well off indeed, very happy, when they can redeem their paper issues in these pesetas, and the financial difficulty that the Bank of Spain and the Spanish people are found in to-day is because of the fact that they have not enough silver with which to redeem their currency.

While this war is progressing, and when it comes to a close, also, we shall have a great deal to do, if we do not have absolute control of the various Spanish possessions which we are about to acquire, as I suppose, in some form or other, in establishing for them the basis of currency and trade. In order to build up Cuba again and put her in the commercial relations that she ought to hold with the United States—and the remark applies equally to the Philippines—we shall need a vast amount of silver. A consumption for the product of our mines has already begun. It is already established. It will not cease until all of the silver that we can produce in the American mines will be demanded for the purpose of facilitating trade in these Spanish possessions.

Now, why should we not at the present moment of time agree upon a standard, a ratio of coinage between silver and gold, in order that we may send into these countries a vast amount of our own currency, replacing the Spanish money in those countries, and thereby draw the trade of those islands toward our own warehouses and toward our own mercantile centers?

There never was a time when the United States had such a need for silver as it has now. If we want to occupy those islands, and we shall be compelled to do it for one or two or three or four years, until proper and reliable governments are established there, we shall be compelled to furnish currency to our own troops, to the people who trade with them, to our own merchants trading in that country, and to those enterprising people who will go down there for the purpose of reestablishing the industries of Cuba and Puerto Rico and the Philippines. We shall be compelled to supply them with money. With what money shall we supply them? The money they are accustomed to—silver money. That is the basis of all financial operations in those countries, and without in the slightest degree affecting the currency or the finances of the United States we have an extraordinary demand on our borders for the use of silver.

I think, sir, that if the Committee on Finance had taken a broad view of this question, they would have felt warranted in bringing up the silver question full front for decision, and they would not have contented themselves with taking a pinch out of it such as we have taken in the vote given here for the coinage of the seigniorage which is in the Treasury. There is nothing that the people of the United States will need next to the Army so much as silver currency to control the trade of these new acquisitions or these countries with which we hold commercial relations.

I desired to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to that subject, for, from the masterly way in which he treated the subject of finance the other morning, I am sure he will receive an impression of this kind and digest it, and he will see that in making provision for the future of the United States, in providing coins for our own use and for the use of our merchants and tradesmen, it is necessary to make a broad, sweeping provision in favor of silver.

It has been said for the last two or three years, rather reproachfully, against the friends of Cuba that they were making this agitation for the purpose of the remonetization of silver; that that was the object of all this Cuban agitation. That was no purpose of mine, Mr. President, in trying to convince the American people that they owed it to humanity and to their own honor to relieve the distresses of these poor, impoverished, and persecuted people in Cuba. Such thought never entered my mind, but the financiers and the capitalists of this country have forecast the result and seen that a war with Spain and the establishment of new relations with Cuba and the other Spanish possessions would necessarily create an enormous demand for silver, and they at once made the accusation against us in advance that that was our purpose.

Well, it was not our purpose, and yet I thank God that that is one of the results of this just and holy war. It is a result that gentlemen here who are concerned in trying to maintain a certain financial system in the United States can not avoid. It is coming upon us, and no argument was ever made, no vote was ever given in either House of Congress, that was more important in respect to the remonetization of silver than that argument which is being made by the guns that are firing to-day, I hope, upon Santiago de Cuba and which were fired recently in the Bay of Manila under Dewey.

Events are marching very much faster than we are going. We had as well give up the consideration of questions like this simply as they affect our internal affairs and relations, and take a view of what is outside of this country now going on and which we can not resist, and, sir, which we can not refuse to look at if we intend to make provision for the future of this country. I do not know whether the Philippine Islands are going to be annexed to the United States, or Cuba, or Puerto Rico, or Caroline, or Hawaii. I do not know what the future may be in regard to these things, but

I have stated one proposition to the Senate of the United States upon which every mind here concurs, and that is that these Spanish possessions can not go back under the control of the monarchy of Spain. Therefore some new provision has to be made, some new government has to be established, and the United States is bound to have a controlling influence in the government that will be established there.

Without committing myself at all as to the form of government which ought to be established there or the manner in which this question is to be solved after the war has closed, I can very readily see, and I think no man can fail to see, that during the progress of the war and in the progress of establishing or permitting to be established or encouraging the establishment of a government of a stable and good character in the former Spanish possessions we shall have an enormous control, and there is no place where we can begin it with so much success as in establishing in those countries our financial system. It must be our financial system. That is one of the elements of peace which must be prepared and secured before peace can ever be established between us and the Government of Spain. The Government of the United States must have the control of the financial destiny of those islands, and when we get the control of the finances of those islands we shall not need many troops nor any other forces in order to hold that sort of control which will make them valuable to this country and make them hereafter honorable in the family of the nations of the earth.

I wanted to call attention to the subject, because I am afraid the Senate has not looked at it seriously; and in my judgment it is the most important element to-day in the politics or in the policy of the United States of America that we should now lay here in the Government of the United States the foundations of that financial policy which must be above all other considerations the strongest tie that will bind us to those people or bind them to us. If we will furnish them with a sound finance; if we will teach them how to regulate their trade and their traffic, and thereby how to increase the production of the earth and the security of property and life, they will then possess all the essential elements of liberty, and it will take them but a very short time to grow up into a condition that will be the admiration of the world, and from which we will draw perhaps more honor for the instrumentalities in its establishment than we will have by all the battles that we shall fight and all the glory that we shall win on those fields.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, there is much force in the suggestions of the Senator from Alabama, that the introduction of this question may delay action upon this bill by reason of the fact that its provisions may not be acceptable to the other branch of Congress. I take kindly the suggestions of the Senator from Alabama to that effect.

It certainly would meet with opposition in the House of Representatives and also in this Chamber if it were to be seriously proposed that we should undertake the creation upon this bill of a financial system which is to prevail in Greater America, including the Philippine Islands, Hawaii, the West Indies, and all the other new possessions, which I take it for granted the Senator from Alabama, with his broad views as to American destiny, covets to be a part of the possessions of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, I am not willing to delay the consideration of this bill in order to take up the whole financial question of the present and of the future. In my remarks on Wednesday I stated that there ought to be as near an approach to unanimity as possible in connection with all parts of this bill. I stated my hope that, in connection with the bond provision of the bill, in connection with any provision for the coinage of silver upon the bill, the amendment which I offered would meet with substantially unanimous support. I framed the amendment so that I thought it ought to receive the unanimous assent of all but certain extreme gold monometallists of both parties in this Chamber.

Certainly I believe that we all ought to be against committing the country more thoroughly to the gold standard and to be in favor of the continued pursuit of bimetalism. I further believe, Mr. President, that according to the past profession of nearly every Senator in this chamber it is the desire of all that the free coinage of silver should be attended by a maintenance of the parity of the coins of both metals. I said on Wednesday, and I say now, that I do not know of any student of the money question on this floor, and I do not know any Senator upon this floor, whether a student of the money question or not, who is willing to admit that he is in favor of destroying the parity between the coins of the two metals through the free coinage of silver or any other coinage of silver.

Therefore, Mr. President, I was surprised at the very large vote given by Senators in favor of striking out the clause declaring that we hope for free coinage under a system of bimetalism which would maintain the parity. That vote has satisfied me that this amendment of mine will not receive such unanimous assent as not to be an embarrassment to the war-revenue bill.

It is true that there has been added to the proposed amendment a declaration that no efforts should be relaxed to secure the cooperation of the leading commercial nations of the world in the restoration of silver to the coinage.

Mr. President, I am surprised that there was any vote against that amendment. But little over a year ago there was an almost unanimous vote—with four eccentric exceptions—on the proposition that there should be a renewed international conference, and yet to-day we have nearly half the Senate voting, apparently, by their action, in favor of relaxing the efforts to obtain the cooperation of other nations in securing the free coinage of silver.

Mr. President, I am surprised at any such vote, with all due deference to the Senators who cast those votes, and whose opinions I highly respect and whose friendship I value. How can a sincere bimetalist, a person who desires to see the free coinage of silver in the United States alone, wish to have other countries refuse to join in the restoration of silver to the coinage? Everything done by other countries tends to restore the price of silver bullion to its old price. How any Senator, I repeat, who really is sincere in the belief that it is important to this country and to mankind the world over that silver should be restored to the coinage can vote against continuing to seek the cooperation of the principal nations of the world I do not understand.

But so, Mr. President, it is. I recognize the difference of opinion which exists on this floor. The idea having been suggested to me by the remarks which the Senator from Alabama addressed to me, I am unwilling longer to embarrass the passage of this bill. Therefore I withdraw the amendment which I proposed.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I will take occasion to say, then, upon the bill that in my judgment this proposed amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire never ought to have been offered to the bill. Unless the Senator desired to introduce into the bill the entire monetary question, he had no business to have put it in. He must have known that the introduction of it into the bill would have precipitated debate and amendment to it which would have included the entire financial question.

I am as much interested in the financial question as the Senator. I should not myself have thought it a proper thing for me to offer an amendment of this kind that would have brought in the entire discussion of the silver question. The Senator attacks those of us who did not vote for the Hoar amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, I did not attack anyone. I expressly disclaimed any desire to attack anyone. I simply expressed my surprise. If expressing surprise is an attack, then, of course, the Senator can go on.

Mr. TELLER. I will change it and say the Senator criticizes those who voted against that amendment, because that is what it is; it is criticism. Now, I am one of those who voted against it. I voted against it because I knew it would be used to defer and postpone the only bimetalism that will ever be obtained in this country, and that is by the action of the United States alone.

Mr. President, a man must be exceedingly full of hope who believes it is now possible to secure the cooperation of Great Britain in an international agreement. Without being offensive, I think I may say that no sane man in the United States believes that that can be done.

And all this talk of bimetalism to rely upon an international agreement is not worth much in the way of encouragement for real bimetalists. We fully understand that the demand for bimetalism in this country is to be met by this declaration. The party in power is anxious for bimetalism if it can be secured through international agreement, yet I will venture to say that a great majority of the Republican Senators in this Chamber—three-quarters of them—if they could secure by their vote international bimetalism, would be found voting against it under some excuse or another. There might be a few here who would vote that way for international bimetalism.

I am not one of those who oppose international bimetalism. I have voted on every occasion for it. I voted for it when I knew it could not be obtained, and so stated on the floor. But, Mr. President, the demand for bimetalism in this country is not to be answered always by the weak and delusive statement that it is better to wait until some foreign power consents that we may have a financial system that shall recognize both gold and silver.

This amendment was not intended to do anything more than to be an answer to the people who are demanding independent action on the part of the Government of the United States. It is a sop to them. It is a sort of hedging of the Republican party to prevent some of the present members of it who do not believe in the gold standard from abandoning it, as they ultimately will when they find the gold standard is one of the real and main principles of the Republican organization. That is what the party now exists for more than anything else. It is to more thoroughly, as the Secretary of the Treasury says, establish the gold standard in this country.

Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from New Hampshire withdrew his amendment. I think it would have been more creditable if he had never introduced it. I do not say how I should have voted on it, but I know it would have been made an excuse for a further delay. I remember that in 1893, after a long and arduous contest over the question of the repeal of the act of 1890, the high-sounding declaration was put in which the Senator has copied into his amendment, and how this Chamber rang with the statement that when the Sherman Act was repealed and it was out of the way the real bimetalists would come to the front. They were the ones who were voting for its repeal, and they said that there would be then not a halfway makeshift, but a real bimetalism. They went to the country with that statement.

Mr. President, what did they ever do? Not a man who stood up here in this Chamber proclaiming his devotion to bimetalism then ever made a further movement for bimetalism. The party in power never made a movement, nor any man who said he was for it. They were for it because it was getting an obstruction out of the way of bimetalism, but they never made a further move for bimetalism at all. And so it would be with this amendment.

Mr. President, there is but one of two things to do—for those who believe in the gold standard to stand up for it like men, and for those who do not believe in it to stand up for the double standard. The time is not very far distant when those who believe in the gold standard and talk bimetalism will get over on the other side and talk the gold standard, where they belong.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator says the time has come for those who are for gold monometallism to talk gold monometallism and for those who are on the other side to talk the other way. Now, is the Senator for silver monometallism, or does he believe that the monetary system which he is in favor of will maintain the parity between the coin money of the two metals?

Mr. TELLER. I have told the Senator many a time what my position is upon that question.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wanted the Senator to tell the Senate what his position is upon the question.

Mr. TELLER. I am myself satisfied that if the United States Government would go to free coinage to-day, you would maintain the parity between the two metals.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me a word further, I framed this amendment believing the Senator would vote for it. The Senator said I had no business to introduce it; that it was not intended for the purpose which I professed. Now, will the Senator allow me to say that I endeavored to frame, in the interest of a cause and not of a party, an amendment on this subject which would be voted for by both sides of the Chamber, and I did not dream that either the Senator or those who voted with him ever would vote against maintaining the declaration that a proper system of bimetalism would maintain parity between the two metals?

Mr. TELLER. I have not voted that way and have not said that. I am not questioning that; but the Senator knows very well that when the amendment was put on by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] it changed the entire meaning of the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Chandler]. He had a right to expect that that amendment would be offered, and he had a right to suppose, judging from the votes which had been given here, that it would be fastened onto his amendment; and when we do not vote for it, we are accused of being inconsistent.

I am in favor of international bimetalism to-day, if you can get it, but I am not in favor of saying that the policy of the United States is to secure bimetalism by international agreement. That is not the policy, or it should not be the policy, of the Government of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Colorado will allow me, the Senator from New Hampshire said he hoped to draw an amendment that all bimetalists could vote for if he made it general, but he succeeded in drawing an amendment so indefinite, and which was such a straddle, that the extreme gold men to whom he referred voted zealously with him and the silver men did not.

Mr. TELLER. The public press has teemed with declarations of what the silver people were doing to delay this bill. I regret very much that anybody should offer any amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire. I regret very much that we are compelled to vote on this question on a bill of this character. I am quite ready, Mr. President, to meet the question of free coinage, or any other question concerning money, on a proper bill. Of course I could not afford to fail to vote my sentiments on the amendments as they were presented, nor could my associates fail to do so.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I am one of the four eccentric characters referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Chandler] who voted against the bill, which was enacted a year or two ago, sending certain commissioners abroad to negotiate international bimetalism. I did not vote against that bill because I was opposed to international bimetalism; I voted against it because I was satisfied that the mission of the commissioners or envoys, whichever they may be called, would be absolutely fruitless, as the mission was fruitless.

That bill carried $100,000 to pay the expenses of the commissioners. It was like burning up $100,000 of the money of the people of the United States. After seven or eight months of absence in England, France, and elsewhere in Europe, our commissioners came back to us, and the honorable junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], the chairman of the commission, told us last January that the mission was a failure. He not only told us that it was a failure, but he told us why it was a failure; that the money interests of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury, the chief financial officer of the Government of the United States, were using their influence in money circles in Europe to defeat the object of the commission.

Mr. President, I believe international bimetalism is a snare and a delusion. I do not believe it is capable of accomplishment. I do not believe the time will ever come in the life of any man in this Chamber when international bimetalism will be an accomplished fact.

England owns fifteen hundred millions of the world's indebtedness on a gold basis. She is not going to relinquish that power over the property of the world and have a reorganization of the financial system. It is impossible to conceive that she will do so.

So, Mr. President, international bimetalism is simply another name for the single gold standard. There are those who are honest enough to say that they want the gold standard without any qualifications; there are others who are a little more cowardly, and who speak in favor of international bimetalism because they can hide their true opinions behind that theory.

I am glad that I did vote against the bill creating that commission. It was useless when we voted for it. I do not believe there was a man in this Chamber who did not in his secret heart know that the mission of those commissioners would be a failure.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire complains because, as he says, we are in favor of maintaining the parity between gold and silver. What is parity in its application to the gold and silver question? Nothing more or less than a law of equality between a gold dollar and a silver dollar in their debt-paying and purchasing power.

But the Senator from New Hampshire and certain international bimetallic Senators believe that the parity exists between the commercial value of the materials as articles of commerce as distinct from their character as dollars. It is absolutely impossible to create parity between gold and silver as mere articles of commerce. You can no more create parity between the two by statute or by usage than you can create parity between a bushel of potatoes and a bushel of pears; for to-day the one is worth so much and the other so much, and the next day the fluctuations in the market change the price, and one goes up and the other goes down. If it is the commercial parity of the two metals to which reference is made, there is no statute which can control or fix it, unless that statute can control and fix the market from day to day.

But, Mr. President, whenever you coin a silver dollar on terms of equality with the gold dollar at a fixed ratio, as, for instance, at the ratio of 16 to 1, and confer on that silver dollar all the money functions that can be exercised by the gold dollar, then the parity exists between the two dollars as dollars and the parity exists between the metals in the two dollars. Parity can be established in no other way.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, if I had had my way, I doubt very much if I should have in any degree brought into the discussion of this bill any question of bimetalism; but in the judgment—possibly the wise judgment—of others, through amendments regularly introduced, the discussion respecting the general subject of bimetalism has consumed most of the afternoon.

I should not now have taken one moment of the time of the Senate had it not been for the somewhat offensive suggestions of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], not uttered upon this floor for the first or the second or the third time. He has declared himself to have been one of the four eccentric men, as he terms himself and his associates, who voted against the international commission established for the purpose of endeavoring to ascertain what could be done abroad on the subject of international bimetalism; and he has again referred to the fact that by the resolution which appointed the commission the sum of $100,000 was appropriated to pay the expenses of that commission, and he says that money might as well have been thrown away.

Mr. President, it is not pleasant to a man conscious of his own self-respect and desirous of preserving the dignity of his position to hear such suggestions; but it may relieve somewhat the Senator's conscience if he is informed that the three commissioners appointed by the President of the United States proceeded to Europe in the fulfillment of their duties and spent over six months there, doing such traveling in pursuit of their mission as was essential, and no more; that they took with them from here a skilled and competent secretary; that the total expenses of the commission of these three members from the time they left until they returned, including the expenses of their secretary and every possible outlay and the charge to the Government, was only $16,000, and that no member of the commission went abroad except at the sacrifice of thousands of dollars of his own money.

It is undignified and it is unbefitting that a Senator of the United States should rise upon the floor and suggest that in the appropriation of the money there was misconduct on the part of the Government, or an imputation that the commissioners spent money of the people of this country which they were not justified in expending. Outside of the actual traveling expenses to and fro upon the ocean, there was no member of the commission who spent $3,000. It was much below the sum ordinarily charged to the Government in such cases, and was but the slightest possible percentage of the actual and necessary expenses of the commission. Mr. President, I am tired of hearing that sort of suggestion, and I hope it will end here.

If the Senator from Nebraska has further curiosity upon the subject, he may proceed to the State Department, and, at his leisure, he may investigate the accounts, which have been regularly filed by the commission and duly certified to, which stand upon the books of the State Department as showing the expenses of the commission. It is possible, Mr. President, that when the Senator shall have done so, he may correct his statement, which has been sent by him broadcast over the country again and again, and has been published in those patent insides in the West, which constitute the bone and the sinew and most of the brain of the Populist party.

The Senator from Nebraska says he always knew that any attempt to obtain international bimetalism would be a failure. I suppose the sapient Senator from Nebraska and his fellow-Populists at some crossroads in the western part of his State, who know where Europe is on the map, and know but little else of the countries of the world, got together and determined that no country but the United States was intelligent enough to have ideas upon the money question. They were unaware of the fact that the great leaders of thought in England, in France, and in Germany were for more than a generation before the party of which the Senator from Nebraska is such a shining light was ever heard of bimetalists from conviction and from principle, and from that day to this they have preached it as the one doctrine that can bring prosperity to the people of the world and can advance civilization.

When this commission went abroad it met those men.

Fortunately, Mr. President, the silver parties of Europe are not hampered with the long-haired cranks who want silver only as they want tin or paper or anything else that adds to the circulation and gives people more money. They have the producers there belonging to that party, not the men who work only with their tongues and want to share the money of the people who have been able to earn it.

The commission went abroad and met the leaders of thought, the men who understand the question and have devoted a life to it, and they found men just as earnest as we were for bimetalism; and the Senator, who knew it would be a failure, did not know that it came very near being a success. If the movement was hampered at home, it was hampered not alone by published interviews with the Secretary of the Treasury, but it was hampered as well by scores and scores of men who had been for "16 to 1 or bust" by the United States alone; who were so anxious to succeed themselves that they would rather defeat bimetalism than have it brought about by the nations of the world uniting in favor of it—men who would rather see the cause of bimetalism damned forever than to see it brought about in a rational manner by rational men by a universal international agreement.

Fortunately, Mr. President, there are members of the Senator's party, and there are members on the other side of the Chamber, who had a broader vision and a clearer light, who stood here the friends of the commission through thick and thin.

France wants bimetalism to-day. It may not be thought so out in western Nebraska; but they do. France wants it, and would be glad to cooperate with us in securing it on any fair basis. There are other countries of Europe outside of France waiting only to follow the lead of France and the United States, if we shall attain it.

When the commission went to England we found ourselves upon familiar ground, with men who believe upon the question as we do, and every member of that commission was an earnest and honest bimetalist, and wanted to bring bimetalism about; and they hoped they had accomplished it. In the early summer of 1897 there was not a member of the English ministry who did not believe our labors would result in an international bimetallic agreement, and the answer of Sir James Westland, of the Indian council, was like a flash out of a clear sky, and as much of a surprise to them as it was to us; but following the traditions of the Indian office since its foundation, they declined to interrupt the policy which the Governor-General and all his associates in the council had recommended. Rather, however, than decline the invitation which France and the United States had extended to them, they distinctly in terms invited us to present some other proposition, if we could, looking to an international agreement respecting bimetalism; and that is what the Senator from Nebraska calls "a delusion and a snare."

Mr. President, the experiment now about to be tried by the government of India will, in the opinion not only of the bimetalists of the world but of nine-tenths of the gold monometallists of London, result in abject and utter failure. And it will be impossible to install and impose upon the people of India the gold standard; and we are still asked if we have some other suggestion to make.

In the face of that situation, Mr. President, I say that he is an enemy and not a friend of bimetalism who stands up in this body and talks about international bimetalism being "a delusion and a snare," saying to the people of his section, "No, it can not be brought about;" and who has no better argument to present in favor of an international settlement of this great and vital question than making untrue and unpleasant and undignified suggestions that the commission took a large sum of money out of the funds of the people of the United States and squandered it.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, if I wanted to copy the manners of the Senator from Colorado, I should want him to modify them very much. I made no reference whatever to squandering any money. I did not say one word about squandering money, nor did I say a word from which the very amiable and very distinguished Senator could infer that I reflected upon him or his commission. I did say—and the RECORD to-morrow morning will bear me out, and it will not be tampered with for rhetorical or other effect—that the money appropriated by this Government for that commission was uselessly appropriated; that every dollar that was spent in sending commissioners abroad was money squandered.

I repeat it now. If that is an offense, the Senator can so consider it either in this Chamber or elsewhere—not that the commissioners spent money they ought not to have spent, not that they were extravagant or did what they ought not to have done, but that money appropriated for a mission that it was apparent would be fruitless in the very nature of things when the appropriation was made was a squandering of money.

If the Senator had laid the unction to his soul that the commissioners, of which he was the head, who went to England to bring about international bimetalism would be successful, I believe he was the only man who thought so; and yet, because I referred to this in open and candid debate, I am to be the recipient of the sophomoric philippics and the epithets of that gentleman.

Mr. President, there is nothing about the Senator from Colorado that I fear, and there is nothing that I respect under certain circumstances. While I am perfectly willing to accord to him the same treatment that I would to any other gentleman, I do not permit him to put words into my mouth that I have not uttered, and no gentleman with a keen sense of honor would undertake to do that in a public or in a private position.

I do not desire to reflect upon the party to which the Senator belongs, if he has a party, and I do not know to which branch of the Republican party he belongs, if he belongs to either branch. And yet, Mr. President, it is not necessary for me to say that the Republicans are long-haired and wild-eyed to even up with the Senator from Colorado. I would not suffer myself, Populist as I am and hailing from Nebraska as I do, to belittle myself in my own eyes to that extent. While I do not have the collegiate education of this most distinguished and brilliant star from Colorado, I have self-respect enough to refrain from epithets of that kind.

Now, sir, I have said nothing to offend that gentleman, and I have no apologies to make to him.

Mr. CANNON. Do I understand that the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire has been withdrawn?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No objection was made to the withdrawal, as the Chair understood, and the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. CANNON. Was it within the province of any Senator to object?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair asked whether any objection was made.

Mr. CANNON. I rose to object, but another Senator took the floor. I was not aware that an objection could restrain the Senator from New Hampshire from its withdrawal. I supposed he had that right. The Chair asked if there was objection, and I rose to offer one, but the Senator from Nebraska took the floor. I desire to propound the inquiry to the Chair, if an objection will lie to the withdrawal of the amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will decide that the Senator from New Hampshire did not have the right, without the consent of the Senate, to withdraw the amendment after it had been amended by the Senate and after three amendments were pending, offered by the Senator from Nebraska, upon which the Senate was about to vote. The Chair, so understanding, put the question to the Senate by saying, "Is there objection," to which no answer was made. That is the situation in which the amendment stands at this moment.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to reassert that I rose for the purpose of objecting, but the Chair recognized the Senator from Nebraska, and under the circumstances I could not object without receiving recognition from the Chair. I make the objection now, if it is not too late.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is too late.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the ruling of the Chair upon the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The ruling of the Chair is that it is too late to make an objection now to the withdrawal of the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator from Utah that it has been the universal custom, when no objection was made, that the amendment should be withdrawn. The Chair ruled properly, and the Senator allowed the amendment to be withdrawn. That is the end of it. I think, in order to continue a practice that is somewhat old, it would be better not to interfere with that. If the Senator desires, of course he can offer the amendment. I do not know that it makes very much difference except perhaps to save time.

Mr. CANNON. I am aware that I have the right to offer the amendment. I do not desire, however, to accept even temporarily the paternity of such a measure; and if the Senator from New Hampshire is willing—

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah consent to be interrupted by the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I rise simply for the purpose of requesting the Senator from Utah not to inject this inflammable matter into the pending bill. We have had a good deal of it. It is very unprofitable. It is nothing but a declaration, and I hope he will not inject it again into this discussion.

Mr. CANNON. In view of the advice of the Senator from Alabama, I will not inject the matter, and therefore will not offer the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

However, I desire to call attention to a fact which has not yet been alluded to in the very stirring debate which has taken place on this question. The Senator from New Hampshire avowed the intention which actuated him in withdrawing the amendment, and said he did not wish to embarrass the pending war-revenue bill.

It was a very late thought, because considerable time had been occupied in the discussion of the matter and we were apparently approaching a time when we could reach a vote upon it. It occurs to one who sat as looker-on that, it having become perfectly apparent that the amendment would pass this body, it might have been the intention of the Senator from New Hampshire not to embarrass the Republican party, which controls another branch of the Legislature, by sending to it practically a reiteration of its own platform of two years ago, from which it has been making such rapid recession toward the gold standard that any attempt at the present time to stay it in that evil progress would be a serious embarrassment.

I regret very much that the amendment was withdrawn. I regret that the Senator from New Hampshire, who took occasion to test the sentiment in the Senate on the points proposed by him, being very careful so to frame the amendment that all nonessential points should receive consideration, did not choose to leave the amendment in such a position that the real essence of the bimetallic question could be presented, so that we might learn his views and the views of others who think with him.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Utah allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I stated very clearly the motive that led me to withdraw it. There is nothing to prevent the Senator from Utah from offering it. I was disappointed at his vote, but I made no reflection. I only expressed surprise. Now, I should be very glad to have him reoffer the amendment. He can do it and test the sense of the Senate just as well as I can.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator has heard the advice offered by the Senator from Alabama. He knows that I accepted that advice. It is not necessary to assure me that I can reoffer it. I regret, I repeat, that the Senator did not leave the amendment long enough before the Senate so that we might put to the test the feelings of those men who, still occupying stations within the Republican party, avow themselves for bimetalism. Had the amendment remained here long enough for us to offer amendments which would have put life into it, such amendments would have been offered and the Senator and all other Senators would have had an opportunity to vote upon this question.

Mr. CHANDLER. Again I ask the Senator why he does not offer it now and test the Senate to his heart's content?

Mr. CANNON. Because the Senator from New Hampshire has withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that it is manifestly impossible to dispose of the bill to-day. The Senate has been in session now for seven hours, and I suggest that he move that we adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. We have made rapid progress with the bill, and I think we had better proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. It is not likely that the bill can be finished to-night. I think we are all very much fatigued.

Mr. TELLER and Mr. SPOONER. We can not hear a word.

Mr. MORGAN. I say I think it is not at all likely the bill can be finished to-night. We are all fatigued, as well as very warm, and I prefer, so far as I am concerned, to await the result of the bombardment of Santiago de Cuba before we pass the bill. Perhaps we shall want to modify it after we get news from that event. If we succeed in taking that fleet and that port, this war is practically broken in two. The war is likely to come to an end before the bill is passed, which I think would be a great consummation, and one devoutly to be wished. I suggest that we ought to have an executive session. There are some messages on the desk from the President of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. There are a great number of amendments on the table printed, and I hope we can dispose of them. A great many of them can be disposed of to-night.

Mr. ALLEN. Pending this discussion, I should like to offer and have printed an amendment to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be received and printed.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from Alabama to make any suggestion?

Mr. MORGAN. I am not in charge of the bill, nor am I obstructing it in the slightest degree; but I have some amendments to propose, and on them I desire to be heard.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to suggest to the Senator having the bill in charge that if we could come to some conclusion to vote to-night, we might go on. If not, it is hardly worth while to keep us here late and take up the bill again to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. I am perfectly satisfied that if we could go on to-night for three or four hours, we could conclude the bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Not to-night.

Mr. TELLER. I do not believe we can, from what I know of it. I think it would be a great deal better to meet here at 10 o'clock in the morning, if there is a prospect of finishing the bill to-morrow.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Eleven o'clock is soon enough.

Mr. CULLOM. Can we not have an understanding that we shall finish the bill to-morrow?

Mr. PETTIGREW. We will be much more liable to finish the bill to-morrow if we now adjourn until to-morrow at 11 o'clock than if we go on. The debate has got in such shape that it will only create antagonisms and ill feeling and will produce more debate and longer speeches. If our by-and-by bimetalists could let the question of silver alone for a little while, I believe we could finish the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope we will go on and make an effort to finish it to-night.

Mr. BACON. I am perfectly willing to go on with the bill this afternoon if there is any prospect of being able to finish it, but I am sure from what the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] says as to amendments he has and his purpose to address the Senate upon them that it is practically impossible to finish the bill to-night. If we are not going to finish it to-night, why should we stay here longer to-night?

Mr. LINDSAY. We can finish it to-night.

Mr. MORGAN. Let us try that.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, we came here this morning with the belief that the bill could be finished to-day. I thought so. Hours have been taken up by discussions and by long speeches which were made here, some of them prepared and read, some of them containing statements that ought to be challenged, that are not true in many respects; and I for one think there is no use in asking Senators to remain here to-night, after a long day's session of this kind. If there had been any delay on this side of the Chamber, if there had been any effort on this side of the Chamber to prevent making progress, I would not open my mouth, but would be willing to go ahead with a long session to-night, but there is no occasion for it.

As has been again and again stated, there is plenty of time to pass this bill. Let us come here to-morrow morning and go ahead with the bill in good faith and do the best we can to dispose of it. I do not know whether or not we can finish it to-morrow. I hope we can. I should be glad to see it done. We have been for weeks discussing amendments proposed by the committee. There are Senators who have just the same right to offer amendments to the bill that others have. These amendments have been offered or notice has been given of them. They are printed, they are on the desks, they are here, as stated by the Senator from Iowa a while ago, in large numbers. Those amendments ought to be carefully, deliberately considered. There is no reason why they should be rushed through. They are all amendments of importance, and I do not believe there is any necessity for staying here any longer to-day. I hope the Senator from Iowa will either move that we adjourn or go into executive session.

Mr. PETTUS. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not ask us to remain here longer. We have been here seven hours, and many of us had committee work before that time, and it is not reasonable. I hope the Senate will not force this sort of work. It does not do any good to force men to do work after a reasonable day's work is ended. I notify the gentlemen now that they can not accomplish anything by this sort of proceeding—driving men to unreasonable hours of work. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CHILTON. Will the Senator from Alabama withdraw his motion for a moment that I may offer an amendment and ask to have it printed?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly.

Mr. CHILTON. I offer the amendment and ask that it may be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received and printed. The Senator from Alabama moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Alabama withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I want to suggest that the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] be printed. It was not ordered printed, I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been ordered printed.

Mr. HALE. Let all the amendments be printed.

Mr. TELLER. Let all the amendments which have been offered be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I know how fatiguing it is to sit the number of hours we have been here to-day, either in committee or in the Chamber. I also know it will be impossible to complete this bill at any given session unless we put ourselves to some inconvenience. I hope there can be some understanding whereby the bill can be completed before adjournment to-morrow. If so, I should be very glad to yield in a moment to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] to move to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORGAN. I expect, when I come to speak on this bill, as I have contemplated doing for several days past, to have the doors closed on me by the order of the Committee on Finance. We shall then have a good, long, free, and friendly talk here about the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to assure the Senator—

Mr. MORGAN. I do not propose to have any bargains about it, but until that matter is arranged and disposed of and that motion is gone through I am not in a consenting mood.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that the Committee on Finance will not meet to-morrow morning, and there is no such order now pending from that committee with reference to any observations he may make.

Mr. MORGAN. None now pending, but it has been decided.

Mr. ALLISON. I assure the Senator that no such motion will be made upon my part either on behalf of the committee or otherwise.

Mr. MORGAN. I was notified by the Senator from Iowa that he was required by the committee, very reluctantly on his part, to close the doors on me when I proposed to argue, a right that I have, and that I intend to argue upon authority.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator wholly misapprehended what I meant to say to him. I move now, then, that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope the Senator will make it 11 o'clock. Eleven o'clock is early enough.

Mr. PETTIGREW. You will make no progress by meeting at 10 o'clock. You will have no quorum here.

Mr. ALLISON. I make that motion.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not like to have the hour of meeting changed, and I am very much inclined to move to adjourn. Does the Senator from Iowa insist upon meeting at 10?

Mr. ALLISON. Let the Senate take its own course if another hour is proposed.

Mr. TELLER. I move to amend by saying 11 o'clock instead of 10 o'clock.

Mr. HALE. If Senators could agree positively to be here at 11 o'clock, that would give us a long day, but if Senators do not agree to come at 11, we shall consume half or three-quarters of an hour in calling the roll to obtain the presence of a quorum.

Mr. TELLER. That was not done this morning.

Mr. TILLMAN. If we meet at 10, certainly the roll will have to be called before we can get a quorum.

Mr. HALE. Except this morning the roll has been called.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There was no time lost in calling the roll this morning.

Mr. ALLISON. I will modify my motion and make it 11 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer an amendment to the pending bill and ask that it be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina offers an amendment to the pending bill, which is ordered to be printed, without objection.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PETTUS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eighteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, June 4, 1898, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 3, 1898.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Charles O. Whittemore, of Utah, to be attorney of the United States for the district of Utah, vice John W. Judd, to be removed.

CONSUL.

Henry H. Ellis, of California, to be consul of the United States at Turks Island, West Indies, to fill a vacancy.

PROMOTION IN THE MARINE CORPS.

Maj. Percival C. Pope, United States Marine Corps, to be a lieutenant-colonel in that corps, from the 2d day of June, 1898, vice Lieut. Col. John H. Higbee, retired.

APPOINTMENT IN THE NAVY.

Eugene Julius Grow, a citizen of New Hampshire, to be an assistant surgeon in the Navy, to fill a vacancy.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE VOLUNTEER ARMY.

To be brigadier-generals.

Col. John N. Andrews, Twelfth United States Infantry.
Leonard W. Colby, of Nebraska.
Roy Stone, of New York.
Col. Robert P. Hughes, Inspector-General, United States Army.
Lieut. Col. John B. Babcock, assistant adjutant-general, United States Army.
Henry T. Douglas, of Maryland.

To be assistant adjutant-general with the rank of lieutenant-colonel.
Capt. William V. Richards, Sixteenth United States Infantry.

To be assistant adjutants-general with the rank of major.

Capt. Hunter Liggett, Fifth United States Infantry.
First Lieut. Henry T. Allen, Second United States Cavalry.

To be assistant adjutants-general with the rank of captain.

First Lieut. Charles D. Rhodes, Sixth United States Cavalry.
William Graves Bates, of New York.
Frederick M. Page, of Virginia.
David Elkins, of West Virginia, now first lieutenant, First West Virginia Volunteer Infantry.

To be inspector-general with the rank of major.

David Vickers, of Idaho.

To be chief quartermasters with the rank of major.

Capt. George Ruhlen, assistant quartermaster, United States Army.

Capt. Edgar B. Robertson, Ninth United States Infantry.

To be assistant quartermasters with the rank of captain.

Walter Allen, of Mississippi.
Charles M. Forrest, of the District of Columbia.
Second Lieut. Charles G. Sawtelle, jr., Second United States Cavalry.

Clyde D. V. Hunt, of Vermont.

First Lieut. John A. Perry, Eighth United States Infantry.
First Lieut. Alexander W. Perry, Ninth United States Cavalry.

To be chief commissaries of subsistence with the rank of major.

First Lieut. George T. Bartlett, Third United States Artillery.
John D. Black, of North Dakota.
Robert H. Fitzhugh, of Pennsylvania.
William M. Grinnell, of New York.

To be commissaries of subsistence with the rank of captain.

James H. McMillan, of Michigan.
William Larrabee, jr., of Iowa.

Joseph B. Handy, of Delaware.
William C. Daniels, of Colorado.
Warren Fairbanks, of Indiana.

To be additional paymasters.

Charles Albert Smylie, of New York. The nomination of Charles Albert Smylie, of Virginia, for the above-named office, which was delivered to the Senate May 23, 1898, is hereby withdrawn.

Samuel S. Harvey, of Florida. The nomination of James S. Harvey, of Florida, for the above-named office, which was delivered to the Senate May 23, 1898, is hereby withdrawn.

Fred M. Rix, of Arkansas.

William Monaghan, of Ohio.

Manley B. Curry, of Georgia.

James B. McKenna, of Indiana.

Joseph Stuart Wilkins, of the District of Columbia.

Michael F. Sheary, of New York.

Second Lieut. George W. Moses, Third United States Cavalry.

Frederick Bostwick, of New York.

To be assistant adjutant-general with the rank of captain.

Davis Elkins, of West Virginia, now first lieutenant First West Virginia Volunteer Infantry. The nomination of David Elkins, of West Virginia, to the above-named office is hereby withdrawn.

To be assistant quartermaster with the rank of captain.

James H. McMillan, of Michigan. The nomination of James H. McMillan, of Michigan, to be commissary of subsistence with the rank of captain, is hereby withdrawn.

WITHDRAWAL.

Executive nomination withdrawn June 3, 1898.

Samuel B. McElroy, to be postmaster at Gordonsville, in the State of Virginia.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 3, 1898.

ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY.

Oscar S. Straus, of New York, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Turkey.

POSTMASTERS.

Giles P. Lecranier, to be postmaster at Moodus, in the county of Middlesex and State of Connecticut.

M. C. Deering, to be postmaster at Gunnison, in the county of Gunnison and State of Colorado.

Leander H. Miner, to be postmaster at Ferndale, in the county of Humboldt and State of California.

William H. Friend, to be postmaster at Oakland, in the county of Alameda and State of California.

Edwin Foster, to be postmaster at Independence, in the county of Montgomery and State of Kansas.

James M. Chisham, to be postmaster at Atchison, in the county of Atchison and State of Kansas.

Clarence R. Aitchison, to be postmaster at Columbus, in the county of Cherokee and State of Kansas.

Althamer E. Chamberlain, to be postmaster at Holliston, in the county of Middlesex and State of Massachusetts.

Samuel R. Peters, to be postmaster at Newton, in the county of Harvey and State of Kansas.

Henry L. Henderson, to be postmaster at Iola, in the county of Allen and State of Kansas.

Clinton L. Kester, to be postmaster at Marcellus, in the county of Cass and State of Michigan.

Edward L. Bates, to be postmaster at Pentwater, in the county of Oceana and State of Michigan.

Thomas A. Hills, to be postmaster at Leominster, in the county of Worcester and State of Massachusetts.

George A. Van Gieson, to be postmaster at Montclair, in the county of Essex and State of New Jersey.

Estevan Baca, to be postmaster at Socorro, in the county of Socorro and Territory of New Mexico.

William F. Riemenschneider, to be postmaster at Chelsea, in the county of Washtenaw and State of Michigan.

George G. Sedgwick, to be postmaster at Martins Ferry, in the county of Belmont and State of Ohio.

D. G. McIntosh, to be postmaster at St. Thomas, in the county of Pembina and State of North Dakota.

Milo B. Greene, to be postmaster at Alfred, in the county of Allegany and State of New York.

James M. Vernon, to be postmaster at Everett, in the county of Snohomish and State of Washington.

Dalton A. Brosius, to be postmaster at Vermilion, in the county of Clay and State of South Dakota.

Emily E. Whittemore, to be postmaster at Sumter, in the county of Sumter and State of South Carolina.

William P. Slack, to be postmaster at Carbondale, in the county of Jackson and State of Illinois.

William H. Kraper, to be postmaster at Metropolis City, in the county of Massac and State of Illinois.

Charles F. Best, to be postmaster at Nokomis, in the county of Montgomery and State of Illinois.

Thomas W. Morefield, to be postmaster at Elkhorn, in the county of Walworth and State of Wisconsin.

Wesley E. Collins, to be postmaster at Summit, in the county of Pike and State of Mississippi.

Joshua Stevens, to be postmaster at Macon, in the county of Noxubee and State of Mississippi.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 3, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

GRANT OF LANDS TO WISCONSIN FOR MILITARY PURPOSES.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6551) withdrawing from entry and sale and granting unto the State of Wisconsin certain lands for use as a part of its present military reservation.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following lands, situated in the county of Juneau, in the State of Wisconsin, to wit, the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter and the west half of the southwest quarter of section 22, in township 17 north, of range 2 east, be, and the same hereby are, withdrawn from entry and sale, and the said lands are hereby granted unto the State of Wisconsin, for and to constitute a part of its military reservation, to be used and controlled by the said State for military purposes in connection with its present reservation, known as "Wisconsin Military Reservation," located near Camp Douglas, in said State: Provided, however, That said State shall, before it acquires any right to said lands or the use thereof under the provisions hereof, procure from all claimants or persons who may have filed or made homestead entries or other claims on or to said premises, or any part thereof, proper relinquishments of all their claims thereto, and cause the same to be filed with the Secretary of the Interior; whereupon said entries shall be canceled and this grant and the rights herein specified shall become operative and fixed, and not before: And provided further, That when said premises shall cease to be used by the said State of Wisconsin for the purposes above specified, the same shall revert to the United States and thereafter be subject to entry and sale, the same in all respects as other public lands of the same class.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to distinguish this case from the case coming from the State of Texas and considered here a few days ago, when the House declined, or rather some gentlemen of the House declined, to permit the consideration of the bill. I understand one distinction is that this bill proposes a grant for military purposes, while that was for school purposes. I think, however, that a grant for school purposes is more defensible than one for military purposes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I think, Mr. Speaker, that when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] understands the real effect of this bill, no objection will be made.

About nine years ago the State of Wisconsin established a military reservation for the annual encampments of its National Guard adjacent to the location of these lands; and it has continued from that time to the present to improve these 630 acres. One of the chief purposes of having a military reservation in the States for their National Guard is to give the men composing the organization instruction in rifle practice. Upon this military reservation are located a number of rifle ranges, constructed at much expense for this sort of practice. The reservation was located as it is because of the condition and formation of the three forties of land named in the bill.

The range itself is upon a level plain. At the easterly end of that range are a series of high, rocky bluffs, covering the three quarter sections of land described in the bill. It is well understood that in the establishment and maintenance of a rifle range there must be constructed (if they do not already exist) what are known as bullet stops, to prevent bullets from doing any damage beyond the bullet stops. Now, in this case we have not only constructed bullet stops and the pits necessary for a rifle range, but the lands described in this bill are, as I say, a series of bluffs of sandy rock—barren and unfit for any purpose whatever except when an emergency of this kind may arise.

The ranges are so formed that the firing is in the direction of these lands, which, as they consist of high, rocky bluffs, operate, as I have said, as natural bullet stops, none of the firing going beyond. In order that we might retain this military reservation for the benefit of the rifle range (because there is an absolute necessity for something of this kind), entries were caused to be made some time ago—

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that it may be desirable to have this reservation for military purposes; but why should not the land be sold to the State of Wisconsin for the purpose of a rifle range in the same way it was insisted that a certain reservation in the State of Texas should be sold to that State for the purpose of a normal school?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I will say in reply to the gentleman's question that they can not be so transferred to the State. They are now subject to entry under the preemption and homestead laws.

Mr. BAILEY. But, instead of giving the land to the State, we could sell it to the State, if the gentleman chose to draw the bill in that way.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I supposed from a remark made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] the other day that he would not object to turning all the public lands over to the States in which they were situated.

Mr. BAILEY. I would not. I would support a bill that would turn over every acre of the public land to the States and Territories in which they are situated; but I object to taking them by piecemeal and turning them over to this State or that State. I was not clear that the reservation ought to be given to the State of Texas the other day, and I only withheld an objection because a certain county, formerly a part of that State, had received from the State a large amount of land for its school fund, and this was an effort to make some recompense for that. I withheld my objection on that ground.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, the Congress of the United States every year makes a large appropriation for the maintenance of the National Guard of the different States. This is right in that same direction and in furtherance of that interest; and let me say to the gentleman from Texas that perhaps he did not observe that this is merely giving the right to use the land. It does not transfer the title, but only says that it may be used for military purposes by the State. It reverts back to the General Government upon ceasing to be used for that purpose.

Mr. BAILEY. It is a grant for a particular purpose, and when it ceases to be used for that purpose, of course it reverts to the grantor under the common law. It would not be different from a grant to a State for school purposes, because when land so granted ceases to be used for school purposes, it reverts to the grantor.

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is so, if the condition is imposed as it is by this bill.

Mr. BAILEY. There need be no condition. A grant for a particular purpose implies a reversion to the grantor when the land granted ceases to be used for that purpose. It makes no difference whether the grantor be an individual or the Government.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I agree with the gentleman, and in this case we have not only that, but we have an affirmative provision that it shall revert and become a part of the public domain when the State ceases to use it for this purpose. It will then be subject to purchase and entry, the same as other land of the same class.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I dislike to make an objection of this kind; but I am not willing to see the House refuse to grant public lands for school purposes and then grant them for military purposes, and I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

MAJ. JOSEPH W. WHAM.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4237) to enable the President to restore Maj. Joseph W. Wham, paymaster, United States Army, to duty, his former rank, and status in the United States Army.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to set aside, annul, or expunge the proceedings of a court-martial as promulgated in General Order No. 20, dated Washington, D. C., April 8, 1895, and to restore Maj. Joseph W. Wham, paymaster, United States Army, to duty, previous rank, and status in the United States Army.

Sec. 2. That the proper disbursing officer of the United States Army is hereby directed to pay to the aforesaid officer, from the appropriations for the pay of the Army, the pay and allowances (the latter to be commuted) which have been withheld under the operation of the sentence of the aforesaid court.

Mr. BAILEY. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear some explanation of this bill.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Speaker, the person named in the bill, Maj. Joseph W. Wham, was a paymaster in the Army. His appointment was made by General Grant, and was probably about the last appointment made before the expiration of his Presidential term. Major Wham had been an officer in General Grant's regiment. He was a gallant soldier. He is the possessor of a medal of honor, awarded to him for special gallantry at the battles of Nashville and Franklin, Tenn.

For a long time he served as paymaster in the Army under that appointment, and his services were especially acceptable to every department commander in whose department he served. On one occasion in Arizona, when he and his party were carrying the Treasury chest, they were attacked by bandits, and every man but one in the party was wounded by the bandits, who attempted to rob him. He was specially commended for his gallantry on that occasion.

Things all went well with Major Wham, who was a volunteer officer appointed to that position, until January, 1890, when he had the temerity to file papers indorsing him very strongly for appointment as Paymaster-General in the Army. Upon those papers being filed, the record discloses that in June following these charges were brought against him while his candidacy for the Paymaster-Generalship of the Army was pending. These charges were brought against him and a court-martial was ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. What were the charges?

Mr. CONNOLLY. The charges were that Major Wham failed to pay a certain judgment for $1,000 that was rendered against him by default in the city of New York when he was on duty at Tucson, Ariz., as a paymaster.

Mr. BAILEY. Was there any charge of fraud connected with the contracting of the debt?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No charge whatever of fraud, and I want to say further that any lawyer who will read the record in this case will see that it was a base imposition upon Major Wham for a judgment of the kind to be entered against him at all. Five days' notice was given, under their practice in the supreme court, of the setting of the case for trial. Major Wham was at Tucson, Ariz., on duty as a paymaster. He had an attorney, as he supposed, employed in the city of New York to defend him. It was utterly impossible for him to reach New York from Tucson, Ariz., in time to be there for the hearing. He had no knowledge of it until this judgment was rendered upon the oath of the plaintiff in the case and no other testimony. The case arose in this way—

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to inquire if the plaintiff, in his declaration in that case, alleged that the beneficiary of this bill committed any fraud in contracting the debt?

Mr. CONNOLLY. None at all. The allegation was that Major Wham was president of a mining company in the State of Wyoming, and Mr. Otto Gramm, who has since been auditor of the State of Wyoming, was treasurer of the company.

Another gentleman who is a prominent lawyer there, whose name I forget, was the secretary of the company. It is claimed that the company owed a debt of $1,000, that Major Wham and this plaintiff, Holcomb, gave their joint note for $1,000 for that company debt; that afterwards the note became due and this man Holcomb sent the $1,000 by express, as he testifies, from Peoria, Ill., to Mr. Gramm, the auditor of the State of Wyoming, treasurer of the company, to pay that debt, and the suit was brought against Major Wham to recover against him his contributory share of that $1,000 so claimed to have been paid.

The testimony of Mr. Gramm is clear that no such money was ever sent to him. The testimony of the secretary of the company was clear that no such money was ever sent or paid. The testimony of Major Wham was that no such money was ever sent to him. The three witnesses all testified that the claim of this man Holcomb was utterly without foundation.

Mr. MARSH. Will my colleague allow me? Does it not also appear that there is no record in any bank in Peoria that such a draft was ever issued or paid?

Mr. CONNOLLY. It also appears in the record of the court-martial that no bank in the city of Peoria had the return of any paid draft of the kind.

Mr. BAILEY. Then will the gentleman from Illinois tell us upon what ground the court-martial could have dismissed this man from the service?

Mr. CONNOLLY. The only ground I can see is that it put him absolutely out of the way of a candidacy for Paymaster-General of the Army.

Mr. BAILEY. That is a very serious charge to make against any high official.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I say that is my belief.

Mr. CARMACK. Who were the members of the court-martial?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Ten years had elapsed from the time this man claimed to have paid the money before he brought this suit, and in that ten years time Major Wham was all the time a paymaster in the Army, where he could be found, and had an abundance of property. Not until January, 1890, did Major Wham aspire to be Paymaster-General of the Army. It was then that he filed a large petition, signed, I discover, by myself as well as many others.

I was United States district attorney at the time. All the Members of Congress from Illinois, Senators, and State officials signed the petition. Mr. Christiansen, manager of Drexel, Morgan & Co., of New York City; Gen. Horace Porter, and many other men of that character indorsed him for the position of Paymaster-General in the Army. Then it was, after the lapse of ten years, that this man Holcomb was dug up to bring this claim, and obtained this judgment in this furtive way; and immediately upon the heels of that a court-martial was ordered for Major Wham's trial.

Mr. BAILEY. Has the gentleman the names of the officers who constituted that court-martial?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No; I have not the names here. This has all been carefully passed on by the Secretary of War. His letter is not very long, and it will probably be more satisfactory to the House for me to read in full what the Secretary of War says about it:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 19, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to return H. R. 4237, "To enable the President to restore Maj. Joseph W. Wham, paymaster, United States Army, to duty, his former rank and status in the United States Army."

Major Wham was tried by a general court-martial and sentenced to be dismissed the service, which sentence was mitigated by the President to suspension on half pay from rank, duty, and all privileges until January 18, 1904, his name to be placed at the foot of majors in the Pay Department. I inclose a copy of the report of the Judge-Advocate-General made to me on the 26th of August, 1897, in which he reviews the proceedings in the case.

The charge against Major Wham, upon which he was tried, grew out of a transaction in relation to a mining company which involved the payment of a note amounting to $1,000. It was entirely a private transaction between individuals and had no relation to any matters connected with the military service, except as it affected his conduct as an officer of the Army.

I have devoted considerable time to the consideration of this case and am not convinced from the testimony that Major Wham was so culpable as to warrant his dismissal from the service, or even his punishment in the degree to which it was mitigated by the President. He was careless and negligent of his own interests in not submitting a defense to the charge against him, the case going to a verdict upon the testimony of the prosecution.

From papers filed by Major Wham it appears that he lost considerable money in ventures in which he engaged, especially as to two ranches which he attempted to make productive or profitable, and was without means to meet his indebtedness. His record in the Army during the war was a brilliant one.

It is true that the unexpired portion of the sentence could be remitted by the President and he could be restored to duty; but, in my opinion, this would not be a full measure of relief to him, and I therefore recommend legislation for his relief.

Very respectfully,

R. A. ALGER,
Secretary of War.

Hon. JOHN A. T. HULL,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, it looks to me as though this officer has been unjustly dealt with. It seems to me that under the circumstances he ought not to have been court-martialed, and certainly ought not to have been punished; and we are not told who constituted the court-martial that tried him. The findings of that court-martial were approved by the President, who, in 1890, must have been President Harrison.

Mr. CONNOLLY. They were not approved by the President.

Mr. BAILEY. My understanding is that they must have been approved before they could become effective.

Mr. CONNOLLY. By the finding of the court-martial he was sentenced to be dismissed from the service, but there was a recommendation to mercy.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the sentence of a court-martial become effective until approved by the President?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes; it may be modified.

Mr. BAILEY. I think it does not become effective; and even if it could become effective, it did not in that instance, because the report shows that the President modified it.

Mr. CONNOLLY. He modified it.

Mr. BAILEY. And therefore the President must have believed that there was something in the case to warrant the punishment of this officer.

Mr. CONNOLLY. As the Secretary of War says, and as I have stated, the record shows that all there was in the case was that he did not pay that $1,000 judgment against him.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I marvel that any court-martial would ever convict him and that the President did not disapprove of the findings of the court-martial, because I know the President can disapprove the findings of a court-martial.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. But instead of disapproving this he approved it with a modification.

Mr. CONNOLLY. With a modification.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, the gentleman must see that this officer has been drawing half pay and the Government ought not to be required to give him full pay. He has not been in the service of the Government, and it seems to me that he ought not to have the arrears of salary.

So far as anything in the case has developed up to this time, I should be perfectly willing to see him restored to his rank and to his salary, but I do not believe, in the face of the finding of the court-martial, approved with modifications by the President, and he having been on half salary all this time, that he ought to come now and ask for his full salary.

Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to inquire if this gentleman has been engaged in any business in the meantime?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Not that I know of.

Mr. BAILEY. Could he have engaged in any business under the rules of the Department? It would not transgress any rules of the Department, would it?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I judge not.

Mr. BAILEY. Then the Government is entitled to the same benefit that a private employer would have, which would be that having dismissed a man improperly from its service, even if it was a time contract, the employee would be compelled to try to obtain employment, and his only recourse against the employer for the wrongful discharge would be the difference between what the employer had agreed to give him and what he earned or could have earned by proper diligence. There was no time for which the officer was employed, and the officer ought to be willing to go back to his old station and leave the Government without further assessment.

Mr. STEELE. I think he should be.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that if he will make the motion to strike out the second section of the bill, I shall not contend against it. It is an injustice to the officer and it does not do all that ought to be done to reinstate him, whereas this report shows he has been improperly dismissed. But I will not contend against the gentleman's position if he desires to strike out that section.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I am acquainted with Major Wham. Now, if it be true, as I believe it to be true, that the report of the committee is reliable and this man by this chapter of circumstances has been unjustly dealt with, as we all concede, including the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], is it not true that a man who has devoted his lifework to the profession, with a stigma resting upon him, broken in fortune, as the report shows, from the loss of the two ranches, in straitened circumstances, with this shadow of disgrace hanging over him—is there much chance of his making a living in the ordinary avocations that business affords? If the bill ought to pass at all, should it not pass with all the accompaniments?

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, judging from the recital of facts as made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY], I am prepared to say that this is the most remarkable case that has been called to the attention of the House during my service. If the gentleman has stated the whole case, it occurs to me that a second court-martial should be convened without delay to try the members of the first court-martial.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I think you are right about that.

Mr. DOCKERY. In relieving this man, you are casting an imputation upon the court-martial that tried him.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The court-martial that tried him recommended him to the mercy of the President.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is true, but we are not furnished with the names of the gentlemen who composed that court-martial. I think I could form a better opinion as to the justice of the verdict if I knew who constituted it.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I do not know who constituted it.

Mr. DOCKERY. The statement is made, by direction and innuendo, that the charges were "trumped up" because this major was an aspirant for the Paymaster-Generalship of the Army. The name of the party responsible for that proceeding does not appear and is not disclosed to the House, but this omission may not be material, as perhaps he was an outsider, for aught I know. The court-martial, however, is put under the suspicion of an unjust verdict by the gentleman from Illinois. If the gentleman is correct in his statement, I can not see any reasonable grounds for such a verdict. At all events, I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is right in insisting upon striking out the second section of the bill.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Well, Mr. Speaker, rather than leave this man any longer under the cloud, I will make no objection if the gentleman from Missouri desires to strike out the section.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not think it is fair to the members of the House to put us under the necessity of objecting—

Mr. BAKER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I introduced this bill, and I am thoroughly satisfied that it is entirely right and perfectly just in view of the facts that appear in the report of the committee. Various suggestions have been made. To clear up the whole matter, I request that that part of the report of the committee which has not been read be read to the House, as I think upon hearing it that no gentleman on either side of the House will object to the passage of the bill.

I think the reading of the report, which is a clear and lucid statement of the facts of the case, will answer all the various questions that have been raised here.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Speaker, let us have all of the report read consecutively.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the entire report, if there is no objection.

The report (by Mr. McDONALD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4297) to enable the President to restore Maj. Joseph W. Wham, paymaster, United States Army, to duty, his former rank, and status in the United States Army, submit the following report:

Maj. Joseph W. Wham, paymaster, United States Army, was court-martialed and dismissed the service, but was unanimously recommended for clemency by the court. The President commuted the sentence to suspension on half pay until 1894, date of retirement. The facts, culled from the voluminous record, are as follows:

Nearly seventeen years ago Maj. Joseph W. Wham, paymaster, United States Army, was president, and D. C. Holcomb general manager, of a mining company, in which Major Wham had invested $17,000. The company needed funds to meet an indebtedness to one Atchinson. President Wham and General Manager Holcomb joined in their personal note to the Laramie National Bank for $1,000, obtained that amount, and paid it to Atchinson in liquidation of the mining company's debt.

At about the time of the maturity of this note Holcomb, in his unsupported and contradictory deposition, claims that he sent the money to meet this note to Hon. Otto Gramm, State treasurer of Wyoming, and also treasurer of the mining company, to deliver to President Wham. Gramm squarely contradicts Holcomb as to this, and testifies that no such transaction occurred. Hon. M. C. Jahren, secretary of the company and city attorney at Laramie, Wyo., also testifies in denial of the assertion of Holcomb that he sent the $1,000 or any sum to the treasurer for such purpose, or for any purpose at any time, and that it would have been impossible for such a transaction to occur and the books of the company not show it.

Both Treasurer Gramm and Secretary Jahren testify that neither said $1,000 nor any sum was ever paid to Major Wham, and that Major Wham is not now and never was indebted to said company in that or any other sum. Both these officers of the company squarely deny in their testimony that any such sum was ever paid as stated, and President Wham also testifies that he never received any such sum or any sum at any time or any place. Holcomb's claim, which was not made for nearly ten years after the alleged transaction, is therefore unsupported except by his own contradictory deposition, and opposed to this are the denials of State Treasurer Gramm, Hon. M. C. Jahren, secretary of the company, and President Wham, all of whom are corroborated by the books of the company.

Holcomb asserts that he has lost certain letters from Treasurer Gramm and President Wham, which would show that they received the $1,000, as he claims. Holcomb's testimony upon this point, that he sent this money from Peoria, Ill., to Gramm, at Laramie, Wyo., having been definitely and squarely denied by the treasurer, the secretary, and the president of the mining company, and verified by the books, could easily have been corroborated, if it were true, by producing the books of the express company, the express company's receipt, or the receipt for the registered letter, or the stub of the check, or the check itself, which would necessarily bear Major Wham's indorsement.

The complaint on which the judgment was rendered in the civil suit set up that the claim on which the judgment was based was an accommodation note which Holcomb had had to pay for Major Wham; whereas Holcomb, in his unsupported and contradictory deposition, claims that it was for $1,000 of corporate money. It is hardly necessary to add that any court of justice on appeal would have reversed this judgment.

The case had been pending for a long time, and at last hurried to trial when Major Wham was at Tucson, Ariz., almost across the continent. Major Wham, according to his own testimony, received no notification whatever of the date of trial of the civil suit in New York. But granting that the claim of the prosecution is true, i. e., that a telegram was sent two days prior to trial, when it required five days to get to New York, thus leaving Major Wham three days less time than was absolutely necessary in which to reach that city. Major Wham could therefore not be present, and made no defense, owing to a controversy with his attorney relative to the attorney's demand for the payment of what Major Wham deemed an exorbitant bill, rendered before trial, for nearly 60 per cent of the amount involved.

The proof clearly shows that if the complainant, Holcomb, had caused execution to issue and proper civil effort to be made, instead of delaying for months and then asking the War Department to enforce the payment of a questionable civil claim, he could easily have enforced payment. The judgment was obtained in June, 1890. Had he levied upon Major Wham's property at any time during that year, he could have secured his money. It is in evidence, and not rebutted or denied, that from 1890 to February, 1891, when the Arizona floods wiped out Major Wham's property, there was plenty of available assets upon which to make this judgment; after which, by the act of Providence, the property of Major Wham was swept away, and he was left with nothing but his army pay, nearly 90 per cent of which went to creditors.

Finally, to pile Pelion on Ossa. Put on one end of the scales of justice the complainant's wholly unsupported and contradictory testimony, and on the other the testimony of Hon. Otto Gramm, State treasurer of Wyoming, and lessee of the Laramie rolling mills, a most reliable and responsible business man, and the testimony of Hon. M. C. Jahren, city attorney of Laramie, Wyo., and Major Wham, who had correctly accounted for millions of public funds. Now, add to this the abrogation on both trials of the rule of law requiring a fact to be proven by the best evidence, which, in this case, is the express receipt or record, registered receipt or letter, or check, which would necessarily bear Major Wham's indorsement, and we are unable to see how any earthly power could make Major Wham's vindication clearer. It certainly has been axiomatically proven, if not demonstrated, that Major Wham did not owe this money.

That this fearful injustice to a gallant soldier of the great Republic may be speedily corrected and a great wrong righted, the committee concur in the recommendation of the Secretary of War for the passage of the bill. The Secretary's report hereto attached, after stating that he had "devoted considerable time to the consideration of the case," concludes as follows:

"It is true that the unexpired portion of the sentence could be remitted by the President and he could be restored to duty, but, in my opinion, this would not be a full measure of relief to him, and I therefore recommend legislation for his relief."

The Secretary of War in his report also says that Major Wham's "record during the war was a brilliant one," and judging from the following testimonials his record as a paymaster has been no less brilliant:

"Major Wham, while serving under me in the Department of the Atlantic, performed his duties in a courteous and satisfactory manner, promptly and most excellently. There were none better.

"Very truly, yours,

DANIEL MCCLURE,
"Colonel, Retired."

"During the period of Major Wham's service under my command in the Department of Arizona he performed his duties in a prompt, courteous, and satisfactory manner.

"ALEXANDER McDOWELL McCOOK,
"Major-General, Retired."

"Major Wham, paymaster, United States Army, while stationed at my headquarters in 1892, attended promptly, courteously, and satisfactorily to his duties.

"W. P. CARLIN,
"Brigadier-General and Brevet Major-General, U. S. A., Retired."

Brig. Gen. E. S. Otis, now commanding Department of the Colorado, and the last department commander under whom Major Wham served, at the conclusion of an extended letter says: "His (Major Wham's) services were discharged promptly and satisfactorily."

Attached is a recommendation for the Congressional medal of honor on two distinct occasions by Major-General Kimball, Major Wham's division commander during the war, and Maj. Gen. D. K. Stanley, United States Army, for bounding over the works at Franklin and going to the rescue of a fallen comrade, and a few days later at Nashville, Tenn., planting the colors of Grant's old regiment, first on Montgomery Hill, the apex of the Confederate position; also a recommendation for promotion to Paymaster-General, signed by the entire Illinois delegation, irrespective of party, and C. T. Christensen, manager Drexel Morgan & Co.; Rev. William Hays Ward, editor of the Independent, and Gen. Horace Porter.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 19, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to return H. R. 437, "To enable the President to restore Maj. Joseph W. Wham, paymaster, United States Army, to duty, his former rank and status in the United States Army."

Major Wham was tried by a general court-martial and sentenced to be dismissed the service, which sentence was mitigated by the President to suspension on half pay from rank, duty, and all privileges until January 18, 1904, his name to be placed at the foot of majors in the Pay Department. I inclose a copy of the report of the Judge-Advocate-General made to me on the 26th of August, 1897, in which he reviews the proceedings in the case.

The charge against Major Wham, upon which he was tried, grew out of a transaction in relation to a mining company which involved the payment of a note amounting to $1,000. It was entirely a private transaction between individuals and had no relation to any matters connected with the military service, except as it affected his conduct as an officer of the Army.

I have devoted considerable time to the consideration of this case and am not convinced from the testimony that Major Wham was so culpable as to warrant his dismissal from the service, or even his punishment in the degree to which it was mitigated by the President. He was careless and negligent of his own interests in not submitting a defense to the charge against him, the case going to a verdict upon the testimony of the prosecution.

From papers filed by Major Wham it appears that he lost considerable money in ventures in which he engaged, especially as to two ranches which he attempted to make productive or profitable, and was without means to meet his indebtedness. His record in the Army during the war was a brilliant one.

It is true that the unexpired portion of the sentence could be remitted by the President and he could be restored to duty; but, in my opinion, this would not be a full measure of relief to him, and I therefore recommend legislation for his relief.

Very respectfully,

R. A. ALGER,
Secretary of War.

HON. JOHN A. T. HULL,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

OGDEN, UTAH, October 24, 1898.

SIR: I had the honor to command the First Division, Fourth Army Corps, Army of the Cumberland, at the battle of Nashville, on the 15th and 16th days of December, 1864, and in the capture of Montgomery Hill on the 15th, containing 12 Napoleon guns—the apex of the rebel position. The Twenty-first Illinois Veteran Volunteer Infantry was in the rear line of battle when the charge was ordered. That it was in the front line when the hill was captured; that during the charge the color bearer of that regiment was severely wounded, and that Sergt. J. W. Wham took the colors, carried them forward, and planted them upon the works; if not absolutely the first to be planted, they were certainly very nearly so. And I earnestly recommend that for this gallant act he be awarded the Congressional medal of honor.

Very respectfully,

NATHAN KIMBALL,
Late Brigadier and Brevet Major-General, Commanding First Division, Fourth Corps, Army of the Cumberland.

HON. SECRETARY OF WAR,
Washington, D. C.

OGDEN, UTAH, October 24, 1898.

SIR: I had the honor to command the First Division, Fourth Army Corps, Army of the Cumberland, in the battle at Franklin, Tenn., on the 30th day of November, 1864. The Twenty-first Regiment Illinois Veteran Volunteer Infantry was in my division and took a prominent part in that battle. The regiment was noted for its daring gallantry. My attention is called to the daring and gallant act of Sergt. Joseph W. Wham, afterwards first lieutenant of Company G, Twenty-first Illinois Infantry, who at the risk of his own life, and in face of a close and direct fire from the enemy at short range, jumped over the breastworks to the rescue of his comrade, James Hillham, who had been shot and fell outside of our lines. Sergeant Wham lifted him up and carried him inside of our lines.

For this daring and successful act in going to his comrade's rescue I with pleasure do earnestly commend him to the favorable consideration of the Secretary of War, and recommend that a medal of honor be granted him.

Very respectfully,

NATHAN KIMBALL,
Late Brigadier and Brevet Major-General,
Commanding First Division, Fourth Corps, Army of the Cumberland.
The SECRETARY OF WAR,
Washington, D. C.

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE, UNITED STATES SOLDIERS' HOME,
Washington, D. C., November 1, 1898.

I certify that I know Capt. Harrison Black and also know Capt. James W. Duncan, late of Twenty-first Illinois Volunteers, and that I am intimately acquainted with Nathan Kimball, late brigadier-general, brevet major-general of volunteers, and I have the fullest confidence in their statements of the bravery and gallantry of Sergeant Wham, now Major Wham, at the battles of Franklin and Nashville, and I do hereby recommend him for the medal of honor.

D. K. STANLEY,
Brigadier-General and Brevet Major-General, U. S. A.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., January —, 1899.

TO THE PRESIDENT:

We most earnestly ask the appointment of Maj. J. W. Wham, paymaster, U. S. A., as Paymaster-General of the Army. He was a soldier in Grant's old regiment, and participated with that regiment in thirteen battles.

Years after, when the young and stalwart soldier had reached mature manhood and had been intrusted with many responsibilities by his old colonel, who, meantime, had won the highest honor of earth (President of the great Republic), was, finally, March 3, 1877, honored by him with the appointment of paymaster, which was probably the last official act of the great commander's illustrious career.

Immediately after the battle of Stone River a department order was issued requiring five privates to be selected "who were most distinguished for bravery, enterprise, endurance, soldierly conduct, and skill in the use of arms." Private Wham was one of the men selected. At Franklin he bounded over the works and, amidst the most terrible battle of modern times, went to the assistance of a fallen comrade. At Nashville, a few days later, in the charge on Montgomery Hill, his regiment started in the rear line of battle, swept to the front, and its colors were the first planted on the apex of the rebel position, placed by him, though not of the color guard; and recently among the lonely mountains of Arizona, when attacked by banditti, he defended his trust until his little escort had sustained the heaviest casualty list ever historically reported, every soldier but one who remained with him in the vicinity of the treasure box being wounded.

It was such yeoman service as this which kept our flag in the air and our nation on the map of the world.

There can be no just comparison of such service with that rendered in the safe and comfortable seclusion of an office located far from the sound of battle.

Every cent of the vast amount intrusted to him for disbursement has been properly accounted for.

Joseph W. Vance, adjutant-general, Illinois (late first lieutenant, Twenty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry); N. Black, late captain Company H, Twenty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry; George Hunt, attorney-general, Illinois (late captain Company E, Twelfth Illinois Volunteers); C. W. Pavey, State auditor, Illinois (late Company E, Eightieth Illinois Volunteers); Charles Becker, State treasurer, Illinois; J. H. Pearson, secretary of state, Illinois; Richard Edwards, superintendent public instruction, Illinois; C. P. Hitch, United States marshal, southern district Illinois; James A. Connolly, United States attorney, Illinois; Joseph F. Fifer, governor; S. M. Cullom, United States Senator; J. G. Cannon, member of Congress, Fifteenth district, Illinois; George W. Smith, member of Congress, Twentieth district, Illinois; F. S. Post, member of Congress, Tenth district, Illinois; William E. Mason, member of Congress, Third district, Illinois; Lewis E. Payson, member of Congress, Ninth district, Illinois; A. J. Hopkins, member of Congress, Fifth district, Illinois; W. H. Gest, member of Congress, Eleventh district, Illinois; W. S. Forman, member of Congress, Eighteenth district, Illinois; J. R. Williams, member of Congress, Nineteenth district, Illinois; Abner Taylor, member of Congress, First district, Illinois; Thomas J. Henderson, member of Congress, Seventh district, Illinois; George W. Fithian, member of Congress, Seventeenth district, Illinois; Frank Lawler, member of Congress, Second district, Illinois; B. R. Hitt, member of Congress, Sixth district, Illinois; C. A. Hill, member of Congress, Eighth district, Illinois; George E. Adams, member of Congress, Fourth district, Illinois; William Hayes Ward, editor of the Independent; C. T. Christensen, manager Drexel, Morgan & Co., New York (late brevet brigadier-general, United States Volunteers); Horace Porter, vice-president Pullman Palace Car Company (late of General Grant's staff).

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] ought to consent to striking out the second section of the bill. If I remember correctly, some years ago, when I was a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I gave careful investigation to this very matter, and a unanimous favorable report was made in behalf of the beneficiary of this bill. This officer made a most admirable record as a brave and gallant man. There was nothing in the record affecting his personal integrity. I believe he ought not only to be restored to his rank, but he ought to have the pay contemplated in the second section of this bill. It will, in my opinion, be a simple act of justice, already too long deferred.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I thank the gentleman for his statement.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] if this court-martial that acted in this case was a court-martial of last resort for this particular case?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Oh, yes.

Mr. SIMS. Was there no appeal?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No appeal. The reports of courts-martial go to the President for approval or disapproval, and this one went to the President and the President modified it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think that no man who has investigated this case as my friend from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] has but will come to the same conclusion he did.

Mr. CONNOLLY. That is true.

Mr. SIMS. But you do not object to answering questions?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Oh, no.

Mr. SIMS. If the President reviewed it and modified it, he must have considered every element in the case.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I do not know to what extent the President would go through the record of a court-martial to determine the facts and the law.

Mr. SIMS. Was it not President Harrison who approved the finding of this court-martial?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I judge it must have been, as this action was taken in 1890.

Mr. SIMS. Then let me ask this question: Upon the gentleman's own statement, if this bill should be passed, would it not necessarily be a reflection upon the court-martial and the President of the United States?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No more than the President's action was a reflection on the court-martial when he modified the sentence which the court undertook to impose. I presume that the President himself never looked through the record or read the evidence, there is too much of it; it is a large volume.

Mr. SIMS. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he said there could have been no reason for the action taken by the court-martial except to make a place for another man.

Mr. LANHAM. As I recollect the facts of the case, the impression was made on my mind that there was a conspiracy against this man because he was a candidate for some important office.

A MEMBER. Paymaster-General in the Army.

Mr. LANHAM. I do not believe the court-martial decided right.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The man who had this claim against Major Wham said nothing about it for ten years—did not make any claim during that time—not until Major Wham became a candidate for Paymaster-General.

Mr. SIMS. There has been so much said within the last year or two in the way of objection to criticising the action of courts of last resort that it seems to me we ought to be careful how we act in such matters as this.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The gentleman will remember what we say in ordinary parlance about courts-martial, that they are generally organized to convict and very rarely to acquit.

Mr. SIMS. It seems to me that this bill if passed would be a very serious reflection upon those gentlemen who constituted that court.

Mr. SULZER. That is no reason why we should not do justice to an innocent man.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I am very sure I would not stand here to defend those men in the judgment that they rendered on the evidence submitted.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman is quite right. Not to pass this bill would be doing a gross injustice to an innocent man. As a member of the committee, I carefully examined this bill and all the facts in the case. It ought to pass unanimously. I trust there will be no objection to it.

Mr. SIMS. I do not see why the officers who constituted this court should be impeached upon ex parte statements, without even giving their names on the floor of the House.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The gentleman knows the popular impression of how courts-martial are usually organized—to convict, and not to acquit.

Mr. STEELE. I do not think that that is a fair statement. They are organized to acquit as often as to convict.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I stated what is the popular estimation in regard to such courts.

Mr. BURKE. I wish to put this question to the gentleman as a lawyer: This case having proceeded regularly through the ordinary legal channels, and the action of the court-martial having received the approval of the War Department and the President of the United States, does it not necessarily follow, is it not a legal presumption, that justice was dealt out to this man? I want to ask the gentleman, further, whether he does not consider it bad policy for this House to undertake to sit in review upon the action of the War Department in this case or similar cases, when that action has received the approval of the President of the United States?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No, sir; I hope the day will never come in this country when the representatives of the people will be afraid to sit in judgment on courts-martial.

Mr. BURKE. I agree with the gentleman fully; but I wish to make this further suggestion, that the action here proposed is purely ex parte so far as this House is concerned.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The Committee on Military Affairs have had the entire record before them.

Mr. HANDY. Was not the committee, with the entire record before it, able to find out who were the officers that sat on this court-martial?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HANDY. Then will the gentleman please name those officers to the House? If the committee gave such thorough examination to this case, some member of the committee ought to be able to give the names of the officers who constituted that court-martial.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I do not know that that would throw any light on the merits of the case.

Mr. HAY. I can say to the gentleman from Delaware that I was on the committee, and I learned during the course of our examination the names of the officers who composed this court-martial. But I can not keep such things in my head for two or three months. I will say that the committee was moved to make this report because it believed that there had been on the part of this man, who claimed that Major Wham owed him $1,000, an attempt to collect this alleged debt through a court-martial; and the committee, so believing from all the evidence before it, reported favorably on this bill.

Mr. HANDY. We were just informed by another gentleman here that there was a "conspiracy" to prevent Major Wham from being made Paymaster-General of the United States Army.

Mr. CONNOLLY. It looked to me as though that was the case. Mr. HANDY. There seem to have been two "conspiracies" going on at the same time.

Mr. HAY. We did not hear anything about that in the committee at all. We considered the case upon all the evidence, we heard everything that could be said, and we did not hear anything about a conspiracy in connection with the Paymaster-Generalship of the Army. We believed that injustice had been done this man and we thought the injustice ought to be remedied.

Mr. LANHAM. Is this a unanimous report?

Mr. HAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. LANHAM. As a member of a committee, I examined this case some years ago, and formed the same opinion which has been expressed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. SIMS. If the officers constituting the court-martial acted from such motives as the gentleman from Illinois has imputed to them, they ought to be court-martialed themselves; and unless their names be given I shall object to the bill.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The gentleman must not understand me as saying that the members of this court-martial engaged in a conspiracy. I do not say that; I distinctly say otherwise. I do not know that they knew anything about Major Wham's application for a Paymaster-Generalship.

Mr. SIMS. Unless their names are given, I shall object. Enough has been said here to imply a serious charge against them; and if they are guilty as charged, they should not go unpunished.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The gentleman knows that I have not the names here. They are in the committee room. The House can not wait until I send there to get them.

Mr. HANDY. Is it not within the power of the President of the United States, without any action on the part of Congress, to pardon this paymaster and restore him to his rank at once?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Oh, yes; but a pardon would imply criminality.

Mr. HANDY. It has been in the President's power every day since the court-martial convicted this man to restore him to full rank and full pay by Presidential action without any action on the part of Congress.

Mr. CONNOLLY. That would imply that he had committed a crime.

Mr. HANDY. The pardon of the President could relieve this man from the sentence of the court-martial so far as it has not already been carried into effect. He has not been dismissed from the Army; he is simply suspended on half pay; and the President can terminate and remove that punishment any day.

Mr. DOCKERY. One thing that the President could not do would be to give him the half pay that he has already lost.

Mr. HANDY. Yes; with that exception this man could get from the President everything that he could get from Congress by the passage of this bill. The President can not remove any part of the penalty which Major Wham has already suffered; the President can not reimburse to him the pay that has already been withheld; but at any time the President can pardon him and thereby restore him to his former rank and pay.

Mr. HOPKINS. What does a pardon mean? Does it not imply that the person pardoned has done wrong?

Mr. CONNOLLY. And he denies that.

Mr. HANDY. Has not his conviction by a court-martial already thrown the implication of wrongdoing upon him?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, no; it does not.

Mr. SIMS. Unless the names of the members of this court-martial be given, I must object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a brief statement preliminary to submitting a motion. It was expected yesterday when the House adjourned that the Senate would complete the consideration of the war revenue bill to-day and send it to the House to-morrow. I am now informed that there is no probability of the bill reaching the House before Monday. In view of this fact, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. LAWRENCE.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3334) for the relief of the estate of George W. Lawrence.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of George W. Lawrence for further compensation for the construction of the U. S. monitor Wassuc under his contract with the Navy Department of June 2, 1863, may be submitted by his personal representatives within six months after the passage of this act to the Court of Claims, under and in compliance with the rules and regulations of said court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and render judgment upon the same: Provided, however, That the investigation of said claim shall be made upon the following basis: The said court shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by the contractor for the construction of the ironclad monitor Wassuc under said contract in the completion of the same, by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required and delays in the prosecution of the work: Provided further, That such changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required were occasioned by the Government of the United States; but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged term for completing the work beginning February 3, 1884, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor: And provided further, That the compensation fixed by the contractor and the Government for specific alterations in advance of such alterations shall be conclusive as to the compensation to be made therefor: Provided, That such alterations, when made, complied with the specifications of the same as furnished by the Government aforesaid: And provided further, That all moneys paid to said contractor by the Government over and above the original contract price for building said vessel shall be deducted from any amounts allowed by said court by reason of the matters hereinbefore stated: And provided further, That if any such changes caused less work and expense to the contractor than the original plans and specifications a corresponding deduction shall be made from the contract price and the amount thereof shall be deducted from any allowance which may be made by said court to said claimant.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. How does this bill come up?

The SPEAKER. It comes up on a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think we had better have the regular order. This is private-bill day. This is a private bill, and it ought to come up in the regular way.

Mr. MAHON. I should like to make a statement. This matter has been in controversy between the Navy Department and this party already. The bill has passed through three Congresses, both House and Senate, making a direct appropriation. This is a carefully prepared bill to send the whole matter to the Court of Claims and let them adjudicate the matters there.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It merely sends it to the Court of Claims?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; and I asked unanimous consent because I did not want to ask for the regular order to-day.

Mr. DOCKERY. But this bill provides:

And said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and render judgment upon the same.

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. How much is involved?

Mr. MAHON. I believe about sixty or sixty-five thousand dollars is the difference between them. If you will read the whole bill, you will find it is a proper bill. Read the whole bill carefully.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not want to object to the request of my amiable friend from Pennsylvania, but I would ask him to let this go over until we have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. MAHON. Then I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LACEY. There is a bill upon the Speaker's table, with a similar bill upon the House Calendar—Senate bill 4676. I do not know whether it would require unanimous consent to take it up at this time, but I feel quite sure that the House will give consent if attention is called to the nature of the bill.

Mr. MAHON. What bill is that?

Mr. LACEY. Senate bill 4676, relating to homestead settlers who are now in the Army. It is a matter of urgency.

Mr. MAHON. I have made a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. I do not think we shall be in committee more than twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. There are some matters on the Speaker's table and some matters of unfinished business which should be submitted before the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON].

CLARK W. HARRINGTON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 759) to increase the pension of Clark W. Harrington, with House amendments thereto, to which amendments the Senate disagreed and requested a conference.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, the House insisted upon its amendments and agreed to the conference; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, and Mr. DRIGGS.

CASSIUS M. CLAY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 719) granting a pension to Cassius M. Clay, sr., a citizen of Kentucky and a major-general in the Army of the United States in the war of the rebellion, with House amendments thereto, to which amendments the Senate disagreed and requested a conference.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, the House insisted on its amendments and agreed to the conference asked for; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, and Mr. DRIGGS.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to get a bill reprinted. It can not be done without an order from the House. A mistake has been made in the print of the bill, so I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution authorizing a reprint.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not like to interrupt the regular order. Would it be time enough at the end of the session?

Mr. WARNER. All I care for is to get a prompt reprint of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not like to interrupt the regular order, but will submit the gentleman's request later.

BILLS PASSED.

The following bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole, some with and some without amendments, with the recommendation that they do pass, and on the Calendar of Unfinished Business, were severally considered, the amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole agreed to, the House bills ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and passed, and the Senate bills ordered to a third reading, and passed:

A bill (S. 449) granting an increase of pension to Susan D. Yates;

A bill (S. 4169) granting an increase of pension to Simeon Stevens;

A bill (H. R. 3081) granting an increase of pension to Michael J. Fogerty;

A bill (H. R. 3164) granting a pension to Alden B. Thompson;

A bill (H. R. 5707) to remove the charge of desertion from William Mellicott, alias William Reed;

A bill (H. R. 6535) granting a pension to Mary Ann Sullivan;

A bill (S. 1118) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Chamberlin;

A bill (S. 1181) granting a pension to Adonia Huard;

A bill (S. 104) granting an increase of pension to Lucretia C. Waring;

A bill (S. 1472) granting an increase of pension to Bettie Hord Brown;

A bill (S. 1702) granting an increase of pension to Nancy G. Allabach;

A bill (S. 3553) granting a pension to Bvt. Lieut. Col. Amos Webster;

A bill (S. 1481) granting an increase of pension to Gen. Halbert E. Paine;

A bill (S. 3660) granting a pension to Thomas Edsall;

A bill (H. R. 8854) to correct military record of William Hezelbeck;

A bill (H. R. 3190) granting an honorable discharge to John H. Smith;

A bill (H. R. 1529) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Nevitt;

A bill (H. R. 7989) granting an increase of pension to Annie J. Bassett;

A bill (H. R. 6482) granting a pension to Herbert W. Leach;

A bill (H. R. 795) granting a pension to William Henry Smith;

A bill (H. R. 4274) granting an increase of pension to James S. Chapman;

A bill (H. R. 5054) granting a pension to Rachel J. Comer;

A bill (H. R. 8724) granting a pension to Addie L. Ballou;

A bill (H. R. 7506) granting a pension to Susan E. Fielder;

A bill (H. R. 8286) granting an increase of pension to Alphonzo O. Drake;

A bill (H. R. 7306) granting an increase of pension to S. H. Beckwith;

A bill (H. R. 4251) granting a pension to Margaret Thomas;

A bill (H. R. 4916) granting a pension to Virginia C. Fleanor;

A bill (H. R. 6718) granting relief to Samuel Racey;

A bill (H. R. 7841) granting an increase of pension to George S. Walton;

A bill (H. R. 8670) granting a pension to Pryor Perkins;

A bill (H. R. 3565) granting a pension to Theresa Bonnavau;

A bill (H. R. 7696) for the relief of William Christenberry;

A bill (H. R. 9755) for the relief of Mathilda Waedel;

A bill (H. R. 7844) granting an increase of pension to Mary Brozgan;

A bill (H. R. 3612) granting an increase of pension to Thomas D. Porter;

A bill (H. R. 4607) granting an honorable discharge to Charles Miller;

A bill (H. R. 727) granting a pension to Olive H. South;

A bill (H. R. 4811) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane E. Zink;

A bill (H. R. 9765) granting an increase of pension to John N. Wiley;

A bill (H. R. 9822) granting a pension to Mary C. Gardhefner;

A bill (H. R. 6064) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Watts;

A bill (H. R. 5069) granting a pension to Jacob N. Atherton;

A bill (H. R. 1712) for the benefit of Joel H. Hollowell;

A bill (H. R. 909) granting a pension to Lucy D. Hedy;
A bill (H. R. 6317) to remove charge of desertion against Alexander McKee; and

A bill (H. R. 6841) granting a pension to James C. Hervey.
During the consideration of the foregoing bills the following occurred:

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, these bills can be passed this evening just as well, and I move that we take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAY of New York) there were—ayes 30, noes 31.

Mr. McMILLIN demanded tellers.

The question was taken on ordering tellers; and the Speaker announced, 24 gentlemen rising, 36 required, not a sufficient number.

Accordingly tellers were refused, and the motion to take a recess was rejected.

MIRIAM V. KENNY.

The next business on the Calendar of Unfinished Business was the bill (H. R. 4484) for the relief of Miriam V. Kenny, widow of Samuel W. Kenny, a Union spy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Miriam V. Kenny, widow of Samuel W. Kenny, late a spy in the service of the Army of the Cumberland, at the rate of $30 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 6, after the word "Cumberland," insert "and pay her a pension."
Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Miriam V. Kenny."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to know of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions why the rate in this case is fixed at $30? If this woman had been a soldier, she could not have got more than $12 a month; if she had been the widow of a soldier, she could not have got more than eight or twelve dollars; but here her rate is fixed the same as that of the widow of a brigadier-general.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, in this case we do not propose to pension rank, but to pension this old lady on the merits of her case. We took into consideration the service she performed and her pressing necessities at the present time. We gave her a pension to take care of her during the rest of her life. The evidence in this case shows that it is a most remarkable and meritorious one. Kenny, the husband of Miriam V. Kenny, was employed by General Negley as a spy. While performing that duty he was captured, tried by the Confederates as a spy, convicted, and hanged at Tullahoma, Tenn., February 13, 1863. He left this woman his widow.

There is no question whatever about these facts. The woman served the Union during the war. She is now nearly 80 years of age, very poor and needy, a woman of good character, without any person on earth upon whom to depend. She can only live a short time, and the committee were unanimously of the opinion that under the circumstances this Government ought to give her a reasonable living during the rest of her days and not permit her to go to the poorhouse.

Mr. BARTLETT. You say she served the Government. In what capacity did she serve it? What service did she perform?

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, she aided as a nurse and aided the soldiers in many ways. She never has drawn any pension, but has taken care of herself as long as she could. Now she is very old, very poor, and very needy, and considering all these circumstances, the way she was deprived of her husband and her support, the committee thought that it ought to give her enough, not to live in luxury, but to take reasonable care of her for the rest of her days. She has never remarried.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT M'FARLAND.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 360) for the relief of Robert McFarland.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to remove the charge of dishonorable discharge against Robert McFarland, late corporal in Company B, Fifth Regiment Illinois Cavalry, and to issue to him an honorable discharge from the service of the United States, with pay and bounty, and to date October 30, 1863.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out the words "with pay and bounty, and."

Add at the end the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as we are rushing along passing bills correcting military records and removing disabilities, and while I do not undertake to make any opposition to them as they have passed the Friday night session, I ask permission that I may be granted twenty minutes to submit some remarks about the issue of bonds, not pertinent to this bill under consideration. I have not inflicted on the House a great many speeches.

Mr. RAY of New York. I know that, but would not you allow us to get through with these bills and then take the time?

Mr. TALBERT. It will not take long; I only ask for twenty minutes.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I wish the gentleman would wait until we conclude the Calendar, and then he may take thirty minutes.

Mr. TALBERT. I prefer to proceed now.

There was no objection.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, this question has been so thoroughly discussed already that anything said in addition will only be partially a repetition of what has been said or a thrashing over of old straw. So many good and even conclusive reasons have been given why there should be no addition now made to our interest-bearing debt that the subject seems about exhausted. Every substantial argument is against the issue of bonds, and there is literally nothing valid or affirmative to be urged in its favor. This is plainly to be seen at this time. What the future will bring forth, of course no one can foretell, but this can be affirmed with absolute certainty: No good reason has been presented for the issuance of bonds now, while the arguments against such a measure are unanswered and unanswerable. An issuance of bonds can mean nothing less than the subjection of the masses of the people to heavy taxation for all time to come; yes, it means more than that, a large and expensive standing army, government by injunction, the rule of corporations, trusts, and monopolies, and the death of freedom. Let us then see some of the reasons why it is not necessary.

In the first place, a glance at the state of the Treasury will disclose the fact that there are ample funds on hand and in sight to meet all immediate requirements. First of all, there is the gold reserve of $100,000,000. There is no law upon the statute books that requires the holding of any specific gold reserve or a specie reserve of any particular amount. The amount fixed upon as necessary—namely, $100,000,000—is merely a custom established by the Treasury Department, and is nothing more than the judgment of those who have had the official management or, more properly speaking, the mismanagement of our national finances. It has been also arbitrarily assumed that there is something peculiarly sacred and talismanic in the figure, $100,000,000, and that the moment we get below it we stand face to face with financial ruin. And yet on several occasions during Mr. Cleveland's second Administration it fell away below that sum, at one time, if my memory serves me right, going down to about $41,000,000.

We were not then ruined thereby, and we would not have been ruined if the reserve had gone down to $20,000,000, or $10,000,000, or even if it had entirely disappeared. The harm which came to us then was not the outflow of gold from the Treasury, but the evil lay in the method by which and the purpose for which the gold was thus withdrawn. The Treasury was simply looted by a band of robbers calling themselves the champions of "honest money." It was done for the purpose of giving the Administration an excuse to issue bonds and in the hope that it might ultimately force the retirement of all United States legal-tender currency, give the banks full control of all our paper money, and place us irrevocably upon the gold standard, which would leave, as it had already left, a trail of suffering and ruin wherever it had been established. It is the part of the plan of the goldbug element to make the common people of the country bear the burdens of war and at the same time pay the enormous interest upon $600,000,000 of bonds.

In this aspect of the question, and looking at it from this infamous standpoint, the drain of our gold was indeed and of course a bad thing. Yea, it was as dishonest and as indefensible as open highway robbery. Although in form it bore a close resemblance to swindling, the beneficiaries of such rascality were wont to call it financiering—men who, in reality, ought to have been the occupants of the convict's cell. But to pay out this gold or a considerable amount of it for war purposes is quite a different thing. The effect of this would be simply to take a given amount from the Treasury and throw it into the channels of trade, where it would stimulate and give new life to the business energies of the country and nobody would be robbed or swindled.

The advocates of the gold standard assume that the financial salvation of the American people depends upon the keeping of an immense sum of money locked up, idle, and useless in the Treasury. They lose sight of the obvious truth that the more money there is in the Treasury, the less there will necessarily be in the avenues of trade and the less able the people will be to live and to bear the burdens of taxation. The doctrine of the goldite is, more debt and less money. The true principle should be, more money and less debt, and especially should this principle be applied at a time like the present, when we are providing means for the conduct of a foreign war. The poor man should not be made to do the fighting and bear the burden of taxation also for the benefit of the bondholder and goldbug. [Applause.] The gold reserve could be used with absolute safety and with tremendous advantage to the people at large, instead of its being made use of to further fill the coffers of the rich, and the people are not unmindful of the fact that the bondholder is always exempt from taxation upon his bonds.

But leaving that entirely out of consideration, there is still a net balance of more than $100,000,000 in the Treasury, according to the last statement of the Secretary, exclusive of the gold reserve. To this we may add the silver bullion seigniorage, amounting to about $42,000,000, which can be and ought to be made immediately available by the issuance of certificates against it and putting them into circulation. Here, then, we have about $150,000,000 to begin with. Then there is no doubt that the tax features of the bill will provide fully another $150,000,000, and perhaps considerably more, especially if an income tax could only be added which tax is the most equitable and just way to reach the vast holdings of the plutocrat. This makes $300,000,000, without touching the gold reserve, or, if we include that reserve, $400,000,000. The original estimates of the probable expenses of the war were under $300,000,000 for the first year. Since then the War Department has raised its estimate about $100,000,000 and the Navy Department some $50,000,000 more.

I shall not attack these estimates except by calling attention to the fact that they seem to have been raised, not so much by the exigencies of the service as by the insatiate and hellish desire for bonds! bonds! bonds!

Since the first estimates were made we have sustained no reverses of a serious character. Spain has given no evidence of increased powers, there is nothing to indicate that for us to conquer in this war will be any more difficult than was at first supposed. On the contrary, we have scored a magnificent triumph at Manila by which Spain's entire naval force in the Pacific has been crushed, and it is quite generally believed that a victory of equal magnitude in the Atlantic would virtually settle the war. Then nothing has transpired to suggest that our military operations must be upon a larger scale than was at first calculated upon, except to the extent of the Philippine army, but it would appear from present indications that the war which was started for the sake of suffering humanity has been changed into one of grasping more territory and issuing bonds.

There has certainly been no increase of the Spanish military strength either in Cuba or Puerto Rico. Still we find the War Department raising its estimate nearly $100,000,000 at a single step, the Navy Department nearly $50,000,000 in the same way, and the President calling for 75,000 additional troops before he has used a single solitary regiment in active service or from the volunteer force, and without a sign upon the war's horizon to indicate that the number originally called for would not be ample.

But even with these additions to the expense, there is no good reason why the first year's outlay for war purposes should be more than $400,000,000. As I have already shown, nine months of this expense—that is to say, $300,000,000—and perhaps more can be provided for without trenching upon the gold reserve at all, and by using that reserve we can provide for the whole year without the issuance of a single bond, and then, if necessary, instead of bonds provide for the issuance of Treasury notes, which will bear no interest, to such an amount as the exigency may require.

If the war be strongly and energetically prosecuted, it ought not to last six months from the date of the actual beginning; but by dillydallying as the Administration is now doing, there is no telling how long hostilities may continue.

But suppose it should last a year or more, will not Congress again be in session next winter, ready and willing to provide for every want which may then exist? Nay, could not Congress be called together if the condition should become strained and the necessity of the case demanded it? Loading the people down with an interest-bearing debt is a very serious thing to do. The interest charge is necessarily just so much added to the actual expense, and it also constitutes an incubus that should not be hung upon the necks of the people unless it be in a case of extreme urgency—only after all other fair and reasonable methods have been entirely and completely exhausted. Why not accept in place of bonds the issuance of greenbacks or Treasury notes, as Jefferson has said, bottomed on taxes and the patriotism of the people?

It must be borne in mind that in the prosecution of this war there is no party or faction seeking to hinder or embarrass the Administration in the slightest degree. The only complaint we of this side of the House have to make with reference to the conduct of the war is that the Administration had to be dragged into it in the first place, and then has moved at a snail's pace ever since. We believe that a decisive blow should have been struck long before this for the relief of the starving thousands of Cuba, which was the pretended object only, as it now seems, of the party in power. After having waged a war upon humanitarian grounds you have shifted to a war for conquest—to grab more territory. This seems to me to smack of great hypocrisy, to say the least of it.

But, nevertheless, we have voted and are ready to still vote for everything necessary for its successful prosecution. At the same time we do most earnestly and seriously object to and protest against the Administration and its supporters making the war an excuse to carry out the behests of the money power in regard to our financial policy, cramming down our throats measures of the most obnoxious and outrageous character, and then challenging our patriotism and loyalty if we question their wisdom and justice. We are alike opposed to having the war made use of to enact measures which have so often failed of enactment on account of their enormity and vice in times of peace. The propositions embodied in this revenue bill are practically the same that have been recommended both by Carlisle and the present Secretary of the Treasury, Gage, in times of profound peace.

Now, without a desire to harshly criticize the Administration, it is a well-known and acknowledged fact that ever since the inauguration of Mr. McKinley his Administration has stood pledged to an issue of bonds for the ostensible purpose of committing the country more thoroughly to the gold standard, retiring the greenbacks, and thereby placing the people absolutely at the mercy of the banks for their supply of paper money. And I desire to say further that it is a significant, very curious, and somewhat striking coincidence that the amount of bonds deemed necessary in time of peace for the retirement of the greenbacks should have been just $500,000,000, while the amount provided by this bill for war purposes as it originally passed the House was exactly the same, with $100,000,000 in currency certificates thrown in for good measure, as it were.

I repeat it, this is an exceedingly startling coincidence, together with the effect of peaceful blockades and a general tardiness in moving armies and navies. And, too, when we consider that every man who desired a bond issue for the cancellation of United States circulating notes is now equally in favor of this bond issue, it is indeed and in truth but natural for many persons to be extremely suspicious of the motive behind this urgent demand for bonds at the very inception of hostilities and before any real war necessity has appeared; and this suspicion is considerably intensified by the circumstance that the most vociferous shouters for bonds to vigorously prosecute the war are men who do not want it vigorously prosecuted, who never have wanted it done, and who are now anxious to let Spain down just as easily and lightly as possible. A funny spectacle now presents itself to the country, the American fleet patrolling the seas looking for the Spanish fleet instead of going ahead with the freeing of Cuba and attending to the enemy as he presents himself.

But whatever the motive, there is no necessity for a bond issue now, and there is nothing in the present outlook to indicate that there ever will be any necessity for a large addition to our interest-bearing debt, which even in the most extreme case would only be a necessary evil at the best; but when not by any means necessary, it would be beyond a doubt an unmitigated crime against humanity and a curse upon the generations yet unborn.

In a recent issue the National Bimetallist, a very able monetary journal, speaking upon this subject, said:

It will also, we assume, be generally agreed that there should be no addition to our interest-bearing debt unless it be absolutely necessary, and that under no circumstances should such increase exceed the imperative requirements of the situation.

No private individual ever incurs a debt, and particularly a debt bearing interest, if he can accomplish the same end equally well without it. The same principle should govern nations, which are mere aggregations of individuals.

Debt, and especially interest-bearing debt, is the load which is bearing the world down to-day, and it is the most vital element in the great monetary problem with which we are struggling. It involves the most important economic and social considerations. If there were no such thing as debt in the world, the money question would lose its transcendent importance.

If there were neither debt nor fixed charges of any kind calling for payment in a certain number of dollars, pounds sterling, francs, etc., it would make comparatively little difference whether the supply of money were large or small, so far as equities are concerned. But the fact that there are so many charges that are practically fixed in terms of money, always calling for so many dollars, however scarce the dollars may be, and the further fact that debt constitutes the principal part of these fixed charges, makes the supply or quantity of money the most important economic question with which civilized men have been required to deal.

There is a world of significance in these words, and every patriotic American anxious for the future welfare of the country and the happiness of its people should ponder them well.

In the prosecution of this war there is no element of disloyalty in the country unless it be among those who are most anxious for an issue of bonds, and in my judgment that species of disloyalty which manifests itself in a desire to feast and fatten and gorge upon the misfortunes or necessities of the people is the most reprehensible and infernal, yea, the worst in the whole category of treasons, for it is a treason that has no higher motive back of it other than the immensely selfish and fiendish greed of the shynock. I say, let us move slowly and prudently in this matter.

Let us endeavor by all means in our power to provide a just and equitable and adequate revenue, and at the same time make use of every available asset. But let us issue no bonds; let us not place another mortgage upon the country, to hang like a millstone around the necks of posterity for generations to come; let us do no such ill-advised, injudicious, and unpatriotic thing unless and until the developments of the war make it an imperative necessity that can not in any manner whatever be avoided. Let not the splendid outburst of patriotic sentiment that has just astonished the whole world be marred by an act of financial trickery and dishonor that will stand as a foul blot upon the pages of our country's history for all time to come. [Applause.]

A wicked and perverse generation seeketh for a sign, but no sign shall be given them.

So a wicked and perverse crowd asketh for bonds, and I hope no bonds shall be given them. [Applause.]

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion.

Mr. MAHON. We can pass the remainder of these bills at the night session.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. It will only take a little while to complete this Calendar, and I hope the gentleman will not insist on his motion.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his motion for a minute.

Mr. MAHON. I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Senator in charge of the war revenue bill in the Senate that on account of developments that have occurred within the last hour or two he is confident that the bill will pass the Senate to-day and can reach the House by to-morrow at noon, at the opening of the session. In view of that fact, I move to reconsider the motion by which the House voted that when it adjourn it be until next Monday.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I now withdraw the motion.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House do now take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, as to each and all of the bills that have passed this afternoon, I move to reconsider the votes by which they were passed and to lay the latter motion on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE). The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas a mistake was made in printing H. R. 8571, a bill to define and punish crimes in the District of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said District, accompanied by Report No. 1482, by printing the amendment of section 207 of Title I as of section 207 of Title II; Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Public Printer be, and hereby is, ordered and directed to correctly reprint said bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is this for the reprint of a bill which has been introduced?

Mr. WARNER. It is the report by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws pertaining to crime in Alaska, and the printer has made a mistake. He has got 207, Title I, and 207, Title II. Two hundred and seven, Title I, was amended, and he has put it in as Title II.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 10525) authorizing certain life-saving stations to be opened and manned during June and July, 1898.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 4099) to provide an American register for the steamship China; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4578) to remove all disabilities imposed by the fourteenth article of the Constitution.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 4678. An act providing for a Second Assistant Secretary of War—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4677. An act to provide for the employment of retired officers of the United States Army in time of war—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. Res. 189. Joint resolution authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to locate a cab service, and for other purposes.

PROTECTION OF HOMESTEAD SETTLERS IN THE SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4676) for the protection of homestead settlers who enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in every case in which a settler on the public land of the United States under the homestead laws enlists or is actually engaged in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States as private soldier, officer, seaman, or marine, during the existing war with Spain, or during any other war in which the United States may be engaged, his services therein shall, in the administration of the homestead laws, be construed to be equivalent to all intents and purposes to residence and cultivation for the same length of time upon the tract entered or settled upon; and hereafter no contest shall be initiated on the ground of abandonment, nor allegation of abandonment sustained against any such settler, unless it shall be alleged in the preliminary affidavit or affidavits of contest, and proved at the hearing in cases hereafter initiated, that the settler's alleged absence from the land was not due to his employment in such service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if this has been reported by the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. LACEY. The Committee on Public Lands reported a bill drawn by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS] of a similar import, but the verbiage somewhat different. This bill was drawn in the Department of the Interior and introduced in the Senate. There is some difference between the two bills in phraseology. Inasmuch as this bill has passed the Senate, the committee concluded to substitute it for the bill drawn by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman state the object of the bill?

Mr. LACEY. A good many soldiers who are homesteaders have gone into the Army and some into the Navy of the United States, leaving their homesteads, and this bill will relieve them from living on the homestead during the time they are in the service of the Government and gives them credit on their five years' time for so much time as they may remain in the service.

There is one addition to the original proposition in the Morris bill, and that is that this shall apply also to soldiers of other wars, such as the Mexican and Indian wars; that they shall have credit on their five years for the time they served in the Army. We did have such a law as to the soldiers in the late war, but it did not apply to the soldiers of the Mexican or the Indian war. This provision makes the law of 1861 general as to other soldiers, and applies also to the soldiers of the present war.

Mr. DOCKERY. It seems to be a very wise bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state that the committee this morning went over this bill, having previously gone over a similar measure introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS]; and it was agreed to ask the passage of this bill instead of his. The measure seems to me a good one, and it received the unanimous approval of the committee.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether it does not extend the privilege in question to a greater extent than it is now extended to soldiers of the late war? The present law, I believe, would only allow three years to count in proving up a homestead. Does not this bill in its present form remove all bars and permit a man to go upon public land and obtain title without in fact living a single day upon it—that is, to go there at the instigation of somebody else?

Mr. LACEY. The enlistments for the present war are for two years; those for the war of 1861 were generally for three years; but the time of credit was not limited to three years.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that; no more than three years could be counted, and a man must live upon the land not less than two years. Now, in this bill I think the committee has opened the door so that speculators in lands may secure soldiers to go upon the land and acquire title without actually living upon it one day. That is to say, you have removed the bars entirely.

Mr. LACEY. No; that is impossible, because the enlistments under the law now are for two years. To acquire title the man must serve two years in the Army, and at the end of that time must return to his homestead and live there three years longer before he can acquire title.

Mr. LOUD. Is the bill so carefully guarded as to insure that?

Mr. LACEY. There is no trouble about that matter. The Senate bill was drawn by Mr. Hermann, or under his direction. I think it covers the case fully. It only gives the soldier credit for the time he actually serves in the existing war.

Mr. LOUD. And that should not exceed three years.

Mr. LACEY. Well, it can not exceed two years under the present term of enlistment.

Mr. MORRIS. I should like to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] whether he has recently examined the statute on the subject of the time allowed homesteaders who were soldiers during the last war?

Mr. LOUD. I have not examined it within one or two years.

Mr. MORRIS. I think the gentleman from California is mistaken in regard to the provisions of that law.

Mr. LOUD. I do not think I am.

Mr. MORRIS. According to my recollection of the statute, it provides that the time of the soldier's service shall be taken out of the time within which he is required to prove up his homestead.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman will find that he is required under the present law to be a bona fide resident of the land for a term of two years, only three years of service being deducted. Now, it is a question whether you have not in this bill removed every bar.

Mr. MORRIS. I hardly think we shall have any difficulty on that subject under this bill. The enlistments already made are for only two years; and I hardly think it wise to amend the Senate bill by incorporating such a provision as has been suggested, because I do not think it at all necessary. The law can be hereafter amended if an amendment be found desirable.

Mr. LOUD. Is it not always best to incorporate proper safeguards in a bill at the time of its passage? Let us suppose the case of a man entitled to a deduction of three years on account of service in the late war. He proposes to go into this war for two years. Now, on account of his three years' service in the late war and his two years' service in the present war, may he not be used by speculators as a dummy to be put upon land to secure title? I would not care, so far as I am concerned, if the soldiers themselves were to become bona fide settlers. But it will be found that they will be used as dummies, just as they are now used in the case of scrip for additional homestead.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask my friend from California, who has had large experience in these matters, whether under the existing law soldiers can in fact be used by speculators as "dummies?"

Mr. LOUD. They could under this bill, if they are entitled to a credit of two years more; they could not under the present law, because they are required to have a bona fide residence of two years, only three years of service being deducted.

Until the committee shall have investigated this phase of the case—and they do not seem to be very clear upon it now—I think this bill ought to wait another day or two.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman's suggestion in regard to a limitation of three years has never before been brought to my attention. It is possible that he may be right about this matter, although I have not so understood it and it is not so understood by gentlemen living in the homestead region.

Mr. LOUD. I know that I tried to locate some land myself a very few years ago, and I found the law to be as I have stated it. Would it not be best for the gentleman to allow this bill to lie over another day?

Mr. LACEY. There might be added a proviso that in no case shall the residence of the homesteader be less than two years, if that is the existing law. We do not want to change the existing law.

Mr. LOUD. Does not the gentleman think the best course would be to allow the bill to lie over another day so that the committee, after examining the present law carefully, may prepare a proper amendment?

Mr. LACEY. I am not very particular about having the bill passed to-day. We want to get it through in time to benefit the men who are interested.

Mr. LOUD. Any time during this Congress would be time enough.

Mr. DOCKERY. The bill might be brought up immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning.

Mr. McRAE. What is the pending proposition in regard to this bill? Is there a request for unanimous consent that it be considered, or is it now before the House?

Mr. GIBSON. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection has been suggested, and the Chair understands that the bill will not be pressed at this time.

Mr. LACEY. I will try to bring the bill up to-morrow morning, and in the meantime attention will be given to the point suggested by the gentleman from California.

Mr. LOUD. I would like the committee to satisfy themselves on this point.

Mr. GIBSON. Regular order.

Mr. DINGLEY (at 2.40 o'clock p. m.). I move that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] will please act as Speaker pro tempore at the evening session. The House is now in recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. LACEY as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore directed the reading of the rule prescribing the order of business for Friday-night sessions; and it was read.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask unanimous consent that to-night all bills for the removal of charges of desertion be passed over, except where the member who introduced the bill is present to advocate it and explain its merits.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] to make an exception—

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman is present, and of course my proposition does not apply to him.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am present, but I represent to-night a Senate bill.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I ask that an exception be made of all Senate bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair presumes that is the intention of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. TALBERT. Yes.

Mr. GIBSON. Before the question is put on the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina, I wish to state that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STURTEVANT], a member of the Invalid Pensions Committee, who has attended every Friday night down to the present, is obliged to be absent to-night. He is interested in two cases which may be reached. He has been a hard worker on the committee; and on his behalf I ask that if his cases be reached to-night they be considered as though he were present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request of the gentleman from South Carolina applies, as the Chair understands, only to desertion cases.

Mr. GIBSON. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina ask unanimous consent that at this evening's session bills for the removal of charges of desertion (except Senate bills) be passed over unless the member who introduced the bill is present. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make another request. It is that to-night, after we go into Committee of the Whole, the roll be called, and that each member present as his name is reached be allowed to bring up for consideration any bill he may designate, and that after the roll has been gone through with we go back to the Calendar and proceed in the regular way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that at this evening's session, when the House goes into Committee of the Whole, the roll of members be called, and that each member present as his name is reached be permitted to call up any bill on the Private Calendar which is in order under the rule.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have no particular objection to that, excepting that it will take up a great deal of time in calling the names. We could pass a dozen good pension bills while we are calling the roll.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, I do not press that.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. No; I would withdraw that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request is withdrawn.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Speaker, before we go into the Committee of the Whole, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill which I hold in my hand (S. 4451) be considered. I will state what it is. It was introduced, I think, by Senator PENROSE of Pennsylvania—by one of the Pennsylvania Senators, anyway. The bill grants a pension of $12 a month only to a woman who is now 105 years old.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. That is enough. Let us vote.

Mr. RAY of New York. Wait a moment. She had four sons, every one of whom went into the Union Army. Her sole dependence, one of those sons, is now dead. She has not a dollar in the world, and is dependent on charity. The evidence is almost conclusive, although not quite technically satisfactory, that this son died of disease contracted in the service. She was once granted a pension, the proof being accepted, but the Bureau subsequently dropped her. Every one of her sons had a good service record. More than that, her husband served in the war of 1812, and made a good record. Think of it! Shall this mother be dependent on charity?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, do I understand this to be a request for unanimous consent to take up this bill out of its order?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have a bill which I think is equally meritorious, and I should like to have that considered.

Mr. RAY of New York. I withdraw my request, and move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no objection to the gentleman's bill; none whatever.

Mr. GIBSON. Is the claimant in your case 105 years old?

Mr. BARTLETT. She is 90.

Mr. GIBSON. And is she the mother of four soldiers?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not desire to have any controversy with the gentleman from Tennessee. I do not object to the request of the gentleman from New York, but I say this, that I intend to ask that my bill be treated in the same way. I do not object to this, but I think a similar preference should be given to an equally meritorious bill which I have.

Mr. RAY of New York. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar under the rule which has been read.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—ayes 20, noes 0.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, with Mr. CRUMPACKER in the chair.

W. G. NEELEY.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1213) granting an honorable discharge to W. G. Neeley, of Canyon City, Colo.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to correct the military record of and grant an honorable discharge to W. G. Neeley, of Canyon City, Colo., late a private in Company I, Fifth United States Infantry Volunteers.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs was read:

After the word "Volunteers," in line 7, insert:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. TALBERT. I would ask for either the reading of the report or a statement by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] who introduced the bill as to the merits of the case. I should like to know whether this gentleman is a bounty jumper or coffee cooler, or anything of that kind.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, he is nothing of that kind. My remembrance is that this man was in the State of Kansas, and was permitted to go home while sick. While he was unable to travel, his command was ordered to Salt Lake City. They had to go overland, and he was never able to reach them. That is my remembrance of the case. I have not the report before me, but it was on account of sickness. The command went away and left him, and he never was able to reach them until they were mustered out of the service.

Mr. TALBERT. Does the gentleman know if he reenlisted in another company or regiment after being dropped from the rolls of this one?

Mr. BELL. I do not understand that he was dropped from the rolls. I understand that his command was mustered out without his being able to reach them.

Mr. TALBERT. He never reenlisted anywhere else?

Mr. BELL. Oh, no; the war ended.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JULIETTE J. HARROW.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8723) granting a pension to Juliette J. Harrow, widow of Gen. William Harrow.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll at the rate of $60 per month the name of Juliette J. Harrow, of Mount Vernon, Ind., widow of the late William Harrow, who was brigadier-general of volunteers during the civil war.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the following: "At the rate of $60 per month;" also strike out the capital letter "J."

In line 6 strike out the following: "Of Mount Vernon, Ind."

At the end of line 8 add the following: "And pay her a pension at the rate of $60 per month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving."

Amend the title to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Juliette Harrow."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

EDSON SULLIVAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5102) granting an increase of pension to Edson Sullivan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Edson Sullivan, late private in Company C, First New Hampshire Heavy Artillery Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read.

In line 7 strike out the words "of fifty" and insert in lieu thereof "at the rate of twenty-four."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GARDNER DODGE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3567) to remove the charge of desertion against Gardner Dodge.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove from the records the charge of desertion against Gardner Dodge, of Company L, Ninth Iowa Cavalry Volunteers, and he is hereby restored to all rights as to pay, bounty, and other allowances to the same extent as if said charge of desertion had not been made.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs was read:

In line 6, after the word "Volunteers," strike out the words "and he is hereby restored to all rights as to pay, bounty, and other allowances to the same extent as if said charge of desertion had not been made" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should really like to have the report read, or a statement from the gentleman who introduced this bill in regard to the merits of the case.

Mr. LACEY. This bill passed the Fifty-first Congress, both the House and the Senate, reaching the President just too late for him to take final action upon it. The facts are stated, perhaps, more clearly in the report than they could be in any statement which I could make. Let the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3567) to remove the charge of desertion against Gardner Dodge, submit the following report:

Gardner Dodge was a private in Company L, Ninth Iowa Cavalry Volunteers. At the time of his desertion he was only about 16 years of age. His conduct was good from the time of his enlistment in 1863 until March 23, 1865, when he deserted. On April 3, 1865, he returned to his company. Charges were preferred against him and he was sentenced by a court-martial May 11, 1865, to be shot. This sentence was modified by the commander of the department of Arkansas to dishonorable discharge and ten years' imprisonment. On August 9, 1865, he was released from confinement, and on August 10, 1865, was dishonorably discharged from the service.

The soldier filed his affidavit with the Secretary of War, setting forth that he was in the guardhouse and the guards told him if he wanted to go they would let him escape, and that unless he escaped he would be court-martialed. He took their advice and escaped, and after a few days was returning to his regiment when he was captured by bushwhackers.

It appears from affidavits on file that this soldier was then a mere boy, only 16 years of age, and that his conduct was due, in a great measure, to the indiscretion of his extreme youth. Since his discharge he has borne an excellent character, and his good character has been vouched for by a large number of people of the highest character and standing.

His captain, J. G. Rockafellow, testified that the soldier was a mere boy, and that it was the universal belief in his company that the sentence and conviction were unmerited and unjust; that he was not represented by any attorney and made no defense whatever, and was given no opportunity to vindicate himself; that the soldier was not in fact a deserter, but had left his command temporarily, and was returning to his command when he was captured; that he did not leave his command with the intention of deserting, and that he was in fact returning to his regiment when he was captured by the enemy. He was turned over to his command soon after his capture. His captain further swears that he believes the conviction was unjust and that the charge of desertion should be removed.

Norris Richardson, A. J. Cottrell, Martin Beason, Charles H. Jennings, W. R. Reynolds, James Early, A. B. Brebst, M. J. Fringle, James Smith, James R. Gentry, D. M. Wert, and Joseph Logaton all depose that they were members of the same company, and they all testify to substantially the same facts and opinions as Captain Rockafellow. Said Norris Richardson was first lieutenant of said company.

Thirty-five of the soldier's comrades join in a petition requesting the removal of the charges.

A petition signed by a very large number of the leading citizens of Jasper County, Iowa, has been presented, in which the excellent character of Mr. Dodge is certified.

In view of the extreme youth and good character of the soldier, and in view of the opinion of his captain, lieutenant, and comrades, that injustice had been done him, we think that the stigma attached to his name by the charge of desertion and by the conviction and sentence should be removed, and we therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Your committee have carefully considered this case and the proceedings of said court-martial, and, in view of all the facts and circumstances in this case, it is apparent that cruel injustice was done this youthful soldier, who by reason of his extreme youth could not have been held to military service, and should never have been mustered into the service.

It is only simple justice to authorize the Secretary of War to issue to him an honorable discharge as of the date of the sentence of the court-martial.

Your committee have amended the bill accordingly, and as amended report it back to the Senate and recommend its passage with the following amendment:
Strike out all after the word "volunteers," in line 4, and insert the following:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

During the reading the following occurred:

Mr. TALBERT. I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with. I suppose the general object of bills to remove the charge of desertion is to get rid of the stigma of the charge.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Dodge is one of the most reputable citizens in Jasper County. He is a wealthy farmer, of good character and high standing.

Mr. TALBERT. This bill, as I understood the reading of it, contains two amendments, which nullify each other. In the first place, one amendment says he shall be entitled to all his rights as to pay, bounty, and so forth, and the other provides that no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman did not correctly understand the reading of the bill. The first one is not an amendment, but is part of the original bill. The amendment proposes to strike that out and insert the provision that he shall receive no back pay, bounty, or emoluments.

Mr. TALBERT. I did not so understand that. If that is so, that is all right.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JACOB COVERT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6090) for the relief of and to correct the record of Jacob Covert.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of absent without leave against Jacob Covert, late first Lieutenant of Company D, Twenty-fourth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and grant him an honorable discharge, to date from the 1st day of August, 1863.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs, was read:

Insert at the end of the bill the following:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should be very glad to have the reading of the report or a statement from the gentleman who introduced the bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. This soldier, Jacob Covert, was charged with being absent without leave. As a matter of fact, he resigned. He was a lieutenant, and he resigned, and his resignation was approved, but it was lost in some way. He went away with the consent of his officers; in fact, took from the officers a letter so that he could get through the lines.

Mr. TALBERT. Those letters and documents appear in the evidence?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, yes; they all appear in the evidence.

Mr. TALBERT. And he never reenlisted?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Never reenlisted.

Mr. BRUCKER. Did you say that he was a lieutenant?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes; he was a lieutenant.

Mr. BRUCKER. Was he court-martialed?

Mr. HEMENWAY. No; he resigned on account of sickness, went home, and was sick quite a while; and he supposed that his resignation had been accepted all right.

Mr. BRUCKER. He being an officer, how could a charge of desertion be filed against him?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is not a charge of desertion; it is a charge of absence without leave.

Mr. TALBERT. I think it is a meritorious case.

Mr. BRUCKER. As a matter of fact, were there no court-martial proceedings?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, no.

Mr. BRUCKER. In the case of an officer?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Not at all.

Mr. TALBERT. As I understand, the resignation was accepted but the papers were lost.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The papers were lost.

Mr. TALBERT. These facts are established by letters from his command.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes, and from General Hover.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

NANCY BARGER.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I understand my friend the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] to state that he did not intend to object to the present consideration of the bill (S. 4431) granting a pension to Nancy Barger.

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not, and I so stated.

Mr. RAY of New York. I did not understand you. It was my misunderstanding.

Mr. BARTLETT. I stated twice that I had no objection, but I was going to suggest that I had a bill for a woman almost of equal age and merit; that I did not intend to propose to object to your bill, but I wanted mine taken up as well.

Mr. RAY of New York. It was my misunderstanding, and I therefore now ask for the immediate consideration of the bill S. 4431 in Committee of the Whole, and I ask that the report be printed as a part of the proceedings. I have already stated the facts. I did not state, however, that the old lady is substantially blind.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have got one in the same condition and whose husband was in the war of 1812.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy Barger, widow of John Barger, and dependent mother of John Barger, private in Company D, Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $19 per month.

The report (by Mr. GIBSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the Senate bill (S. 4431) granting a pension to Nancy Barger, has examined the same and all the evidence and reports:

The Senate act proposes to pension Nancy Barger, of Roland, Pa., at $12 per month.

The Senate report (No. 972) states the facts, and is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4466) granting a pension to Nancy Barger, have examined the same and report:

"The claimant herein is the widow of George Barger, late a private in Capt. Jacob Fryer's company, Pennsylvania Infantry; also mother of John Barger, late of Company D, Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Company H, Fourth Pennsylvania Infantry, who enlisted April 19, 1861, and was honorably discharged July 27, 1861, and then reenlisted September 23, 1861, was discharged October 20, 1864, and died December 23, 1891. Said son was not married and left no widow or children surviving him. Claimant is the mother of five boys, four of whom were in the late war of the rebellion. The death of her son John, who was her sole support after her husband's death, leaves her now without support, excepting what she receives from friends and neighbors.

"From an examination of the papers it is disclosed that she will be on the 7th day of May (next month), 1893, 105 years old, and that she is nearly blind and badly crippled. Her present residence is Roland, Center County, State of Pennsylvania.

"She made application as a dependent mother, but was rejected 'on the ground of failure after reasonable time to furnish the necessary evidence to prove the origin of the disability during army service.' Although from the papers it would seem to be shown that said disabilities had resulted from army service, and although her dependence seemed to be clearly proven under the act of June 27, 1890, still the Commissioner of Pensions held that the claim should be rejected. Claimant drew a pension as the widow of her husband, George Barger, but was dropped from the roll on account of error in allowance based upon failure to show death to be the result of army service.

"In view of the above facts your committee report favorably upon said bill and recommend its passage with an amendment."

Her husband served in the war of 1812.

Your committee report the act back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 4 strike out "restore to," and insert in lieu thereof the words "place on."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE B. STONE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6625) for the relief of George B. Stone.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of George B. Stone, late of Company C, Fifty-sixth Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate provided by law and the regulations of the Pension Bureau for soldiers whose disability consists in total loss of sight.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "rate," in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof "of $20 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOEL W. GIBSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5762) granting a pension to Joel W. Gibson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joel W. Gibson, of Company F, One hundred and twenty-third Ohio Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out all after the word "month" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Joel W. Gibson."

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that Mr. Norton introduced this bill, and he is not present. I ask that the Clerk before reading the bill announce the gentleman who introduced it.

Mr. BARTLETT. This is not a bill to remove a charge of desertion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that only bills are to be passed over where they are to remove the charges of desertion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ROBERT V. HANCOCK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6162) removing the charge of desertion from the record of Robert V. Hancock.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove from the rolls and records of the office of the Adjutant-General of the United States Army the charge of desertion now standing on said rolls and records against Robert V. Hancock, of New Lisbon, Juneau County, Wis., who was a private in the Seventeenth Battery, Wisconsin Volunteer Light Infantry, and grant to said Robert V. Hancock an honorable discharge.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out in lines 4 and 5 the following: "office of the Adjutant-General of the United States Army," and insert in lieu thereof "War Department." Strike out in line 8 the word "Seventeenth," and insert in lieu thereof the words "Twelfth Independent."

Line 10, after the word "discharge," add: "Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to have the report read, unless the gentleman is in possession of information which will explain it.

Mr. BABCOCK. The report is very complete, but the facts are these: This soldier was ordered home by the captain of the company, after several years' service, on account of sickness, with the understanding that his discharge was to follow. But the discharge never was received, and he never returned to his command, and never was able to do it.

Mr. TALBERT. He never enlisted in any other command?

Mr. BABCOCK. No.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

THOMAS WEST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4253) granting an honorable discharge to Thomas West.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an honorable discharge to be granted to Thomas West, late a private in Company F, Twelfth New York Infantry Volunteers, and late a private in Company B, One hundred and eighty-fifth New York Infantry Volunteers.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Add the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear a statement from the gentleman who introduced the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, this is a meritorious case. This man enlisted in 1861, served for three months, served all his time, and stayed a month and a half overtime. Then he with the most of his company went home without getting his discharge at that time. He afterwards enlisted and served until the close of the war and was honorably discharged. It seems to be a mistake, his not having his discharge when he went home the first time.

Mr. TALBERT. What did the gentleman say about the third time?

Mr. FLETCHER. I said nothing about the third time. I said it seems to have been a mistake he did not receive his discharge the first time.

Mr. TALBERT. He has had service in several enlistments?

Mr. FLETCHER. Two. He served a month and a half overtime in his first.

Mr. TALBERT. Did he receive a bounty?

Mr. FLETCHER. He received no bounty either time.

Mr. MORRIS. He reenlisted under the same name?

Mr. FLETCHER. Under the same name, and was honorably discharged at the close of the war.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY A. FREEMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5992) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Freeman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Mary A. Freeman, widow of Andrew V. Pritchard, late a private in Company H, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Mexican war, from and after the passage of this act, at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. BOTKIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a few remarks at this time on the general subject of pensions.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman have leave to print.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has not inflicted any remarks on this House of any length, and I think he ought to be allowed to proceed.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. But we have only two hours in which to pass these bills.

Mr. TALBERT. I think the gentleman ought to be entitled to make a few remarks in a general way on pension legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to be discourteous to anybody, but I want to appeal to the gentleman from Kansas to let us get along with these bills. I have attended every Friday night at this session for the purpose of getting a bill passed for an old woman 85 or 90 years old, blind, the widow of an old soldier of the war of 1812. I do not want to ask to take it up out of the regular order. I want these bills to take their regular order. But I do appeal to the gentleman from Kansas not to stop the progress of this legislation. This is the last Friday night we shall have at this session, I apprehend, and some of us have been here night after night in order to get our bills passed.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Chairman, we all have claims we want to get through. I have an old soldier that is blind, and I would like to reach that bill if we possibly can. I would like to talk an hour, but I do not want to take the time of the House that ought to be devoted to the passage of these bills.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. And I have one that is on the road to the poorhouse, and I would like to intercept him if I can.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point or order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TALBERT. If the gentleman from Kansas desires, he can address the committee for one hour. I do not suppose he intends to talk more than five or six minutes, but I maintain that any gentleman has a right to rise in his place and speak on pension matters for one hour, and I hope if he wants to talk he will sail in and talk.

Mr. BARTLETT. I disagree with the gentleman from South Carolina. The gentleman can speak an hour on this bill, but he can not speak an hour on any and all subjects.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas that he may speak upon the subject of pensions generally? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Kansas will proceed.

Mr. BOTKIN. Mr. Chairman, the State I have the honor in part to represent is in many particulars unique. Its soil drank the first blood spilled in that awful struggle which resulted in the destruction of African slavery in this country. From the anti-slavery struggle Kansas emerged to be the pioneer of all good reforms. Like all reformers, she is often the subject of ridicule and persecution from those whom she would bless. Kansas is the first State in the Union in moral reform and first in the promotion of the great industrial and financial reform which, although yet in its infancy, is at once the bright star of hope to the struggling masses and the black cloud of terror to the plutocratic classes. The historian who shall write of the present period will cheerfully accord to this splendid State a place at the head of the column in morals, intelligence, patriotism, and progress. The statement, "Kansas leads, but never follows," has already assumed in the minds of up-to-date people the character of a proverb.

It is, for instance, the first State in which the Populist party has gained full and permanent control of all branches of the State government, and, as might be expected, she now stands first among her sisters in material prosperity. Why, sir, the very first season after we captured the State we had probably the largest wheat crop in our whole history, amounting to 60,234,847 bushels. Our opponents warned the people from every Kansas stump in 1896 that if we elected Bryan President and Leedy governor the mints would be open to silver, the country would be flooded with cheap money, the prices of all commodities would be doubled, and the pension of the soldier and the wage of the laboring man would be reduced one-half in their purchasing power, and the country would be filled with calamity in consequence of these conditions.

Well, we did not quite elect Bryan—just deferred it four years. But we did elect Leedy. We did not get bimetalism; we must wait for that till the year 1901. But, if you will believe me, the price of our big wheat crop has been doubled by Governor Leedy, MARK HANNA, or foreign crop failures, and as a consequence the power of pensions and wages to buy bread has been reduced one-half, and, strange to say, instead of bemoaning these conditions, as they did prospectively during the campaign of 1896, our Republican friends triumphantly point to them as the evidences of the return of prosperity.

It is my pleasure, Mr. Chairman, to cite a new and fresh instance of the fact that "Kansas leads, but never follows," a fact in recent history of which every loyal Kansan is proud, no matter what may be his political affiliation. Some time ago a Philadelphia daily paper contained an editorial attack upon Governor Leedy, charging him with incompetency and tardiness in organizing the three regiments constituting our quota of men under the first call. It declared that he had committed innumerable blunders, had gotten things generally mixed up, and had mustered but 700 men! It turns out that in all the movements our governor has made he was right and has been sustained by the national authorities. Forty-eight hours before the editorial in question was printed one of our regiments was on its way to the Philippine Islands.

Several hours before it was printed the second regiment was on its way to Chickamauga camp, and the third regiment awaited orders from the War Department. In fact, Kansas is almost the only State whose governor did not get into more or less trouble from ignorance of the law and regulations. We not only furnished to President McKinley three of the best regiments ever recruited, but it is a historic fact that ours is the first State in the Union to complete the muster of its quota and to tender the troops to the Government. Out in the West the opposition papers concede these facts and have long since ceased their criticisms. But we could hardly expect that poor, old, sleepy Philadelphia paper to wake up until long after the Kansas procession had passed and had reported at the front for action.

Kansas is also in the front rank of States in the percentage of her citizens who served in the Union Army during the civil war. The old soldier is found in all the walks of life, and is a potent factor in the promotion of all political, social, and moral reforms. He is found in all political parties. Happily, most of the people of Kansas believe that the man who suffered and endured and fought for the Stars and Stripes when that glorious emblem of liberty was in peril has fully earned his right to think and talk and vote as he pleases and to affiliate with the party of his choice.

Mr. Chairman, for months I have desired to submit a few remarks upon a subject of vital interest to all ex-Union soldiers, the subject of pensions; but it has been impossible for me to get the floor during the regular day sessions, and the meager time allotted to pensions by the House has seemed to me so sacred that I have not thought proper thus far to consume so much as thirty seconds of it. But it is impossible for me longer to hold my peace. I must enter my solemn protest against what I believe to be a few of the outrages which the preservers of this Government are suffering at its hands.

All thoughtful and patriotic citizens of this country will give ready assent to the proposition that every government should provide liberal pensions for its soldiers, and for their widows and orphans. As a rule men do not join the volunteer army of a nation for the paltry salary paid to the private soldier. They are patriots. This was never more true of any soldiery than of that which followed the American flag in our late civil war. How we honored those battle-scarred veterans as "they came marching home" flushed with victory and proudly bearing the starry banner which represented the glorious Union their valor had preserved!

Many of them had lost their limbs, others had lost their health, and all had, from climatic change and from the hardships and exposures incident to Army life, incurred incipient disease, not dreamed of at the time, but which, with advancing years, has developed into untold afflictions and suffering from which only the grave can give relief. The soldiers of this latter class, together with the widows and orphans of soldiers, are chiefly the victims of what I am compelled to denounce as the unreasonable and unjust pension policy of this Government.

Most of the men whose bodies were actually maimed are receiving pensions, many of which, to be sure, being inadequate. Those who came from the Army with permanently broken health have long since answered to the last roll call, and have joined their comrades whose bodies sleep in the sunny South. A few of their parents and many of their widows and orphans are still with us under a sorrow that earth can not heal. Many of these need, and all deserve, the nation's tenderest sympathy and care. The ex-soldiers who linger with us are in the evening time of life, and almost every one suffers as a result of Army service.

But the public Treasury is so carefully guarded by rules and regulations and technicalities and unsympathetic officials that many of the most needy and deserving are getting no pension at all and others but a miserable pittance. Some are in the almshouses of the country, and others have been forced by poverty to separate from their families and take refuge in Soldiers' Homes. Others still are eking out a wretched existence in afflictions and destitution. And yet gentlemen in this House are on record as urging a conservative pension policy, and officials in charge of the Pension Bureau have adopted the most conservative policy in the history of this Government.

Against this doctrine of conservatism I enter my solemn protest. The graves of our dead heroes can not be adorned with too great a wealth of flowers on each recurring Decoration Day. I also insist that our living heroes can not be too promptly and too generously accorded their dues out of a Treasury replenished by the revenues of this great and rich country, whose free institutions these men by their valor helped to save and perpetuate.

I am not alone in these criticisms. They are coming from the veterans and their true friends in all sections of our country. The State encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic held at Wichita, Kans., April 20 to 22 of the current year adopted the following resolutions:

The administration of the Pension Bureau has been dilatory for years, disappointing and unfriendly to the thousands whose claims have been rejected or neglected. Rules of evidence have been enforced with narrow constructions; calls for evidence have been based upon slight and formal defects in evidence already supplied; the ratings of boards of medical examiners have been arbitrarily rejected, overridden by the medical examiner of the Department; rules of practice have not been made known to the soldier or widow claimants, and they have been held to a knowledge of the practice which they could not be presumed to have, and the Bureau has failed to administer the law in the spirit of gracious candor which belongs to our national pension laws; the head of the Bureau has been indiscreet and apparently unsympathetic, and his utterances have wounded the sensibilities of the soldiers. If these wrongs and abuses are not speedily righted, resting our entire confidence in the wise judgment and patriotic sympathy of that soldier and friend of the soldier, our Chief Executive, we demand that the present Commissioner of Pensions be removed, and another appointed who will execute the laws in accordance with the true spirit that prompted their enactment.

The American Tribune, a Grand Army paper published at Indianapolis, in its issue of February 17, 1898, printed the following resolutions adopted by Shiloh Post, No. 49, of Newport, Ind.:

Whereas the ex-Union soldiers of this country rejoiced when the fact was known that William Lochren had been removed as Commissioner of Pensions and H. Clay Evans substituted in his stead, and believed they had a true, patriotic friend who would deal fairly and honestly with them, now find out to their sorrow that they have been sadly disappointed, and instead of dealing fairly and squarely with those who are at his mercy, he is putting every obstacle in the way he possibly can to prevent the adjudicating of old pension claims and pension increases of soldiers who are deserving, in many cases, of more than twice or three times the rate now paid them. We have become very tired of seeing the old pensioners of the late war traduced and denounced as frauds by a few yellow-back journals of the East, and have become disgusted in knowing our present Commissioner of Pensions is truckling to the clamor of these detestable and vicious papers: Therefore,

Resolved, That Shiloh Post, No. 49, Grand Army of the Republic, of Newport, Vermillion County, Ind., earnestly request President McKinley to immediately remove the Hon. H. Clay Evans from the office he has proven himself unworthy to fill.

Resolved, That we are tired of his contemptible tactics in trying to avoid and prevent worthy and broken-down soldiers from getting the pittance they are justly and honestly entitled to receive.

Resolved, That we recently got rid of one sandbagger in the name of William Lochren, and we are bitterly opposed to having his place supplied by another one.

Resolved, That these resolutions, expressive of our contempt for the present Commissioner of Pensions, be spread on record, and that the adjutant of the post is hereby instructed to forward a copy to President McKinley.

These are but samples of the righteous complaints which fill this land, and which presage future trouble to the men and the Administration that furnish the ground for them.

There are many evils, Mr. Chairman, from which the old soldier is made to suffer. I can only mention a few of them, not the least of which is the evil of making the pension question a political football. Many candidates have made tons of campaign capital by fair promises and loud professions of love for the old soldiers, only to disappoint them after having been helped into office by their votes. Partisan papers promote this unholy cause by extravagant statements of what their party officials have done in Congress and elsewhere for soldiers' pensions and by belittling the work of officials of the opposite political faith.

Out in one of the Kansas districts is a little 2 by 4 partisan paper, with a pin-head editor, which recently contained an editorial comparing the man who represented the district in the Fifty-fourth Congress with the man of the opposite party who is the present Representative. Omitting names, the editorial is as follows:

What do the voters want in a Congressman? Compare the work of Mr. Blank in Congress and what he accomplished with that of the present Representative. Can you point to a single act the latter has put through? Then remember what Mr. Blank did; besides his other work the special claims of 700 old veterans of the war were worked through, and two bills for decrepit and blind veterans were passed through the House upon his motion, over the veto of the President that Demopops had elected. If the veterans and business interests want a Representative in Congress, they will vote for Mr. Blank; if they want a figurehead, they will vote for the present Representative.

Every member of this House will smile as he contemplates this editorial statement that Mr. Blank procured 700 pensions during his one term in Congress. The man who sets up such a claim exhibits a most dense ignorance. Besides, if this man did procure that many pensions in one term, it only proves that the Pension Bureau under the "President that the Demopops elected" was administered with tenfold more liberality than under the present Administration.

Furthermore, all who know Mr. Blank and the present Representative, either in private life or in Congress, concede that in morals and intellect, in fidelity to duty, in ability and influence upon this floor, in patient attention to details, in the amount and character of the work done for old soldiers and other constituents, the latter has a decided advantage over the former.

Mr. Blank, who sat in the Fifty-fourth Congress, enlisted, I believe, in the ninety-day service about the close of the war and distinguished himself by performing a little guard duty where danger and privation were unknown. The gentleman who now occupies that seat entered the Army as a private when a mere boy, and served more than three years in the heart of the enemy's country. In camp, on the march, and on the field of strife he was always at his post, just as we always see him in this Congress. He marched in the front line up to the cannon's mouth on the bloody field of Chickamauga. He contended on the fiery slopes of Mission Ridge and scaled the heights of Lookout Mountain. He fought at Resaca and through the entire Atlanta campaign. On the awful fields of Franklin and Nashville, where the valor of the North met the valor of the South, he stood firm in the shock of battle.

In all of these great conflicts this young soldier justly won and now has the undying gratitude and praise of all true patriots. It remains for a narrow, bitter, intolerant partisan to call such a hero "a figurehead."

Mr. Chairman, I am ready to concede that frauds have been perpetrated upon the Treasury through perjury. Some persons are receiving pensions who under our laws as they exist are not entitled to them. Others are receiving larger pensions than they are legally entitled to. But for every such case there are a thousand worthy and needy old soldiers who thus far have been defrauded of their pensions by the Government through rigid technicalities, and another thousand who are getting but a small pittance of what they deserve.

To a man who earnestly believes this Government should liberally pension deserving and needy soldiers and their dependents, the methods of the Pension Bureau are exasperating in the extreme. I cite a few representative cases, and could give scores like them from my books. I have no personal grievance against any person or persons connected with the Bureau, for they have uniformly accorded to me the most kindly and cordial treatment. My protest is on behalf of those whose just pension claims are delayed from year to year for the most trivial reasons, and for the apparent purpose of giving the claimants a chance to die in the interest of an economic and conservative administration of the pension appropriations. For instance, in a large number of cases for which I have called for the status a half dozen times in the past fifteen months I have received as many assurances that said cases "are being considered with a view to their early settlement."

One soldier waited nearly ten years after the completion of his claim, and then, very naturally, growing impatient, had it called up by his Congressman. The only evidence required by the Department was a certificate from the clerk of the court of a certain county that a justice of the peace before whom one of the affidavits was made ten years before was justice of the peace at that time. In no other class of cases involving affidavits, in this or any other civilized country, would such an unreasonable requirement be made.

A soldier's widow had a claim pending more than six years. Inquiry was made in regard to its status and she was assured by the Department that all the testimony necessary was a letter from a certain postmaster as to the credibility of two of her witnesses. The letter was procured, and after waiting a reasonable time inquiry was again made. This time she was informed that she must give proof as to prior marriage. The proof was promptly sent in, and after waiting almost another year inquiry was made a third time and she was informed that her claim required special examination. This old widow, though bent with the burden of years, has to wash for a living, while the Department is exhausting every effort to delay her claim.

I have a case that has been pending about twenty-five years. The old man has furnished the testimony required, medical and all, and now thinks it about time that his claim should be either rejected or allowed. He is paralyzed on one side, almost blind, and so nearly helpless that he requires an attendant almost constantly. Comment is unnecessary and impossible.

In another case a special examiner was sent to take the testimony of one of the claimant's comrades. He did not find the comrade, and reported that fact to the Department. He prefaced this insignificant report by making flippant allusions to the number of afflictions which the claimant alleged. He made sport of a letter written by the claimant and dwelt sarcastically on his mental and physical condition. He went entirely out of his way and beyond his jurisdiction to make remarks prejudicial to this old soldier's claim. Humane authorities would have considered such report a proper cause for the instant discharge of this inhuman special examiner. He should be branded with the mark of Cain and forever banished from the society of patriotic and decent people.

In one case the claimant, after furnishing his evidence and then waiting patiently for several years, was informed that his claim awaited replies to letters of inquiry addressed by the Pension Bureau to persons supposed to have personal knowledge of the facts touching the merits of the case. After waiting patiently for another year he was informed that the Bureau was still awaiting replies. How long will this old soldier have to wait for replies to letters sent out by the Department years ago? Most likely until he is out of reach of the postal facilities of this world.

This practice of the Government in putting spies on the track of old soldiers in the form of secret letters and dapper young special examiners is a gross injustice to the old veterans and should bring the blush of shame to the cheek of every patriot. The best of people have enemies who do not hesitate to circulate evil reports concerning them, and especially if they can do so without being identified, as in this class of cases. I dare say that even in as saintly a body as the American Congress there are a few men some of whose constituents think and say naughty things of them on the quiet.

This is true of old soldiers. The letters sent out by the Bureau often fall into the hands of people having political or other grudges against the claimant. The special examiner too often comes in contact with the same class of people. It is the boast of Americans that every citizen of this country is guaranteed the right to a hearing in every cause involving his rights and interests. This is true of every class of criminals even, but not of the heroes who saved this Republic. The pension claimant is not supposed to know who of his neighbors are receiving letters from the Bureau or what replies they make. Nor does he always know who catches the ear of the special examiner. Against this whole system I enter my solemn protest.

For fifteen years I have known a certain soldier intimately. For several years he has drawn the munificent pension of 20 cents per day. A year ago he was stricken with paralysis, and was rendered as helpless as a babe. I introduced a special bill for him, and also continued my efforts for increase in the Bureau. Nine months ago I visited him and found him helpless and in poverty. In November I made a personal appeal to the Bureau and gave my personal representation of his condition. They very cheerfully promised to make it special. I waited till probably some time in January, when I pressed my bill in the committee, got it favorably reported, got it through the House, and into the Senate. A few weeks ago, before the Senate acted upon this case, my old soldier friend died, and I trust went to a country where justice is more evenly meted out to all than it is in the present life to the soldiers of this nation.

In very numerous instances claimants who slept on the wet ground or tramped through mud and snow and rain on many a weary march more than thirty years ago are required to state under oath and prove by testimony of comrades when, where, and under what circumstances they contracted colds resulting in chronic catarrh. A case in point: An old soldier made affidavit that he contracted a heavy cold during the latter part of the year 1864, which resulted in chronic catarrh. The Bureau now demands an affidavit from at least one of his comrades showing the exact date and circumstances of contracting the cold.

To show the injustice of such requirements I have only to state that in April of that year this soldier was wounded in battle and captured, and was kept in Confederate prisons until the close of the war. He can not, therefore, establish by acceptable witnesses the exact date of taking cold about a third of a century ago. This soldier received five painful wounds in battle, and is now almost as helpless as a child, and yet he is being put off from year to year by those officials who are responsible for the shameful pension policy of this Government.

Is it claimed that the volume of business is so great and the employees of the Department so few that it is impossible to do justice to all these cases? I answer, much valuable time (to say nothing of the enormous expense) is wasted in sending out spy letters and by special examiners running about the country doing that which should be done by the affidavits of neighbors and friends of claimants. Furthermore, it has been reported by the Associated Press that the clerks in the various Government Departments work but six and a half hours each day, instead of seven hours, as the law requires, taking thirty minutes for lunch. There are about twelve hundred employees in the Pension Bureau. Thirty minutes each day for lunch means six hundred hours or eighty-five days of seven hours each for every day, or five hundred and ten such days for each week.

This large waste of time converted into diligent service would carry blessings to many old soldiers and their dependents. Let the hours of work in the Bureau be extended thirty minutes a day, and if the people therein employed refuse to submit to such extension, I here and now pledge myself to supply all their places with equally competent people from the State of Kansas within six days.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion permit me to say that in my humble judgment the Pension Bureau is not more censurable than is Congress itself. House Rule XXVI says

The House shall on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

Since March 15, 1897, this Congress has been in session a little more than nine months and a half, exclusive of vacation periods. During the extraordinary session we had nineteen Friday nights; in December we had two; since the holiday vacation we have had twenty-two; making in all forty-three Friday nights. During all this time we have had just fourteen special sessions, including the one to-night, the first one having been held on Friday night, January 28. To say nothing of the time wasted during the extra session and in December and January, it has been entirely too common for gentlemen to arise on Thursday and move an adjournment to Monday, thus avoiding a special pension session on Friday night.

The records will show who have made these motions and which side sustained the motions in all cases of yea-and-nay votes. With several thousand private pension bills pending, we have passed less than four hundred. Had those who control this House been willing to grant simple justice to the old soldiers, we should have spent the time in their service which we spent in idleness during the extraordinary session. We should also have had twenty special pension sessions instead of fourteen since the holiday vacation.

It is a shameful fact that we never have a quorum on Friday night. The attendance ranges from 40 to 75. Many members who make the greatest noise on the stump about their devotion to the old soldiers are rarely seen at these special sessions. The majority side of this House has 205 members and the minority side 151, making a clear majority of 54 for that side. One hundred and seventy-nine are required for a quorum, which is 26 less than the majority side of this House. Now, I insist that your campaign professions and pretensions through all these years have been such as to inspire confidence and hope in the hearts of those heroes to whom we owe so much.

I warn those who are responsible for the present pension policy of this Government that it will be found far more easy to deal justly with the old veterans than to force them into silent submission to injustice and wrong. These men are dying at the rate of about 30,000 per annum. The shattered remnant of that once gallant soldiery must soon disappear from mortal view. What we do for them must be quickly done. This great Government is abundantly able, and I believe the masses of our people of all parties are more than willing, to bestow upon these veterans sufficient pensions to cheer and relieve the remnant of their lives and smooth their pathway to the tomb. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5992) granting a pension to Mary A. Freeman.

The question was decided in the affirmative.

FRANCES P. TRUMBULL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1273) for the relief of Frances P. Trumbull, widow of Matthew M. Trumbull.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll of the United States the name of Frances P. Trumbull, wife of Matthew M. Trumbull, late lieutenant-colonel of the Third Iowa Infantry, in the war of the rebellion, at $100 per month in lieu of pension now being drawn by her.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, and agreed to, as follows:

In line 4 strike out "cause to be placed" and insert in lieu thereof the word "place."

In line 5 strike out the words "of the United States."

In line 6 strike out the word "wife" and insert in lieu thereof the word "widow."

In lines 7 and 8 strike out the words "in the war of the rebellion, at one hundred," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and pay her a pension at the rate of twenty."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Frances P. Trumbull."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

GEORGE W. DUNNING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 698) for the relief of George W. Dunning.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Adjutant-General of the United States Army be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant to George W. Dunning, late a private in Company A, Twenty-fifth Kentucky Volunteers, an honorable discharge from the United States Army.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. TALBERT. I ask that the report in this case be read.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 698) for the relief of George W. Dunning, submit the following report:

The war records show the following facts: George W. Dunning was enrolled October 15, 1861, and mustered into the service January 1, 1862, as a private in Company A, Twenty-fifth Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, to serve three years. He was present with his company until February 15, 1862, when he was wounded in action at Fort Donelson, Tenn., and sent to the hospital for treatment. While absent in hospital he was transferred to Company G, same regiment, the muster-out roll of which, dated January 23, 1865, reports him dropped as a deserter July 31, 1862. Dunning declares in his own statement that he was wounded at Fort Donelson, Tenn., February 14, 1862, and sent to the hospital at Henderson, Ky., where, after a partial recovery, he received a furlough to go home. This furlough was destroyed by his wife, she fearing he would be captured by the rebels. After recovering sufficiently from his wounds he suffered from an attack of pneumonia.

When able to travel he endeavored to return to his command, but was prevented from doing so by the officer in charge at Hopkinsville, Ky., who had him arrested and held him under arrest for several weeks, and then proposed that he should enlist in his regiment, the Third Kentucky Cavalry. The applicant applied for transportation to his own command, but says this was refused, and he finally consented to enlist in the regiment then stationed at Hopkinsville, and served therein for several months. He says when he enlisted he was promised the usual pay, but when pay day came around he was refused upon the ground that he had not been regularly mustered in. He then asked what he should do, and was advised by one of the officers to go home, and, being ignorant of military law, he knew nothing else to do.

I. B. and John T. Long testified March 7 and May 17, 1890, respectively, in effect, that when applicant returned home on furlough in July, 1862, he was suffering from wounds of the right eye and left leg, and that he was unable to return to duty.

Richard W. Williams, first sergeant Company A, Twenty-fifth Kentucky Volunteers, states that—

"George W. Dunning was a private in his company and was a brave and good soldier, and that at the battle of Fort Donelson he was wounded by being struck by a ball or a missile just beneath or near the corner of the right eye; also shot in the left thigh, the ball passing through. He saw him several times during the following summer. He was still suffering from the wound in his thigh. He is now 65 years old, feeble, and almost blind. He is poor, but a moral and good citizen, and deserves aid from the Government."

Accompanying the papers in this case is a petition from a number of citizens well acquainted with the applicant, who testify to his good character and helpless condition.

Having carefully considered the facts in this case, your committee are of the opinion that the bill should pass, with the following amendment:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, I will simply state that this gentleman lives in my district and I have every reason to believe that every statement in the report (and I prepared it myself) is true; that he was really never a deserter; that his intention was to serve faithfully in the Army, and he attempted to do so. He was forced to join a regiment in which he stayed for three or four months. The officer in charge refused to pay him anything because he had not been properly mustered in; consequently he went home; in which I think he did perfectly right. I hope the bill will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TALBERT. I wish to ask whether this bill has the usual amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is upon the amendment reported by the committee embracing the provision to which the gentleman refers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM B. MURRAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4283) for the relief of William B. Murray, of South Pittsburg, Marion County, Tenn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of William B. Murray, of South Pittsburg, Marion County, Tenn., late a private soldier in Company I, Tenth Tennessee Infantry, on the pension rolls for an additional pension granted on account of total blindness resulting from service in the United States Army, and that from and after the passage of this act the said William B. Murray be paid the sum of $72 per month as a pension, instead of the sum of $12 per month now paid to him.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, and agreed to, as follows:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "of South Pittsburg, Marion County, Tenn."

Strike out all of lines 7 to 12, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William B. Murray."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

A. C. LITCHFIELD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5385) granting a pension to A. C. Litchfield.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension law, the name of A. C. Litchfield, late colonel of the Seventh Regiment Michigan Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $50 per month.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, and agreed to, as follows:

In line 5, after the word "law," insert the words "as to increase of pension only."

In line 7, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate;" and after the word "of" strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

TAYLOR M'FARLAND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6331) granting a pension to Taylor McFarland.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the laws and restrictions of the Pension Department, Taylor McFarland, of Monongahela, Washington County, Pa., late a private in Company E, Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, from and after the passage of this act, at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments reported by the committee were read and agreed to, as follows:

In line 5 strike out the words "laws and restrictions of the Pension Department" and insert in lieu thereof the words "provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of."

In line 6 strike out the words "of Monongahela, Washington County, Pa." Strike out all after the word "Volunteers," in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and pay him a pension at the rate of $34 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Taylor McFarland."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

GEORGE E. WELLES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 990) to pension George E. Welles, late colonel Sixty-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of George E. Welles, late colonel Sixty-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, upon the pension roll at the rate of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The amendments reported by the committee were read and agreed to, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "roll," insert the words "and pay him a pension."

In line 6 strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "forty."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to George E. Welles."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

GEORGE D. PHINNEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4315) to increase the pension of George D. Phinney.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the limitations of the pension laws, the name of George D. Phinney, late of Company A, Seventh Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $45 per month in lieu of the pension now being paid him.

The amendments reported by the committee were read and agreed to, as follows:

In line 5, after the word "the" and before the word "limitations," insert the words "provisions and."

In line 7 strike out the words "of forty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the rate of thirty-six."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

LIZZIE WALTZ.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8087) granting a pension to Lizzie Waltz.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Lizzie Waltz, who was wounded on the first day of the battle of Gettysburg during a skirmish at Hanover, Pa., while giving food and administering to the wants of the Union soldiers, and who is now without means of support and physically incapacitated for any manual labor as a result of such wound, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of the pension which she now receives as widow of Levi Waltz, a private in Company D, First Battalion, Nineteenth Regiment United States Infantry, under certificate No. 351338.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Amend the title of the bill so as to read:
"A bill granting an increase of pension to Lizzie Waltz."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MISSOURI B. ROSS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9187) to pension Missouri B. Ross.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Missouri B. Ross, widow of Orlando H. Ross, late of Company D, Twentieth Illinois Infantry, and captain and aid-de-camp, staff of General Grant, at the rate of $30 per month, the same to be in lieu of the pension she now receives.

The amendments reported by the committee were read and agreed to, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Grant," insert the words "and pay her a pension."

In line 7 strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Missouri B. Ross."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

PAULINE ROBBINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8634) granting a pension to Pauline Robbins, of Sandusky, Sauk County, Wis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Pauline Robbins, the permanently helpless daughter of Elisha Robbins, late of Company I, One hundred and eighty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, which is the amount of widow's pension drawn by her mother, under certificate No. 72622, up to the time of her death.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, and agreed to, as follows:

In line 5, after the word "the," insert the words "dependent and."

Strike out all of lines 9, 10, and 11.

Amend the title so it will read: "A bill granting a pension to Pauline Robbins."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ANN GIBBONS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8266) to increase the pension of Mrs. Ann Gibbons.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Mrs. Ann Gibbons, dependent mother of John J. Gibbons, late captain of Company C, Sixty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that which she is now receiving.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, and agreed to:

In line 4 strike out the words "increase the pension of Mrs." and insert in lieu thereof the words "place the name of."

In line 7, after the word "Infantry," insert the words "on the pension roll."

Amend the title so it will read: "A bill to increase the pension of Ann Gibbons."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CORRISSANDA L. M'GUIRE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2568) increasing the pension of CorriSSanda L. McGuire.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of CorriSSanda L. McGuire, widow of James E. McGuire, who served in Company B of the Second Kentucky Regiment Infantry in the war with Mexico; who also served as captain of Company F, Fifty-first Regiment Indiana Infantry Volunteers, and pay to her a pension of $30 per month, in lieu of any pension that may now be paid her.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

REBECCA S. FOSTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3271) to increase the pension of Mrs. Rebecca S. Foster.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Rebecca S. Foster, widow of the late Lieut. Col. John A. Foster, of the One hundred and seventy-fifth Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry, upon the pension roll at the rate of $60 a month instead of at the rate of $30 a month.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read and agreed to:

After the word "roll," in line 7, insert "and pay her a pension."

In same line strike out "sixty" and insert in lieu thereof "forty."

In lines 8 and 9 strike out all after the word "month" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in lieu of the pension she now receives."

Amend the title so it will read: "A bill increasing the pension of Rebecca S. Foster."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN C. BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3474) granting a pension to John C. Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John C. Brown, of Tacoma, Wash., and that he be granted a pension of $30 per month in lieu of the $17 per month now granted him.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, and agreed to:

From line 6 strike out the words "of Tacoma, Wash." and insert in lieu thereof the following: "late of Company D, Eighty-fourth New York Volunteers, and Company H, Fifth Regiment New York Veteran Volunteer Infantry, otherwise known as Duryeas Zouaves."

From lines 6 and 7 strike out the words "that he be granted" and insert in lieu thereof the words "pay him."

From lines 7 and 8 strike out the words "$17 per month now granted him" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the pension he now receives."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting an increase of pension to John C. Brown."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

LEVI R. LONG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 949) granting a pension to Levi R. Long.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Levi R. Long, late private of Company I, Seventeenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, at the rate of $40 per month, in lieu of the pension which he now receives.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read, and agreed to:

In line 7, after the word "Cavalry," insert the words "and pay him a pension."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting an increase of pension to Levi R. Long."

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, the name as it appears on the Calendar is Levi L. Long. It should be Levi R. Long.

Mr. RAY of New York. It is Levi R. Long in the bill.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. That is a misprint in the Calendar.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SAMUEL A. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 166) granting an increase of pension to Samuel A. Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel A. Smith, late a private in Company C, Eighty-fourth Illinois Infantry, and grant him a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read, and agreed to:

In line 7, after the word "and," strike out the word "grant" and insert in lieu thereof the word "pay."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN H. MULLEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 156) to increase the pension of Capt. John S. Mullen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of John H. Mullen, late captain of Company C, Twelfth Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30 a month in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read, and agreed to:

In line 6, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting an increase of pension to John H. Mullen."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES W. JACKSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2961) granting an increase of pension to James W. Jackson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of James W. Jackson, late of Company G, First United States Cavalry, in lieu of the sum he is now receiving, to $30 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read, and agreed to:

In line 4 strike out the words "increase the pension" and insert in lieu thereof the words "place the name."

From lines 5, 6, and 7 strike out all after the word "Cavalry," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "on the pension roll and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of the pension he now receives."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

THOMAS MADDEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2219) granting a pension to Thomas Madden.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $8 per month, the name of Thomas Madden, late of Company H, Thirty-second New York Volunteer Infantry.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, and agreed to:

From lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "at the rate of $8 per month."

In line 6, after the word "Infantry," insert the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELIJAH N. PARKHURST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1475) granting an increase of pension to Elijah N. Parkhurst.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elijah N. Parkhurst, late private in Company A, Ninth Regiment Indiana Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

FARNHAM J. EASTMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1858) for the increase of the pension of Farnham J. Eastman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Farnham J. Eastman, late a private in Company E, Twenty-fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read:

In line 7, after the word "of," strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, before that motion is put, I desire to be heard for a moment.

I desire to call the attention of this committee to the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Among other things, it says concerning this man:

This soldier served from August 11, 1862, to June 7, 1865, and was honorably discharged.

The records show him to have been treated while in the service for chronic diarrhea, hemorrhoids, and rheumatism.

He was examined by an examining board appointed for that purpose, and among other things that board said:

The disabilities resulting from chronic diarrhea, chronic gastritis, and disease of rectum totally incapacitate him from manual labor.

The records show that these diseases and disabilities were contracted while he was in the service, during the entire war. The report of the committee goes further, and says:

At his last medical examination, March 11, 1896, the board said:

"Both eyes are out. Total deafness of both ears; can hear absolutely nothing. Only loud conversation can be heard through speaking tube. Teeth all bad. He is poorly nourished and poorly muscled. In opinion of board this man should have $72 per month, as he is dependent upon an assistant absolutely."

The report shows that this man is one of the most wretched and miserable objects of pity and charity whose case has ever been presented to this House. The examining board find that he is entitled to a pension at the rate of $72 a month. In the last Congress this same Committee on Invalid Pensions reported the bill favorably at $50 a month, and in their report they say:

This is a case which strongly appeals to the sympathy of your committee, and as it has intrinsic merit, we respectfully recommend the passage of the bill.

At this session of Congress this bill has already passed the Senate at $50 a month, $22 a month less than the examining board said he was entitled to. Now think of it! Here is a man wholly incapacitated from manual labor by chronic diarrhea, gastritis, and other similar ailments contracted during the service.

By an accident which occurred afterwards, and which of course can not be attributed to his service, he has lost both eyes, his hearing has been totally destroyed, and in the report the committee say that he is absolutely dependent upon an assistant for everything that he does. He is now an old man, a pauper, absolutely without any other means of support than this pension. He has nothing whatever with which to pay his assistant or to pay for his own livelihood excepting what the Government grants him, and it does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is wrong to reduce this bill from $50 a month to $30.

He is entitled to more than $50 a month. He will not be with us long. His days are dwindling to a mere span. He has no friend or relative to support him. There is no buxom woman waiting around to marry him to perpetuate this pension. He is too miserable and wretched an object of charity for such a thing as that to be thought of. This will only continue for a little while. For God's sake let the remaining few days of his life be spent in comparative decency.

He was drawing $24 a month, but in the meantime the Pension Department have seen the wrong and injustice of paying him only that sum and have voluntarily raised him within the last few weeks to $30 a month, the amount to which this committee has reduced the bill. Of course there is no use at all in passing this bill at $30. He is getting that now, but that is not enough to keep him in ordinary decency, in view of the fact that he is compelled to have assistance in everything he does.

His poor old tottering limbs will hardly carry him from the bed to the table. We shall not have to pay this but a very short time. I know him. He is a poor old man and he can not live but a little while, and it does seem to me that no case has ever been presented here that appeals more strongly to the justice, not to say to the sympathy, of men who love their country and who honor those who have spent their lives in its service. I therefore ask that the Senate bill be passed and the committee amendments be not accepted.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Washington in all the sentiments he has expressed. No doubt this old soldier is in just the condition stated by the gentleman from Washington, but we must recollect that he was receiving $30—

Mr. RAY of New York. He was receiving $34.

Mr. TALBERT (continuing). Twenty-four dollars, according to his pensionable status, allowed him by the board of examiners.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They said $72.

Mr. TALBERT. They gave him what they thought he was entitled to from the disabilities incurred in the service, from the disabilities that could be traced to service origin. Since that time he has been through an accident, blown up by a blast, by which he has lost both eyes and has become deaf. The question is whether this House proposes to pension people for accidents with which the war has nothing to do. He was already receiving $34 a month, all that was due him according to his disability.

This accident happened in 1899, rendering him unable to help himself in any way at all. Now, the question is whether or not this House will give him a pension on account of the accident that happened to him thirty years after the war was over? As a matter of course, I do not blame the gentleman from Washington, and I shall not vote against giving what the gentleman asks, for it looks as if the condition of this man demanded it. But what put him in this condition? We, as Representatives, must take a business view of the pension matter and not be led away by sentiment.

As a matter of course, if we are governed by sentiment we would give him $72 a month. That is not the question. What does the law allow? What should he have by right? Nothing more than the disabilities which can be traced to service origin would entitle him to. It is a great misfortune that he met with the accident, and the question is whether or not we shall recompense him for the accident out of the Treasury of the United States at the expense of the taxpayers of the nation? As I have said, I do not propose to make any opposition to the request of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Invalid Pensions examined the evidence in this case with great care, considered it from all standpoints, and arrived at a unanimous conclusion that $30 per month is all that this soldier is entitled to. Thirty dollars a month is more than hundreds, and I may say truthfully more than thousands, are receiving who are in as bad condition as this man.

The gentleman from Washington says that the Pension Bureau has increased this claimant's pension to $30 since the committee reported this bill. That may be. If it had been done before we acted, the bill would never have been reported to this House at all. We can not submit to these impositions—getting bills through when the Bureau has done full justice. This soldier has no one except himself to care for. He has no wife and no children to support, and this House has repeatedly passed bills, where the man was blind and helpless, at $30 a month where the beneficiary is helpless and has a wife to support, and the Senate has repeatedly cut down our bills to $30 a month in like cases and have insisted upon that rate.

Now, I insist, in view of the facts, the circumstances surrounding this man, that $30 per month is ample to take care of him and give him a good living and good care. We must remember what we are doing; we must remember that we are passing hundreds of bills increasing pensions, that hundreds are being added to the rolls every day at the Bureau; that we are now engaged in a war, and even if only a few are wounded or killed in battle, that through disease contracted in the service a large addition will be made, and before the year is over hundreds, and probably thousands, who incur disabilities in this war will be added to the rolls.

We should be circumspect; we should act with caution and be consistent, and not give this man more than others in like condition receive. Accepting the statement of the gentleman from Washington that the Pension Bureau has already done this man justice, I move that the bill lie upon the table.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, just one word more—

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not in order to move in the Committee of the Whole that a bill lay upon the table.

Mr. RAY of New York. I move that the Senate bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, just one word. The preceding bill to this was passed for a much larger sum than we are asking here—I think $23 larger—and there were no such circumstances as this shown. The statement of the gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that this man has no relatives, no friends, and is absolutely dependent upon everything that he does—

Mr. RAY of New York. I did not say that he had no relatives, no friends. I said he had no wife or children to support.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well. He has no friends or relatives to aid him and do anything for him in his behalf. He is absolutely dependent upon a hired attendant, and $30 is absolutely inadequate to get him the necessities of life and employ a man to take care of him, as he must be taken care of. The gentleman says we are engaged in a war now. It is true; and while we are engaged in a war if the noble young men going into the Army to-day could see that this country permits such poor old wrecks, remnants of a shattered life, to suffer and be denied as this man is denied, and made to drag out a poor, miserable, barren existence, without the decencies of life, it would not be much encouragement to them to enlist to-day. I ask that the motion be voted down.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES of Washington) there were—ayes 23, noes 15.

So the motion of Mr. RAY of New York that the bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it lie on the table was agreed to.

CARLETON W. MUZZY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 484) granting an increase of pension to Carleton W. Muzzy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Carleton W. Muzzy, landsman, U. S. S. Minnesota, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARGARET WILBER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 258) to pension Margaret Wilber, of Nebraska.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Margaret Wilber, of Blair, Nebr., mother of Thomas E. Brooks, Company I, One hundred and fortieth New York Infantry, and pay her a pension of $25 per month from the passage of this act, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the report be read. The report (by Mr. STURTEVANT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 258) granting a pension to Margaret Wilber, have examined the same and the evidence relating thereto and respectfully report:

This bill as amended proposes to pension at the rate of $5 per month Margaret Wilber, of Blair, Nebr.

Claimant is the mother of Thomas E. Brooks, Company I, One hundred and fortieth New York Volunteer Infantry. Soldier served from August 22, 1862, to December 27, 1867, when discharged on account of varicocoele.

Her claim under act of June 27, 1890, was rejected March 4, 1892, on the ground of claimant's declared inability to show that soldier's death from paralysis was in any way due to his service.

She is shown to be dependent, very poor, over 70 years of age, and relies wholly on the charity of her neighbors. It is not wise to grant pensions in such cases as this, and nothing will justify action except the great age and poverty of the mother. The soldier served only four months, and it is not claimed that this service had anything to do with his death.

Recognition of this mother in her old age and poverty may encourage patriotism, but this must not be regarded as a precedent unless the facts make a case equally meritorious.

The bill is reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 3 strike out the words "of Blair, Nebr."
In line 7, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate."
In same line strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

From lines 7 and 8 strike out the words "from the passage of this act."
Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Margaret Wilber."

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me from the plain statement in the report that this man is not entitled to a pension. I want to call the attention of the committee to that fact; and as we are going along without reading reports, it seems to me that we are doing ourselves and the country an injustice. It says in the report, "Her claim under the act of June 27, 1890, was rejected March 4, 1892, on the ground of the claimant's declared inability to show that the soldier's death from paralysis was in any way due to his service."

Now, it seems to me there is a direct violation of the law. If the disability of this claimant can not be traced to service origin, it seems to me that he is clearly not entitled to a pension.

The report further says:

She is shown to be dependent, very poor, over 70 years of age, and relies wholly on the charity of her neighbors.

That may be a fact; but I do not understand that this House intends to pension people because they are poor and old and possibly rely upon the charity of their neighbors. It seems to me that there are almshouses in all parts of the country to take care of the poor and needy.

The report goes further and makes this concession:

It is not wise to grant pensions in such cases as this—

I agree with the committee—and nothing will justify the action except the great age and poverty of the mother.

Here you propose to pension a woman on account of her age and poverty, without any other claim whatever. That is admitted, too, by the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. RAY of New York. Will the gentleman permit me right here? He loses sight of the main fact upon which we base our action. We have not in any case undertaken to grant a pension to any person, man or woman, upon the grounds of age and poverty alone.

The gentleman loses sight of the controlling fact upon which we do grant the pension in this case, which is this: This old woman had a son whom, thirty years ago, when the country needed the services of sons, she gave to her country. He went into the field and rendered worthy service. He came back with a disease contracted in the service. The mother stood by him; she nursed him; she comforted him; she supported him until he was in shape to help her. Then he died. It is true that he did not die of any disease contracted in the service.

But he is dead; and this old woman, the mother of a good soldier with a good record, must now at her great age go to the poorhouse unless this generous Government gives her $8 a month, and that is all we propose to give her. It will keep her from the almshouse, and is proper in such a case. The question is, shall we do it? This old woman, nearly 80 years of age, is poor and without anyone on the face of God's earth to take care of her except the public. Now, shall we grant her the pension of $8 per month upon the ground that she is the mother of a valiant soldier, that she gave that soldier, her son, to the country in its time of need? That is the ground on which we acted.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Let us give her the $8.

Mr. TALBERT. I know that the distinguished gentleman from New York and this committee scrutinize very thoroughly every claim that comes before them. I have no criticism whatever to make on this committee. I say that most of the bills which they bring in here are just and meritorious and should be passed. But the gentleman speaks of the service of this soldier. I will simply read what the report of the committee says in regard to his great service:

The soldier served only four months, and it is not claimed that this service had anything to do with his death.

Possibly he served during the last four months of the war; possibly he never fired a gun.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, do not say that.

Mr. TALBERT. I say "possibly."

Mr. RAY of New York. Read what the report says; you have it before you. This service was not rendered during the last part of the war. The report tells you when it was rendered.

Mr. TALBERT (reading)—

The soldier served from August 22, 1862, to December 27, 1862.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is right; that was not at the close of the war.

Mr. TALBERT. During his four months of "valiant service," as the gentleman from New York calls it, he contracted no disease, but left the service at the end of four months; so that the case is still worse than if he had served during the last part of the war. He quit the service of his country when he was most needed and when he had only served four months.

Mr. RAY of New York. Will my friend read from the report the reason why he left the service?

Mr. TALBERT (reading)—

Discharged on account of varicocoele.

I will ask the gentleman what that means?

Mr. RAY of New York. The disease was contracted in the service.

Mr. TALBERT. What kind of a disease is it?

Mr. RAY of New York. He served his country until by reason of disease contracted in the service he was discharged. That is why he left the service.

Mr. TALBERT. But the report says:

It is not claimed that this service had anything to do with his death.

Mr. RAY of New York. It did not kill him.

Mr. TALBERT. But after he had entirely recovered he was not disposed to go back into the service at all and did not go back. I simply wanted to call the attention of the committee to the facts as stated in this report. Yet when we ask for the reading of a report you hear some great big fellow with a voice like a fog-horn shouting out "Vote!" "Vote!" I think that is wrong. These reports ought to be read and we ought to know what we are doing. With these remarks, I leave the Committee of the Whole to do what it pleases.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I do not want any misapprehension to go out either to the House or to the country in regard to this case. I know that my friend from South Carolina intends to be fair—

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly I do.

Mr. RAY of New York. And if he had studied this case he would not have made remarks which so entirely misrepresent the facts. In 1862 this soldier entered the Army. He served about four months. He contracted disease in the Army by reason of his service and was compelled to leave because of disability. Later on he died. He did not die by reason of disease contracted in the service.

Mr. TALBERT. I will remind the gentleman that, under the law, the disease for which a person is pensioned must not be traceable to vicious habits.

Mr. RAY of New York. The evidence in this case shows that this disease was not due to vicious habits.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, I am not a doctor.

Mr. RAY of New York. Our committee has steadily refused to grant any pension or increase of pension where the disabilities were due to vicious habits while in the service. I could show the gentleman twenty bills that have been urged upon our attention, but which we have laid aside or "turned down" on the ground of the vicious habits of the claimant and that the disability alleged resulted from such habits or conduct.

Mr. TALBERT. I commend the gentleman and his committee for their care and attention. I am not criticising him at all. I only wanted to call attention to the facts stated in this report and to urge that the reports in these cases ought to be read, so that we may know the facts.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move to increase his pension from $8 a month to $12 a month, upon the statement of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BRUCKER. Was the son of this woman a pensioner during his lifetime?

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, no.

Mr. BRUCKER. The gentleman says that he contracted this disease in the Army?

Mr. RAY of New York. A great many men contract diseases in the Army, but do not draw pensions, because they do not apply for them.

Mr. BRUCKER. Then he did not apply for a pension?

Mr. RAY of New York. No, sir.

Mr. BRUCKER. One further question. If he had applied for a pension and the proof had shown that he died of disability incurred in the line of duty, how much would she have been entitled to?

Mr. RAY of New York. She would have been entitled to $12 a month.

Mr. BRUCKER. Then why not give her that amount?

Mr. RAY of New York. Because she is not entitled to it under any law.

Mr. BRUCKER. I think we might well grant her that amount of pension.

Mr. RAY of New York. If we should grant in this case a pension of $12 a month, we ought to go back and undo all that we have done in similar cases and grant in many cases an increase to $12. To grant a pension of $12 a month in this case would be doing injustice to other cases, to other claimants, where we have granted only $12 a month, and where the soldier had lost his life by reason of disease contracted in the service. Eight dollars is proper here, because the soldier did not die of service disability. If he had so died, $12 would be proper.

Mr. TALBERT. Why is it the gentleman is so careful to say that the action here proposed, if taken, must not be regarded as a precedent? If the action is wise, why is he unwilling to have it regarded as a precedent? He says he would not be willing to adopt this as a precedent and go back to grant a similar pension in other cases. I must say that I am astonished at the action of the committee in view of the facts as stated in this report.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman ought not to say that—

Mr. TALBERT. I can not help saying it.

Mr. RAY of New York. Because if the gentleman reads the report carefully he will see that the facts justify the action proposed. We do not propose to grant pensions to mothers of soldiers unless they come strictly within the rule laid down. They must be poor; they must have lost their support by reason of the death of the person upon whom they were dependent, and that person must have had a good record in the Army; must have contracted a disease there.

And, as I say, the party seeking relief must be old and poor and needy and in danger of the poorhouse. We make a wide distinction between the cases where death resulted from service and those where it did not. Gentlemen should recognize and maintain the distinction and aid the committee in its action. The widow who lost her husband by reason of disability incurred in service gets $12 per month; the poor and dependent widow who has lost her husband not from a service disability only gets $8 per month.

Mr. TALBERT. The committee state in their report that his death is not traceable by any means to disabilities received while in the service of his country.

Mr. RAY of New York. Why, my dear friend, if his death had been due to disease contracted in the service, then the Pension Bureau could have given the $12 a month.

Mr. TALBERT. And this is an appeal court from the Pension Bureau?

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, no; this is a peculiar case. The facts are peculiar. Such a case does not arise very often. It is meritorious and exceptional. Now see what we do say:

Recognition of this mother in her old age and poverty may encourage patriotism, but this must not be regarded as a precedent unless the facts make a case equally meritorious.

Now, when you quote that report put those words in and we shall be perfectly satisfied.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota state his amendment?

A MEMBER. Withdraw it.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I will try it on once.

Mr. RAY of New York. If the gentleman wants to come here and delay action, let him do it. If he wants to be inconsistent, or try to be, let him do it. He simply stands in the way of granting these pensions, and I want to inform him now that no such action as that can go through this House without a quorum. [Applause.]

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, I think the remarks of the gentleman are very unjust. I have been here almost every night this session, trying to urge forward pension claims. I have never attempted to delay a pension claim in this Congress in the past five years. I made the motion to make this $12, because I believed the poor old woman ought to have it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is whether the committee amendment shall be amended by striking out the word "eight" and inserting the word "twelve."

The amendment proposed by Mr. FLETCHER was rejected.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MICHAEL MEEHAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9593) to increase the pension of Michael Meehan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Michael Meehan, late private, Company A, One hundred and seventh New York Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, and agreed to:

In line 3, strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

EMER H. ALDRICH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9801) granting an increase of pension to Emer H. Aldrich.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emer H. Aldrich, late private Company B, One hundred and fourteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, and agreed to:

In line 3 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

LOUIS HIRSCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5403) to increase the pension of Louis Hirsch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place the name of Louis Hirsch, late second lieutenant, United States Volunteers, on the pension roll at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of his present pension of $12 per month.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, and agreed to:

In line 5, after the word "roll," insert the words "and pay him a pension."

In line 6 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

Strike out all of line 7.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HERMAN DELLIT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2157) granting a pension to Herman Dellit.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $8 per month, subject otherwise to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Herman Dellit, late of Company G, Eighth United States Infantry.

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to hear the report read or a statement made with reference to that case. I want to know why it is limited to $8 a month. It does seem to me that it is scarcely worth while to pass a bill carrying such a small amount.

The report (by Mr. BROMWELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2157) granting a pension to Herman Dellit, have considered the same and report: The claimant was a private in Company G, Eighth United States Infantry, and served two terms of enlistment, covering the period from August 10, 1875, to August 9, 1882.

In an application for pension filed September 12, 1893, he alleged that while on duty in Arizona, Utah, and Nevada he incurred rheumatism, fever and ague, injury of left eye, and rupture.

The records of the War Department show that during his term of service he was treated for malarial fever, disease of eyes, and rheumatism, and his claim on account of those disabilities was approved by the board of review at the Pension Bureau, but the medical referee declined to fix a rating, declaring that a pensionable disability from those causes did not exist.

So much of the claim as relates to rupture was disallowed on the ground of no record, and claimant had stated his inability to furnish the required proof of origin in service and line of duty. There is, however, sufficient proof on file to warrant your committee in recommending a rating commensurate with the degree of disability existing as the result of the rupture.

The claimant declares that he incurred the rupture at Fort Halleck, Nev., in 1890, by a box of arms which he was unloading falling upon him. He swears, however, that he is unable to find any officer or enlisted man who is conversant with the facts, and hence can not satisfy the requirements of the Pension Office as to the origin of said disability. He does, however, furnish the testimony of two of his neighbors to show that he has complained of rupture, as well as of his other alleged ailments, ever since his discharge from the service.

The medical examinations show an inguinal hernia of right side, although the testimony of physicians who have treated him is to the effect that the rupture is really a double one. The hospital record shows treatment for venereal disease as well as for the other diseases referred to above as being matters of record, but the last board of examining surgeons state that they did not find in this examination any evidence of past or present vicious habits, and claimant denies that he ever had venereal disease.

In the judgment of your committee the service and disabilities shown in this case merit a small pension, and the passage of the bill is recommended.

A similar bill was favorably reported by your committee in the Fifty-fourth Congress, but failed to be reached on the Calendar for action.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

LUCINDA BOOTH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2694) to increase the pension now paid to Mrs. Lucinda Booth, widow of Wiley Booth, a soldier of the war of 1812.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 4533, which is identically the same bill as this, be considered in place of the House bill.

Mr. TALBERT. Is that the bill of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT]?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the bill S. 4533 be considered in place of House bill 2694. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill (S. 4533) to increase the pension of Lucinda Booth was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lucinda Booth, the widow of Wiley Booth, a soldier of the war of 1812, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill H. R. 2694 be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ABNER ABERCROMBIE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 692) granting a pension to Abner Abercrombie.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, if the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions will remember, that bill ought to be withdrawn.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I ask that that bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it do lie upon the table.

Mr. BARTLETT. That bill passed the last Congress and it was thought that it had received a pocket veto, and on the 15th of March, on the assembling of this Congress, I reintroduced it, but it turned out that the President had not vetoed it, and it became a law. The man is now getting his pension. I think permission should be granted to withdraw it.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

GEORGE W. PALMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 125) granting an increase of pension to George W. Palmer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Palmer, late a private of Company B, Tenth Regiment United States Infantry, at the rate of $24 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Pensions was read, and agreed to:

In line 7 strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM HENRY WOODWARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3297) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of William Henry Woodward.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against the military record of William Henry Woodward, as private in Battery L, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, and grant to said William Henry Woodward an honorable discharge.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs was read:

In line 8, after the word "discharge," add the words "Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. LOVE. Let the report be read upon that bill, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3297) entitled "A bill to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William Henry Woodward," report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, with the following amendment:

Line 8, after the word "discharge," add "Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

It appears from the records of the War Department that this soldier was enrolled and mustered into service November 10, 1862, as a private in Battery L, Fourth United States Artillery, to serve balance of term of volunteer service; was discharged on February 2, 1864, by reenlistment, reenlisted in same battery on February 3, 1864; and he is reported as deserting December 4, 1865, and never having returned to his command.

The statement of the soldier, corroborated by the evidence of a number of reputable citizens who knew him prior to enlistment and after he had returned from the Army, shows that along in the fall of 1865, while his battery was stationed at Richmond, Va., said Woodward was in bad condition physically, caused by being overheated while working in Richmond Arsenal. On account of his sickness he received a furlough and went to his home.

At the expiration of his furlough he was still ill, and obtained an extension of his furlough for thirty days through the proper channel. At the expiration of this furlough he returned to his command, which was soon ordered to Fort Delaware. His ill health continuing, his sergeant permitted him to leave for home and passed him through the lines to Wilmington, in company with himself.

The soldier returned to his home, and the evidence of his brothers, sisters, parents, and neighbors shows that he was very ill for a long time, requiring medical attendance, so that he was never again fit for military duty. The physicians who attended him during his sickness are both dead, but your committee have been furnished with a large amount of evidence, under oath, showing that the soldier was physically incapacitated for further military service.

Inasmuch as Woodward served in the Army for considerably over three years and until long after the war had closed, and as there is nothing of record to show that he intended to shirk his duty or willfully desert his command, but that, on the contrary, he was prevented from completing the term of his second enlistment by reason of disabilities contracted in the service and in line of duty, which have made him practically a physical wreck and unable to perform but little manual labor, and as his reputation as a citizen is excellent, your committee recommend that this bill, which will relieve him of the stigma resting on his name, be passed as amended.

Mr. TALBERT. How many times did this soldier enlist?

Mr. BABCOCK. Twice. He served something over three years.

Mr. TALBERT. Do you know whether he received any bounty for the second enlistment?

Mr. BABCOCK. I am not advised as to that. I think not, but I can not state positively.

Mr. LOVE. Is there any evidence outside of his own family as to his condition?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, yes; numerous affidavits have been filed before the committee, as the report states.

Mr. BRUCKER. I do not desire to oppose the passage of this bill. It seems to be a meritorious one, but it does strike me that there are members of the House who are more highly favored than others in the matter of getting favorable reports from the Committee on Military Affairs. Since I have been a member of this House I have had a report on one case from that committee. I notice that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] has been fortunate enough to have two of these cases upon the Calendar this evening.

Now, I am not opposed to the passage of this bill and shall interpose no objection to it, but I have fifteen or twenty bills pending before this committee, and have been there time after time and day after day urging that they report some of these cases. They tell me that they have to pass them around. I have had one report, and, as I say, I notice that the gentleman from Wisconsin is fortunate enough to have two of his cases on the Calendar in one evening.

Mr. BABCOCK. Those are the only two bills that I have introduced that have ever been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs since I have been in Congress, according to my recollection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JEREMIAH HACKETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2267) to increase the pension of Jeremiah Hackett.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Jeremiah Hackett, private, Company C, Fourth Regiment of Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension of $50 per month in lieu of that he now receives.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 5, after the word "Hackett," insert the word "late."

In line 6, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate."

In line 7 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

In line 7 strike out the word "that" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the pension."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ROBERT FLETCHER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4001) granting a pension to Robert Fletcher.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll of the United States the name of Robert Fletcher, late of Company A, First Michigan Sharpshooters, at the rate of $24 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 3, after the word "and," insert the word "he."

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "of the United States" and insert in lieu thereof the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 6, after the word "Sharpshooters," insert "and pay him a pension."

At the end of line 7 add the words "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Robert Fletcher."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY M. WALRATH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6714) granting a pension to Mary M. Walrath.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll of the United States the name of Mary M. Walrath, widow of Ezra L. Walrath, late Lieutenant-colonel of the One hundred and fifteenth Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month from and after the passage of this act, such pension to be in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "of the United States."

In line 8 strike out "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-four."

In lines 9 and 10 strike out the words "from and after the passage of this act, such pension to be."

At the end of line 10 add the words "same to be paid to the duly appointed committee of her person and estate."

Amend the title so it will read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Mary M. Walrath."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY A. CAULFIELD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1045) granting a pension to Mary A. Caulfield.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the statutes and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. Caulfield, widow of Thomas Caulfield, alias Thomas McDonough, late of Second Battery, Massachusetts Light Artillery.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, before the word "directed," insert the words "authorized and."

In line 4 strike out the word "statutes" and insert the word "provisions" in lieu thereof.

At the end of line 7 add the words "and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM J. WILLIAMS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3722) granting a pension to William J. Williams.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William J. Williams, late a private in Company G, Sixth Delaware Infantry Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $8 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

PAUL CARR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1539) granting a pension to Paul Carr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Paul Carr, late of the U. S. S. Princeton and of the New Ironsides, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $30 a month from and after the passage of this act.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "to."

Strike out from lines 8 and 9 the following: "from and after the passage of this act," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving, the same to be paid to his duly appointed guardian."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting an increase of pension to Paul Carr."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELLEN STACK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4200) granting an increase of pension to Ellen Stack.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ellen Stack, widow of James Stack, late second lieutenant Company E, One hundred and sixty-second Regiment New York Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

In line 9 strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifteen."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Ellen Stack."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN DOEBLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 247) granting an increase of pension to John Doebler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of John Doebler, late captain of Company A, One hundred and twenty-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "pension," strike out the words "of thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the rate of twenty-five."

At end of line 7 insert the words "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY H. HARBOUR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7010) for the relief of Mrs. Mary H. Harbour.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of Mrs. Mary H. Harbour, widow of Samuel B. Harbour, a soldier in the Mexican war, upon the pension roll at the rate of $8 per month.

An amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Mrs. Mary H. Harbour."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HENRIETTA FOWLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3598) granting a pension to Henrietta Fowler.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Henrietta Fowler, widow of Jesse Fowler, late of the Georgia Volunteers in the Indian war of 1836, and pay her a pension rated at $30 per month.

An amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out the word "twenty," in line 7, and substitute therefor the word "eight;" so as to conform, in the matter of rating, to the provisions of the general law.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY A. PINKSTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9141) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Pinkston.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Mrs. A. Pinkston, the widow of F. C. Pinkston, who served in the Creek war, and pay her a pension of $8 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Correct the claimant's name so as to read "Mrs. A. A. Pinkston." In line 6, after the word "war," insert "as a private in Captain Ashurst's company of Alabama Volunteers."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CORDELIA CHENEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5153) granting a pension to Mrs. Cordelia Cheney, of Vermont.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Mrs. Cordelia Cheney, widow of Nelson Cheney, deceased, late a member of Company K, Eighth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, and grant her a pension of $12 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 5 strike out "Mrs."

In line 7 strike out the word "grant" and insert in lieu thereof the word "pay."

In line 7, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate."

Strike out all after the word "month," in line 8.

Amend the title so it will read: "A bill granting a pension to Cordelia Cheney."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a request of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I request him to ask the committee to rise and let us pass these bills that we have been over.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. We shall have plenty of time to do that in the House in the daytime. Let us do it some other day. We may not get another Friday night.

Mr. CLARDY. We may not get another Private Calendar day, and can not pass them except upon Private Calendar day. We took up nearly two hours to-day.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Yes; but we adjourned immediately afterwards; there was no other business done.

ELIZA J. MEAD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2860) for the relief of Eliza J. Mead, widow of James W. Mead.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Eliza J. Mead, widow of James W. Mead, late third assistant engineer U. S. S. Dumbarton, a pension at the rate of $10 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out the words "pay to" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of."

In line 6, after the word "Dumbarton," insert the words "and pay her."

Strike out line 7.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Eliza J. Mead."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ROBERT LITZINGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10135) to increase the pension of Robert Litzinger.

Mr. RAY of New York. Without taking time to read that bill, I desire to state that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Hicks] who introduced it, informs me that the beneficiary named in the bill is dead. For this reason I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

ELLEN WRIGHT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 312) for the relief of Ellen Wright, hospital nurse.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to place upon the pension roll of the Bureau of Pensions the name of Ellen Wright, at the rate of $20 per month, as hospital nurse in 1862 and 1863 in the hospitals in and about Washington, D. C.

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to hear the report in this case. The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 312) granting a pension to Ellen Wright, have examined the same and the evidence relating thereto and respectfully report:

This bill as amended proposes to pension at $12 per month Ellen Wright, of New Bedford, Mass.

Ellen Wright served as a nurse in hospitals in and around Washington, D. C., some four or five months, during which service she contracted malaria, on account of which she alleges she had to leave the service. She has no title to pension under existing law, but she alleges that her health has ever since been poor in consequence of the malaria so contracted, and evidence filed with the committee shows that she suffered with malarial chills and fever for a year after her return from the service. It is also shown that she or her husband have no property or income, are over 60 years of age, and her husband is a cripple as the result of an accident.

Claimant is shown by medical evidence to be totally incapacitated for manual labor.

Your committee are of the opinion that the women who actually served as nurses during the late war of the rebellion, and who are now old and poor, are entitled to a reasonable pension.

The bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 4 strike out the words "of the Bureau of Pensions."
In line 5 strike out the words "at the rate of $20 per month as" and insert in lieu thereof the words "who served as a"
At the end of line 8 add the words "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Amend the title so it will read: "A bill granting a pension to Ellen Wright."

Mr. TALBERT. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York whether he would regard the passage of this bill as a wise precedent? The report states that this woman has no pensionable status under the law.

Mr. RAY of New York. Simply because she did not serve as a nurse under any authority recognized by the War Department. There is a general law pensioning army nurses; but it specifies that to be entitled to a pension the person must have been employed by certain recognized authorities. Now, in some cases where nurses were employed the regimental or brigade or division commanders did not stop to get the consent of the proper authorities. They were in too much of a hurry. These women were, however, employed, and went in and worked four months as nurses. But simply because of the technical defect in their employment, they are not within the terms of the general law. Therefore, in perhaps fifteen or twenty such cases, special bills have been passed granting pensions. The nurses for whom these bills provide are just as much entitled to pensions as those who draw it under the general law, for they performed the same service.

Mr. LOVE. Is the amount of pension proposed in this bill the same as that uniformly given?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes; this is the same amount allowed by the general law. If there were no general law, the action proposed in this case would, of course, be unwise.

The amendments proposed by the committee and stated in the report were adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CLARA R. RODGERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2341) granting a pension to Clara R. Rodgers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Clara R. Rodgers, widow of Robert Edwin Rodgers, late major Fourth Ohio Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY L. PAGE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3515) granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Page.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary L. Page, widow of William Page, late of Company I, Eighty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JESSE O. DAVY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2112) granting a pension to Jesse O. Davy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jesse O. Davy, a private in Company B, Fifty-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $15 per month.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, and agreed to, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Infantry," insert the words "and pay him a pension."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN A. WHITMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7583) for the relief of John A. Whitman, a blind soldier.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas it appears from the sworn evidence of reputable witnesses that the said soldier lost his eyesight and became totally blind on the 24th day of September, 1861, by the premature discharge of a cannon while he with the citizens of Stillwater, Saratoga County, N. Y., were assembled to do honor to the memory of General Garfield, late President of the United States, who had been cruelly murdered by the hand of an assassin; Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That his the said soldier's pension shall be increased from $12 to $50 per month, and that the honorable Commissioner of Pensions is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of John A. Whitman on the pension roll of the United States at said rate of $50 per month.

Sec. 2. That this act shall take effect immediately.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John A. Whitman, late of Company D, Sixty-ninth New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to John A. Whitman."

Mr. TALBERT. In the report which I have before me it is stated:

This bill as amended proposes to increase from $12 to $24 per month the pension.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is what the amendment does.

Mr. TALBERT. Here is another case where the pension of a soldier is proposed to be increased solely on account of an accident which happened eighteen or twenty years after the war. The report states in regard to this pensioner that—

While engaged in firing a cannon at a celebration both his eyes were destroyed by the premature discharge, and since that time he has been totally blind.

Mr. RAY of New York. The pension is granted not solely but partially on that account.

Mr. TALBERT. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, the committee are proposing in this case to follow up the precedent which the gentleman said was not a wise one and which he desired should not be considered as a precedent.

Mr. RAY of New York. The other was the case of a lady, and this is the case of a soldier.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, they are analogous.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

REBECCA E. KUTZ.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2114) granting a pension to Rebecca E. Kutz.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rebecca E. Kutz, dependent mother of George F. Kutz, late of Company F, Seventeenth Ohio Veteran Volunteer Infantry.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, and agreed to:

At the end of line 8 add the following:

"And pay her a pension at the rate of $12 a month."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY H. PRESTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9310) granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Preston.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry H. Preston, late sergeant, Company H, Sixth Regiment New York Veteran Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, and agreed to:

In line 8 strike out the words "of fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the rate of thirty-six."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH GRIFFITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9866) granting a pension to Joseph Griffith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Joseph Griffith, father of John H. Griffith, late of Company F, Eastern Shore Maryland Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $3 per month.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, and agreed to:

In line 5, before the word "father," insert the word "dependent."
In line 6, after the capital letter "F," insert the word "First."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. SUSAN N. SESSFORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1090) to pension Mrs. Susan M. Sessford.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan M. Sessford, the dependent mother of Thomas J. Martin, who died June 8, 1896, and who at the time of his death was receiving a pension from the Government under certificate No. 598945, and that she be paid at the rate of $12 per month.

The following amendments recommended by the committee were read, and agreed to:

Strike out all of line 7 after the word "Martin."

Also strike out all of lines 8, 9, and 10.

From line 11 strike out "five, and that she be paid" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "late of Company D, Second Battalion, District of Columbia Infantry, and pay her a pension."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JULIA E. WARNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4004) granting a pension to Julia E. Warner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Julia E. Warner, widow of the late Hans B. Warner, of Company G, Thirty-seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, and agreed to:

In line 5 strike out the words "the late."

In line 8, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ISABELLA CROSS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8180) granting a pension to Isabella Cross.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Isabella Cross, late nurse, United States Volunteers, at the rate of $12 per month, to take effect on and after the passage of this act.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, and agreed to:

After the word "roll," in line 4, insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 5, after the word "Volunteers," insert "and pay her a pension."

Strike out all after the word "month," in line 6.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN S. GATES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6944) to pension John S. Gates.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John F. Gates, late a private of Company G, One hundred and second Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, at $12 per month.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, and agreed to:

In line 7, after the word "Volunteers," strike out the word "at" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES E. MANN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2247) granting a pension to Charles E. Mann.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles E. Mann, late sergeant of Company H, Second Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers, at the rate of $6 per month.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, and agreed to:

In line 7, after the word "Volunteers," insert the words "and pay him a pension."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELI STAIRS.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 7375) to correct the military record of Eli Stairs. It is No. 831 on the Calendar.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Who introduced it?

Mr. ROBBINS. I did.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks to take up, out of its order, Calendar No., 831. Is there objection?

Mr. RAY of New York. What bill is it?

Mr. ROBBINS. Calendar No., 831.

Mr. RAY of New York. What is it about?

Mr. ROBBINS. It is to correct the military record of Eli Stairs.

Mr. RAY of New York. Is it to remove a charge of desertion?

Mr. ROBBINS. No, it is to correct a military record.

Mr. RAY of New York. I raise the point of order that we have no jurisdiction of it at this session.

Mr. CLARDY. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the point of order is well taken.

THEODORE W. COBIA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6645) to increase the pension of Theodore W. Cobia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to increase the pension of Theodore W. Cobia, who served in Colonel Gordon's regiment of South Carolina Volunteers in the Florida war of 1836, and that he be paid a pension of $12 a month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JORDAN THOMAS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8862) granting an increase of pension to Jordan Thomas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Jordan Thomas, late of Company H, Third Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, in the war with Mexico, upon the pension roll of the United States, with an increase pension of $25 per month in lieu of any pension that he is now receiving.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Pensions was read, and agreed to:

In line 7 strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighteen."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WESLEY VAN OVER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1778) for the relief of Wesley Van Over, late of Company C, One hundred and ninth New York Volunteers, and Company G, Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of Wesley Van Over, late of Company C, One hundred and ninth New York Infantry Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge from such organization and remove the charge of desertion standing against him as a member thereof.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs was read:

Insert at the end of the bill:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. LOVE. I should like to have the gentleman explain that.

Mr. RAY of New York. This man was a good soldier and he had a good record. The bill is reported by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GRIFFIN]. If he were here he could make a more extended explanation of the case. This man went home because he was sick, and could not get back before the war ended. I wish to say that I have been here ten years and this is the first bill of this character which I have ever presented or pressed. I have had a great many such cases presented to me, but this is the first one of sufficient merit to lead me to introduce it and press it for the consideration of the committee. I have two others, but the War Department has already acted in one of them, and action here will be unnecessary.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

BLANCHE E. BARLOW.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up out of its order the bill (S. 3350) granting an increase of pension to Blanche E. Barlow, No. 855 on the Calendar. I hope there will be no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take up Senate bill 3350 out of its order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Blanche E. Barlow, widow of the late A. C. Barlow, surgeon, Fourth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry and Sixty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JUNIUS ALEXANDER.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go back and take up the bill (H. R. 7362) to grant a pension to Junius Alexander.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Junius Alexander, late a private in Company F, First Regiment United States Colored Troops, and pay him a pension of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 7 strike out "of twenty" and insert "at the rate of twelve."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN W. MAJORS.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, I have been here continually for many months and never have asked a favor of the House. I now ask unanimous consent to take up and pass the bill (H. R. 3487) for the increase of the pension of John W. Majors. He is a blind man, his wife is blind, his family is destitute, and we only ask to give him $24 a month.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John W. Majors, late private in Company B, Third Regiment Indiana Cavalry, and Company H, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

An amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report the bills favorably to the House, and those that are to be recommended to lie on the table to lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. LACEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CRUMPACKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills of the House and Senate, and directed him to report that the following House bills, with amendments, do pass:

H. R. 1219. A bill granting an honorable discharge to W. G. Neeley, of Canyon City, Colo.;

H. R. 8728. A bill granting a pension to Juliette J. Harrow, widow of Gen. William Harrow;

H. R. 5102. A bill granting an increase of pension to Edson Sullivan;

H. R. 8567. A bill to remove the charge of desertion against Gardner Dodge;

H. R. 6930. A bill for the relief of and to correct the military record of Jacob Covert;

H. R. 6625. A bill for the relief of George B. Stone;

H. R. 5762. A bill granting a pension to Joel W. Gibson;

H. R. 6162. A bill removing the charge of desertion from the record of Robert V. Hancock;

H. R. 4253. A bill granting an honorable discharge to Thomas West;

H. R. 1973. A bill for the relief of Frances P. Trumbull, widow of Matthew Trumbull;

H. R. 638. A bill for the relief of George W. Dunning;

H. R. 4283. A bill for the relief of William B. Murray, of South Pittsburg, Marion County, Tenn.;

H. R. 5385. A bill granting a pension to A. C. Litchfield;

H. R. 6931. A bill granting a pension to Taylor McFarland;

H. R. 990. A bill to pension George E. Welles, late colonel Sixty-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry;

H. R. 4315. A bill to increase the pension of George D. Phiney;

H. R. 8037. A bill granting a pension to Lizzie Waltz;

H. R. 9187. A bill to pension Missouri B. Ross;

H. R. 8624. A bill granting a pension to Pauline Robbins, of Sandusky, Sauk County, Wis.;

H. R. 8266. A bill to pension Mrs. Ann Gibbons;

H. R. 3271. A bill to increase the pension of Mrs. Rebecca S. Foster;

H. R. 2981. A bill granting an increase of pension to James W. Jackson;

H. R. 258. A bill to pension Margaret Wilber, of Blair, Nebr.;

H. R. 9593. A bill to increase the pension of Michael Meehan;

H. R. 9801. A bill granting an increase of pension to Emer H. Aldrich;

H. R. 5402. A bill to increase the pension of Louis Hirsch;

H. R. 3297. A bill to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William Henry Woodward;

H. R. 2267. A bill to increase the pension of Jeremiah Hackett;

H. R. 4001. A bill granting a pension to Robert Fletcher;

H. R. 6714. A bill granting a pension to Mary M. Walrath;

H. R. 1045. A bill granting a pension to Mary A. Caulfield.

H. R. 4200. A bill granting a pension to Ellen Stack.

H. R. 247. A bill granting an increase of pension to John Doeblor;

H. R. 7010. A bill for the relief of Mary H. Harbour;

H. R. 3598. A bill granting a pension to Henrietta Fowler;

H. R. 9141. A bill granting a pension to Mrs. A. Pinkston;

H. R. 5153. A bill granting a pension to Mrs. Cordelia Cheney, of Lunenburg, Vt.;

H. R. 2869. A bill for the relief of Eliza J. Mead, widow of James W. Mead;

H. R. 312. A bill for the relief of Ellen Wright, hospital nurse;

H. R. 7583. A bill for the relief of John A. Whitman, a blind soldier;

H. R. 9310. A bill granting an increase of pension to Harry H. Preston;

H. R. 9866. A bill granting a pension to Joseph Griffith;

H. R. 8180. A bill granting a pension to Isabella Cross;

H. R. 6944. A bill to pension John F. Gates;

H. R. 8862. A bill granting an increase of pension to Jordan Thomas;

H. R. 1778. A bill for the relief of Wesley Van Over, late of Company C, One hundred and ninth New York Volunteers, and Company G, Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry;

H. R. 7362. A bill to grant a pension to Junius Alexander; and

H. R. 3487. A bill for increase of pension of John W. Majors.

And that the following Senate bills with amendments do pass:

S. 3474. An act granting a pension to John C. Brown;

S. 949. An act granting a pension to Levi R. Long;

S. 166. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel A. Smith;

S. 156. An act to increase the pension of Capt. John H. Mullen;

S. 2219. An act granting a pension to Thomas Madden;

S. 4533. An act to increase the pension of Lucinda Booth;

S. 125. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Palmer;

S. 8722. An act granting a pension to William J. Williams;

S. 1539. An act granting a pension to Paul Carr;

S. 2112. An act granting a pension to Jesse O. Davy;

S. 2114. An act granting a pension to Rebecca E. Kutz;

S. 1090. An act to pension Mrs. Susan M. Sessford;

S. 4004. An act granting a pension to Julia E. Warner; and

S. 2247. An act granting a pension to Charles E. Mann.

And that the following House bills without amendments do pass:

H. R. 5992. A bill granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Freeman;

H. R. 2157. A bill granting a pension to Herman Dellit; and

H. R. 6645. A bill to increase the pension of Theodore W. Cobia.

And that the following Senate bills without amendment do pass:

S. 4451. An act granting a pension to Nancy Barger;

S. 2588. An act increasing the pension of Corissanda L. McGuire;

S. 1475. An act granting an increase of pension to Elijah N. Parkhurst;

S. 484. An act granting an increase of pension to Carlton W. Muzzy;

S. 2541. An act granting a pension to Clara R. Rodgers;

S. 3515. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary L. Page;

S. 3350. An act granting an increase of pension to Blanche E. Barlow;

And that the following bills do lie on the table:

S. 1353. An act for the increase of pension of Farnham J. Eastman;

H. R. 2694. A bill to increase the pension now paid Mrs. Lucinda Booth, widow of Wiley Booth, a soldier of the war of 1812;

S. 693. An act granting a pension to Abner Abercrombie; and H. R. 10185. A bill to increase the pension of Robert Litzinger. Mr. RAY of New York. I now move, Mr. Speaker, that the House adjourn until Monday next at 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 10.30 o'clock having arrived, the House stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office relating to the extending of certain provisions of the land law to Alaska—to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, requesting an appropriation for a refund of a fine levied on the British steamer Costa Rican—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BABCOCK, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10474) for the extension of Eleventh street NW., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1488); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HEPBURN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10477) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the county of St. Louis, in the State of Minnesota, to build or authorize the building of a foot and wagon bridge across the St. Louis River between Minnesota and Wisconsin, at a point near Fond du Lac, in said State of Minnesota," approved June 11, 1896, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1499); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10550) to enable volunteer soldiers during the war with Spain to vote at Congressional elections, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1508); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LITTLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10476) to authorize telegraph and telephone companies to construct and maintain lines and offices in the Indian Territory, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1508); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3596) to ratify the agreement between the Dawes Commission and the Seminole Nation of Indians, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1504); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5924) to correct the naval record of Martin U. Singhl, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1485); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DAYTON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2087) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to remove the charge of desertion as to Thomas Dunn, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1487); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RAY of New York, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10158) granting a pension to Mary A. Taylor, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1489); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STURTEVANT, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4547) granting a pension to Eli M. Couch, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1490); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9293) to pension Mary E. Robinson, formerly Hollenbach, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1491); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BOTKIN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2617) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary E. Sessions, of Guilford, Vt., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1492); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2026) to pension Sarah A. Halter, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1493); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4446) granting a pension to Ellen Charlton, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1494); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9018) granting a pension to Justus Townsend, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1495); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3806) granting pension to Elam Allen, late of Company E, Thirty-third Iowa Volunteer Infantry, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1496); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HURLEY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8732) for the relief of Henry O. Morse, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1497); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8306) amending chapter 294, entitled "An act to correct the naval record of James Fay and grant him an honorable discharge," approved August 13, 1894, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1500); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BROWNLOW, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 914) removing the charge of desertion against Charles Sweet, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1501); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, adverse reports were delivered to the Clerk and laid on the table, as follows:

Mr. HURLEY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1365) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to procure and present a suitable medal to John Coyle, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 1488); which said bill and report were laid on the table.

Mr. STALLINGS, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1290) for the relief of Mrs. S. E. Edwards, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 1498); which said bill and report were laid on the table.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 10574) to authorize the construction of a bridge over Tombigbee River, in the State of Mississippi—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH: A bill (H. R. 10575) for the relief of certain veterans who have been pensioned under the laws of the United States—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: A joint resolution (H. Res. 274) for the improvement of the harbor at Racine, Wis.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a joint resolution (H. Res. 275) providing for the improvement of the harbor at Kenasha, Wis.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. DINGLEY: A resolution (House Res. No. 310) relative to the consideration of Senate amendments to House bill No. 10100, entitled "A bill to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures"—to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BELL: A bill (H. R. 10576) for the relief of William H. La Count—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10577) for payment of $54 to V. Baldwin Johnson for 15 tons of coal—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 10578) for the relief of Samuel M. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWE: A bill (H. R. 10579) removing the charge of desertion from the military record of Richard Parke—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LYBRAND: A bill (H. R. 10580) to amend the military record of Peter Trossell—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MARSH: A bill (H. R. 10581) to grant an honorable discharge to Frederick A. Noeller—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10582) to grant a pension to Henry C. Huff—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WISE: A bill (H. R. 10583) for the relief of William Edward Bailey—to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAMS: Petitions of Gustave Fisher, Mrs. Annie McNamee, G. A. Kaercher, J. Curtrorn, and George P. Obert, all business firms of Philadelphia, Pa., tobacco and snuff manufacturers, protesting against additional tax on snuff, tobacco, etc., in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine: Petitions of S. H. Wheeler, D. W. McCrillis, and other citizens of Dexter and vicinity, State of Maine, against the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: Petitions of citizens' mass meetings of Center and Winfield, Mo., Christian Church, Baptist Church, and Young People's Baptist Union, of New London, Mo., favoring legislation providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Petition of the Congregational Church of Elkhorn, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Epworth League of Darlington, Wis., for the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ELLIS: Petitions of the Missionary Society of the First Presbyterian Church, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Charity Lodge, Pacific Lodge, Seaside Lodge, and Astoria Lodge, Ancient Order of United Workmen, Anchor Council, No. 556, and 45 citizens, all of Astoria, Oreg., in favor of the bill to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petitions of the Missionary Society of the First Presbyterian Church, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and sundry societies and citizens of Astoria, Oreg., in favor of the passage of a bill to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Petition of members of the United States Military Railroad Construction Corps, for pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENDERSON: Petition of the Button Workers' Protective Union of Muscatine, Iowa, asking for the passage of House bill No. 6092, for the protection of free labor against convict labor—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. HINRICHSSEN: Resolution of Irish-American Societies in Philadelphia, Pa., in opposition to the so-called "Anglo-Saxon alliance"—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. LANHAM: Petition of the executive committee of the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas, in reference to Senate bill No. 3354, to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1897, and all acts amendatory thereof—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MCCORMICK: Petition of sundry citizens of Phillipsburg, Kans., favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petitions of W. H. Coolbaugh and M. J. Coolbaugh, jr., remonstrating against the adoption of Schedule B of the war-revenue bill placing a tax on proprietary medicines—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petitions of the Presbyterian, Baptist, and Methodist Episcopal churches of Simpson, Kans.; Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Christian, Congregational, and Methodist churches of Kensington, Kans., and Shiloh Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Beloit, Kans., for the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petition of Shiloh Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Beloit, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation raising the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of the Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian, and Methodist Episcopal churches of Simpson, Kans.; Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Christian, Congregational, and Methodist churches of Kensington, Kans., and Shiloh Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Beloit, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws and to forbid the interstate transmission of lottery messages by telegraph—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SLAYDEN: Petition of merchants of San Antonio, Tex., against the retroactive clause in the revenue bill affecting stocks on hand—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of the executive committee of the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas, urging the passage of Senate bill No. 3354, relating to extension of authority granted Interstate Commerce Commission—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. STRODE of Nebraska: Petition of Mrs. H. M. Pendleton, president of the Otoe County Woman's Christian Temperance Union, State of Nebraska, urging the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors at Chickamauga Park—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 4, 1898.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Vice-President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

On motion of Mr. TELLER, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved, without objection.

WAR DEPARTMENT DEFICIENCY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate in the deficiency appropriation for public printing and binding for the War Department for the current fiscal year, and to remain available until expended, $100,000, the sum being made necessary by the second call of the President for 75,000 additional troops; which was read.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed with amendments the following bills:

A bill (S. 104) to increase the pension of Lucretia C. Waring;

A bill (S. 1181) granting a pension to Adonia Huard, of New Orleans, La., widow of Hypolite Huard, deceased;

A bill (S. 1118) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Chamberlain;

A bill (S. 1472) granting an increase of pension to Bettie Hord Brown;

A bill (S. 1451) granting an increase of pension to Gen. Halbert E. Paine;

A bill (S. 3553) granting a pension to Bvt. Lieut. Col. Amos Webster; and

A bill (S. 3660) granting a pension to Thomas Edsall.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 360) for the relief of Robert McFarland;

A bill (H. R. 727) granting a pension to Olive H. South;

A bill (H. R. 795) granting an increase of pension to William Henry Smith;

A bill (H. R. 900) granting an increase of pension to Lucy D. Heady;

A bill (H. R. 1520) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Nevitt;

A bill (H. R. 1712) granting an increase of pension to Joel H. Hollowell;

A bill (H. R. 3081) granting an increase of pension to Michael J. Fogarty;

A bill (H. R. 3164) granting a pension to Alden B. Thompson, of Farmvale, Hamilton County, Nebr.;

A bill (H. R. 8190) granting an honorable discharge to John H. Smith;

A bill (H. R. 3565) to grant a pension to Theresa Bonnavau;

A bill (H. R. 3612) to increase the pension of Thomas D. Porter;

A bill (H. R. 4251) granting a pension to Margaret Thomas;

A bill (H. R. 4274) granting an increase of pension to James S. Chapman;

A bill (H. R. 4484) granting a pension to Miriam V. Kenny;

A bill (H. R. 4607) granting an honorable discharge to Charles Miller;

A bill (H. R. 4811) granting a pension to Jane E. Zink;

A bill (H. R. 4916) granting a pension to Virginia C. Fleanor;

A bill (H. R. 5054) granting a pension to Rachel J. Comer;

A bill (H. R. 5069) to pension Jacob N. Atherton;

A bill (H. R. 5707) for the removal of the charge of desertion against William Mellicott, alias William Reed, late of Company G, Eighth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry Volunteers, and legalizing his service in Company E, Eleventh Regiment Tennessee Cavalry Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 6064) granting a pension to Mary A. Watts;

A bill (H. R. 6317) to remove charge of desertion against Alexander McKee;

A bill (H. R. 6482) granting a pension to Herbert W. Leach;

A bill (H. R. 6525) granting a pension to Mary Ann Sullivan;

A bill (H. R. 6718) for the relief of Samuel Racey;

A bill (H. R. 6841) granting an increase of pension to James C. Hervey;

A bill (H. R. 7306) granting an increase of pension to Samuel H. Beckwith;

A bill (H. R. 7506) granting a pension to Susan E. Fielder;

A bill (H. R. 7696) granting an increase of pension to William Christenberry;

A bill (H. R. 7841) granting an increase of pension to George S. Walton;

A bill (H. R. 7844) to increase the pension of Mary Broggan;

A bill (H. R. 7989) granting an increase of pension to Annie J. Bassett;

A bill (H. R. 8286) granting an increase of pension to Alphonzo O. Drake;

A bill (H. R. 8670) granting a pension to Pryor Perkins;

A bill (H. R. 8724) granting a pension to Addie L. Ballou;

A bill (H. R. 8854) to correct the military record of William Hazelbeck, of Portsmouth, Ohio;

A bill (H. R. 9322) granting a pension to Mary C. Gardheffner;

A bill (H. R. 9755) granting a pension to Matilda Waedel;

A bill (H. R. 9765) to increase the pension of John N. Wiley.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PERKINS. I present memorials from the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, the Board of Trade, the Produce Exchange, the Merchants' Association, and other kindred organizations, remonstrating against the reciprocity treaty which has been recently negotiated with France. The memorials are in the form of telegrams, and I ask that they be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator from California to have them printed as a document.

Mr. PERKINS. The memorials are very brief.

Mr. TELLER. It would be better to have them printed as a document rather than in the RECORD.

Mr. PERKINS. I prefer to have them in the RECORD.

Mr. TELLER. Very well; I shall not object.

There being no objection, the memorials were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Telegram.]

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 2, 1898.

To Hon. GEORGE C. PERKINS and MEMBERS CALIFORNIA DELEGATION IN CONGRESS,

Washington, D. C.:

At a conference meeting of the undersigned organizations the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas the President has issued a proclamation extending to France the benefits of the reduced tariff rates, as provided for in section 111 of the present tariff law, in consideration of certain concessions to American products; and

Whereas it appears that by some oversight on the part of Congress the meaning and intention of said section 111 can not be clearly understood without construing it in harmony with article 296 of Schedule H, which distinguishes between natural and fortified wines; and

Whereas it can not have been the intention of either Congress or the President to admit foreign alcoholic compounds at a less rate of duty than the internal-revenue tax on similar compounds made in this country; and

Whereas it appears that under the proposed new arrangement with France compounds of cheap alcohol made to imitate wines with a strength of 24 per cent of spirit, or nearly half the strength of proof spirits, may be imported at a duty of 35 cents per gallon and be used by rectifiers to compound with spirits taxed in this country at $1.10 per proof gallon, thereby reducing our public revenue and giving an advantage to foreign trade over domestic producers, besides demoralizing the pure-wine industry;

Resolved, That the attention of our Senators and Representatives in Congress be called to this danger menacing our public revenues and threatening our local industries, and that they be requested to urge the President to so modify his arrangement with France, by amendment thereof, or by regulations and instructions to collectors of customs, that the reduced rate of 35 per cent on still wines shall apply only to wines containing 14 per cent or less of alcohol, and that the principle shall be recognized that no foreign goods containing alcohol shall pay a less rate of duty than the tax imposed by the internal laws on domestic spirits and compounds thereof.

Resolved, That in any arrangement with France for reciprocal purposes the benefits of the same should be limited to the genuine products of France, and should not be extended to German, Spanish, and other foreign goods imported through French ports, where they are suffered to be treated in imitation of genuine French products.

Resolved, That these resolutions be telegraphed at once to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, with request for immediate action.

San Francisco Chamber Commerce; San Francisco Merchants' Association; San Francisco State Board Trade; California State Board Trade; California Wine Makers' Corporation; San Francisco Produce Exchange; Pacific Hardware and Metal Association; Wholesale Shoe Manufacturers; Wholesale Grocers; Manufacturers and Producers' Association, by A. Sharboro, president.

[Telegram.]

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 2, 1898.

To Hon. GEO. C. PERKINS and MEMBERS CALIFORNIA DELEGATION IN CONGRESS,

Washington, D. C.:

Meeting wine dealers and producers held to-day. Pending further consideration as to other points, it is our belief that Government will recognize that error has been committed in not constraining section 3 of tariff act, in connection with article 296, Schedule H, so as to limit 35-cent rate to still wines containing 14 per cent or less of alcohol. You will remember that in 1894 representatives, importers, and native producers submitted to Treasury Department proofs that if any goods containing alcohol were admitted at less duty than internal-revenue tax, the door would be open to importation of artificial compounds of cheap potato and beet-root spirits to imitate wines for use of rectifiers of spirits, thereby defrauding and reducing our internal revenue. Deputy Commissioner Wilson is familiar with this question and can explain necessity of having limitation included in President's proclamation. Please submit this to Senator WHITE and California Representatives and ask for united action.

HENRY J. CROCKER,

President California Wine Makers' Corporation.

CHARLES A. WETMORE,

F. A. WEST,

Sweet Wine Association.

Mr. CULLOM presented a memorial of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, remonstrating against the sale of intoxicating liquors in any form in prohibition or local-option territory; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of T. J. Potter Lodge, No. 6, of Aurora, Ill., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Board of Trade of Chicago, and of Waltham Grange, No. 584, Patrons of Husbandry, of Waltham, all in the State of Illinois, and of the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas, praying for the passage of the bill to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. MILLS presented a petition of the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas, praying for the passage of the bill to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented sundry memorials of merchants and business men of San Antonio, Tex., remonstrating against the proposed internal-revenue tax being made retroactive; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TURLEY presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Deerlodge, Tenn., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PERKINS from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3701) authorizing the President of the United States to nominate Lieut. Commander R. M. G. Brown, now on the retired list, to be a commander on the retired list, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom were referred the bill (S. 2930) to establish building lines on minor streets in the District of Columbia and the bill (S. 2108) to amend section 4 of the act of Congress entitled "An act relating to the supreme court of the District of Columbia," approved June 21, 1870, and for other purposes, to report them adversely, and to move their indefinite postponement, the Senate having already passed upon the same subject in two House bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will be postponed indefinitely.

DESTRUCTION OF THE BATTLE SHIP MAINE.

Mr. CHANDLER. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I present a report as to the action of the committee upon the resolution instructing the committee to investigate the destruction of the U. S. S. Maine, which, after making certain recitals, asks that the committee may be discharged from the further consideration of the subject. I do not ask to have the committee discharged by vote this morning, but that the report may be printed; and I shall ask to have it taken up hereafter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed and lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 4709) for the relief of A. G. White, postmaster at Beaver, Pa.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 4710) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the construction of a bridge across the Yalobusha River, between Leflore and Carroll counties, in the State of Mississippi," which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 4711) to prescribe and regulate the powers and duties of the President of the United States in the government of countries annexed to the United States or occupied by the order of the President during the pendency of a war with a foreign power; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 4712) designating Titusville, Pa., a subport of entry in the customs district of Erie, Pa.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LODGE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 173) for the relief of Richard J. Steedman, United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. ALLEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 878) for the restoration of the annuities of the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Sioux Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 3d instant approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

An act (S. 1115) for the relief of the legal representatives of John Roach, deceased; and

The joint resolution (S. R. 163) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to present a sword of honor to Commodore George Dewey, and to cause to be struck bronze medals commemorating the battle of Manila Bay, and to distribute such medals to the officers and men of the ships of the Asiatic Squadron of the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4699) to provide an American register for the steamship China.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1709) granting an increase of pension to Nancy G. Allabach;

A bill (S. 1910) conferring on the supreme court of the District of Columbia jurisdiction to take proof of the execution of wills affecting real estate, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 4169) granting an increase of pension to Simeon Stevens;

A bill (S. 4491) granting an increase of pension to Susan D. Yates;

A bill (S. 4554) to authorize the establishment of post-offices at military posts or camps;

A bill (S. 4579) to remove the disability imposed by section 3 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 10525) authorizing certain life-saving stations to be opened and manned during June and July, 1898.

WAR REVENUE BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the revenue bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing pending.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I hope the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. MILLS. I have an amendment that I wish to offer.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Is there a quorum present?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas suggest that there is no quorum?

Mr. CULLOM and others. Oh, no!

Mr. ALLISON. A quorum is present, I think.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the suggestion, but I do not want to have amendments that are pending here cut off in that style.

Mr. ALLISON. The Chair announced that there was no amendment pending.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There are a number of amendments to be offered, which have been presented to the Senate and are in print, and they ought to be disposed of.

Mr. ALLISON. Why are they not offered?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I presume because the gentlemen are not in the Senate Chamber at this moment.

Mr. MILLS. I will remove the difficulty by offering an amendment now.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I have a very important amendment, which I wish to present to a reasonably full Senate. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Mason,	Pritchard,
Allen,	Faulkner,	Mills,	Quay,
Allison,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Sewell,
Baker,	Gallinger,	Money,	Spooner,
Berry,	Hale,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Burrows,	Hansbrough,	Morrill,	Sullivan,
Butler,	Harris,	Nelson,	Teller,
Carier,	Holifield,	Perkins,	Turley,
Chandler,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	Turpie,
Clay,	Lindsay,	Pettus,	White.
Cullom,	McLaurin,	Platt, Conn.
Deboe,	McMillan,	Platt, N. Y.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment to the bill and ask that it be read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following—

Mr. ALLISON. Where?

Mr. MORGAN. To come in at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama name any place where he desires to have the amendment inserted?

Mr. MORGAN. It is to come in at the end of the bill. The sections are not numbered.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama to insert it just before the last section of the bill, stating when the act will take effect.

Mr. MORGAN. Very good.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert before the last section of the bill the following additional sections:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury is required to proceed with the assessment and collection of taxes imposed by sections 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, and 37 of the "Act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 28, 1894.

SEC. —. That if the Secretary of the Treasury omits or refuses to proceed with the assessment and collection of any of the taxes imposed by any of the sections of said act of 1894, that are hereinbefore mentioned by their numbers, it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to institute proceedings in a circuit court of the United States against the Secretary of the Treasury to compel him to perform the duties, in that behalf, that are imposed upon him by this act. And if the Attorney-General shall omit or refuse to institute such proceeding on the application, in writing, of any person who is liable to pay any tax imposed by this act, such person is authorized to institute such proceedings in any circuit court of the United States, in the name of the United States of America, to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to execute the mandate of this act; and an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States may be taken by the unsuccessful party in such proceeding, which shall be advanced upon the docket of said court and heard with all convenient speed. No costs shall be taxed against the petitioner in any such proceeding, and no such proceeding shall abate in consequence of the death or resignation of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall be revived, on motion, against his successor in office.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, it will be observed from the second of the sections that I have offered as an amendment to this bill that I have attempted to provide with particularity to give a full opportunity to have the question that it presents settled by the Supreme Court of the United States, recognizing, in the state of doubt and uncertainty about the former decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on the income tax, and the disputes which are rife in the country over that subject, and the grave and immense interests which are involved in it, that any movement we might make for the enforcement of the collection of the income tax would necessarily be referred to the Supreme Court for final decision as soon as possible.

So in the first section it is made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to enforce the collection under the eleven sections, or any of them, under which taxes are now due to the United States; and in the event of his failure or refusal to do so, the second section provides that the Attorney-General of the United States shall institute proceedings in the name of the United States to compel him to perform that duty; and in the event the Attorney-General might refuse or omit to do it, that any person who is a taxpayer in the United States shall have the right, in the name of the United States, to proceed in any circuit court of the United States to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to perform the duty enjoined by this act. From the decision of the tribunal, when made, the party that is unsuccessful shall have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that cause shall be advanced upon the docket and decided with all convenient speed.

It also provides that no costs shall be imposed upon the petitioner, the party moving, for any part of the proceedings in the cause; in other words, that the Government of the United States will assume the costs of the entire proceeding. This will be obviously just, because the party who would present this case and press it in the name of the United States Government would be acting in behalf of the whole body of the taxpayers of the country, and it would be hard upon him that he should have to sustain any part of the costs of such proceedings; and it is the plain duty of the United States at once to have such questions as are presented in the amendment disposed of immediately.

At the close of the last extra session of Congress, when the Dingley bill was on its final passage, I called the attention of the Senate, particularly of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], to the fact that in the repealing clauses of the Dingley bill sections 1 to 24 were repealed, and then later some other sections were repealed, but it left eleven sections unrepealed by the Dingley bill which had been enacted into law under the Wilson Act. Those eleven sections covered the whole subject of the levy, assessment, and machinery for the collection of the income tax.

When the Republican party, then in charge of the Government in every department of it, having a majority here and a majority in the House and also having the President seated in the Executive chair, came to revise the entire tariff system and tax system of the United States, they purposely omitted the repeal of those eleven sections that were found in the Wilson Act, which are known as the income-tax provisions of that act. I called attention to the fact at the time of the final passage of the Dingley bill that the Republican party, being thus in power, had declined to attack the income-tax laws by a direct movement for their repeal, and they declined to take any ground to the effect that the Supreme Court decision had expunged those eleven sections from the statute, and they left the subject not open merely, but by repealing twenty-four sections preceding these eleven sections of the Wilson law there was an express affirmation of legislative consent and sanction to their continuance upon the statute book as valid measures of statutory enactment.

There could not have been, without the use of express words, a more certain determination on the part of Congress that we would leave those sections unrepealed, and that they were therefore revived, inasmuch as we repealed all the other sections in the Wilson Act, so that the Dingley bill stands to-day as a reenactment, not merely on the question of technical parliamentary procedure, but as a reenactment by clear intentment of the Congress of the United States of those sections of the Wilson Act which comprise the income-tax law.

So I act upon this case to-day, Mr. President, in the presentation of this amendment, just as I would if no such decision of the Supreme Court had ever been made, for no reference is made anywhere to the idea that these eleven sections are considered as being operative or inoperative in virtue of the fact that the Supreme Court had passed upon them in any way whatever, either to affirm or to disaffirm them. So I assume, and I think I shall be able to establish that I assume it not only as a legislative fact and a legal situation, but as one that is proper to be assumed in view of the opinions of the Supreme Court upon these eleven sections, that they are in force and that it is our duty to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to proceed to collect the taxes under those eleven sections.

The Secretary of the Treasury, since the decision in these cases, which I will presently refer to, has omitted and declined—I could not say that he had refused, because I do not know that the question has been presented directly to him by any demand from any person, but he has omitted and declined—to take any proceedings at all for the collection of the taxes under the income laws, that, as I contend, and as I think I can show, are now in full force upon the statute book.

I have regarded the action of the Administration on that subject as being entirely unsatisfactory, for, to say the least of it, the Administration owed to the people of the country and to the Congress of the United States, who had left this legislation in the shape that we now find it, the duty of making the question for the decision of the Supreme Court, at least upon those parts of taxation in the Wilson law that were not touched by the decision of the Supreme Court. That is very clear.

There is perhaps no incident in American history which shows the determination of the Republican party and of this Administration more clearly always to avail themselves of any excuse that is possible for doubling up the taxes upon the people of the United States engaged in industries and for excusing those people of the United States who out of those industries have managed to accumulate very vast wealth. The attitude of the Republican party toward the people upon the face of the proceedings that I have referred to, and in view of the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury has taken no steps at all to proceed with the collection of the taxes, is very distinct and very undeniable that they intend to find excuses in every direction they can possibly find them for the exonerated of the wealthier classes of the United States, those who have accumulations of property and wealth in various forms, from the burdens of taxation.

Now, Mr. President, as we are in a state of war, and as it is alleged, and doubtless it is true, that we have a necessity for raising money in large sums by increase of taxation, as well, perhaps, as in other ways, there can be no excuse left to Congress if we refuse to make this question and have it pressed.

It has been said to me in a private way by gentlemen for whose opinion I have the most profound respect that perhaps it would be unwise at this time, and considering the present composition of the Supreme Court of the United States, for us to press this question. In reply to that I say we have the affirmative action now of both the great political parties of the United States in Congress in favor of the legislation contained in the Wilson law on the subject of income tax.

The Democratic party by its active advocacy of those provisions, while they were not able to persuade the President they then had in power as their leader to approve and sign the bill, did get him into such a state of mental paralysis as that he did not dare to veto it; and after having done that, and having made all the pressure that they could to distribute the burden of taxation justly and equally amongst the people of the United States, a political issue was made upon the provisions and principles of the Wilson bill in respect to taxation upon imports. But the Republican party in the great campaign which resulted in the election of Mr. McKinley to the Presidency studiously avoided making any issue with the Democratic party upon the subject of the income tax, and they left it under that cloud which had been cast over it by the decision of the Supreme Court, taking shelter in that convenient way, until they came to the point of time when it became necessary for them to make a legislative expression and to commit themselves in the face of the American people upon the question whether that tax should be repealed or whether it had been abrogated by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Then pressing that issue as one of the leading features—as the very leading feature—of the present Administration upon the question of tariff taxation, and coming to pass the Dingley bill, which was intended to be a thorough revision, modification, and repeal of all existing laws on the subject of taxation, when the very able Committee on Finance came to consider the proposition as to whether the income tax had been abrogated, they made no expression on the subject. They gave no sign, they uttered no word, to indicate what their opinion was upon that question. When it came to the proposition of legislative action to sweep out all existing tariff and internal taxation by the power of legislative repeal, they still remained silent and inactive, but they took extreme care to repeal 24 sections of the act preceding the 11 sections covering the income tax, and left those to stand there.

Attention was called to it. They were challenged to say whether or not they meant to repeal those eleven sections and there was still no utterance. But the sections were left in the statute book, and they are there now. They have not been removed, and some of them have not been even modified by the decision of the Supreme Court.

The friends whom I consulted in regard to the propriety of bringing up this question at this time thought I had better defer it until such time as the Supreme Court could undergo some process of reorganization through the agency of the political parties in the United States; in other words, that the people must stay and suffer under the supposition that the Supreme Court had entirely eviscerated the eleven sections until we could find through political agencies some relief in the personnel of the Supreme Court that might promise us a fair consideration of this question; for I think there are very few men in America to-day who feel that this question has had really a fair consideration.

Certainly it has not had the fair consideration that was given to the legal-tender question by the Supreme Court, for a decision was made by the majority of the court that the Treasury notes of the United States were not a legal tender for the payment of private debts, and within a few months thereafter, when the court had been reorganized, there was a decision pronounced to the contrary, and that stands as the law to-day. The second decision of the Supreme Court, which overruled the first, that was several months in advance of it in point of time, stands to-day as the admitted law of the United States in every department and in every judicial tribunal in this whole country. Nobody now disputes, and it seems that scarcely any person desires to dispute, the validity and the propriety of that second decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, that the Treasury notes of the United States which are mentioned as being legal-tender notes have their full operation and effect in that direction.

Now, the same fairness of treatment upon this very much greater question of the income tax might lead us, sir—I hope it will lead us; I dare say I believe that it must lead us—into such revision of the decision of the Supreme Court on the income tax as will place this great, necessary, sovereign power of government in the hands of Congress to be used according to their just discretion in distributing equally the burdens of taxation over all places and all people in the United States.

I did not think, Mr. President, that there was any better occasion for presenting this question than in a time of war, because I observe that in some of the great dissenting opinions which were expressed in the case upon the income tax the judges referred with solicitude and earnest argumentation and even importunity in their discussions with each other of this great question to the fact that when the country got into a state of war we might find ourselves in a condition where that decision would prove the wreck of the Republic.

Now, sir, it is not too much to assert to-day that if the war we are conducting with Spain, a comparatively weak power, was a war with Great Britain we should not only find it necessary to resort to income taxation to get the means for carrying on the Government, but, sir, the people would rise above that Supreme Court and they would have it even at the expense of the apparent revolution of the system of government under which we are abiding.

I refer to that, Mr. President, not in any threatening sense, but I refer to it as a calamity that might easily overtake us, which was predicted by Justice Harlan particularly and by Justice Brown in their adverse opinions, and which now makes it incumbent upon the Congress of the United States, as representatives of our people, while war is on and while the emergency is imminent and the necessity great, to take this question up and consider it.

I suppose it will not be asserted, Mr. President, against the attitude I take here to-day that the question I am presenting is not germane to this bill, for while we are raising revenues by new forms of taxation, and by the issue of bonds, and by the recoinage, perhaps, of the silver bullion that is in the Treasury, it is of the utmost importance that we should ascertain whether there are any taxes due under the existing laws of the United States that ought to be collected. It is a demand upon our moral courage that we should bring this question to the front and decide it, and that we should say to the people of this country either that these taxes are collectible, or else that they are not collectible because the laws have been destroyed by the decision of the Supreme Court.

One of the strong arguments that was made in favor of the legal-tender decision by which Treasury notes are now substituted for gold and silver coin in the payment of debts was the fact that the legal-tender paper money had its origin in a time of war, and it called upon the war-making power and the money-borrowing power for its support, the Government of the United States finding it necessary in that terrible emergency to resort to every power that it possessed, direct or inferential, for the purpose of trying to get the ways and means to conduct that conflict of civil war.

Now we have war upon us, and we have the right to appeal to the same power and to all the inferences of power that were appealed to in all of our former wars, beginning with the war of 1812 and coming on down to the war of the rebellion. We have the right, and it is our duty in this emergency, to appeal to all of these powers and to assert them and to leave it to the Supreme Court of the United States to say whether or not they will uphold and sustain the hands of Congress and the hands of the people in providing proper ways and means for the conduct of a great national war.

So I think the time is opportune; more than that, I think it is incumbent upon us now to pass on this question, and I think I can show, Mr. President, as to parts of the taxation embraced in those sections of the income tax in the Wilson bill that the Supreme Court decision does not present any impediment whatever as to some of the taxes that are contained in those sections of the Wilson bill and were reaffirmed in the Dingley bill, and there is a large field of operation under those sections for the collection of the tax that has not been touched by the decision of the Supreme Court.

Sir, I accord to the decision of the Supreme Court full faith and credit; and while I dissent from it in my own mind and judgment absolutely, and while I think that it is utterly unsustainable in reason or upon precedent, while I think it was a cruel destruction of that great doctrine of stare decisis, which ought always to be maintained in favor of the general welfare, I pay loyal obedience to that decision so long as it is a decision; but in casting my mind over the great number of cases in which the Supreme Court of the United States have held that they would not abide by former conclusions and in the recent cases of the legal tender and in this case itself—when I cast my eye over that vast number of cases, I see, Mr. President, that there is not only room to hope that the Supreme Court may change its opinion, but I believe there is an absolute certainty that if we present the question now in the presence of this war and of the necessity which it creates, that court will find reasons for changing their opinion upon that question and that they will hold that that income tax, which nobody has disapproved as a law and as a method of taxation—I say nobody; very few—is valid and they will find reasons for saying that these laws are valid and ought to be enforced.

I accord to every man on that bench the full right to change his opinion whenever his conscience admonishes him that it ought to be done. I admire the courage, I may say the heroism, of a man who may change his opinion upon a great question of national importance like this, being influenced, as I have no doubt all of the judges on that bench were influenced, by conscientious convictions.

In that form, Mr. President, it becomes a still greater public calamity if any mistake was made, if there was any cutting down by virtue of that decision of the true and legitimate constitutional powers of Congress connected with this great subject of national taxation—

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator a question at this point?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask a question for information. The decision of the court, as I understand it, does not declare that the income tax is unconstitutional, but the effect of the decision is that the income tax is a direct tax, and, if levied and collected, must be apportioned among the States?

Mr. MORGAN. That is right.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if he thinks it would be possible for the Secretary of the Treasury, in view of that decision, to construe this amendment, if it be adopted, as being simply a direction to him to proceed to collect the tax by apportionment?

Mr. SPOONER. He can not apportion.

Mr. MORGAN. The Secretary of the Treasury can not apportion. The apportionment must be made by act of Congress. If Congress should apportion the tax, it would be all well enough; but they find that difficulty in the way, and of course they would stand upon it.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that, but I wanted to know if the Senator thinks that his amendment, if adopted, would amount to the same thing as the reenactment of the income-tax law, and would be as positive as if it contained an instruction to proceed to collect the tax by the rule of uniformity. I want to be sure that the whole question will be reviewed by the court.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. Perhaps I would not state it exactly in that language, but that is the substance of the situation.

Before I undertake to show from these two decisions that there are subjects of taxation contained in those sections of the Wilson bill that have not been abrogated, I wish to state very briefly—and I do it, Mr. President, at the risk of worrying the Senate, but as a matter of justice to my own convictions, which are not very recent—I wish to state very briefly a ground upon which this taxation can be entirely sustained, which was not referred to in the decision of the Supreme Court—a plain, palpable, obvious, constitutional ground.

That, Mr. President, I am aware is rather a rash expression for any man to utter in the presence of the Supreme Court of the United States and of this Senate; but the plainest mind when it sees the truth is always inspired with the conviction that by stating it there are other minds that will adopt it without prejudice and that it will have its way at last and it will triumph over error, because the human heart and the human mind are so organized that they espouse the truth whenever their passions are not aroused; they espouse it as the guide of mankind and of nations. I therefore rely upon it confidently.

The Supreme Court could not get along with this decision and reach the conclusion that they did without overruling a series of cases, not one of which looked in the direction of this last decision—not one—or gave it any countenance at all; which cases had been the law of the United States for a hundred years, and had been acted upon by all the political parties in time of peace and in time of war, and particularly were acted upon and reestablished in the enactment under which an income tax was levied for the purpose of carrying on the late civil war.

The Supreme Court held the attitude toward the people of the United States and the world of overruling all of these decisions and all of these acts of Congress, enacted for peace and for war, in order that they might establish the proposition that the tax laid in the Wilson bill in the eleven sections I have referred to, which are numbered in the amendment I now offer, was not applicable or could not be enforced because it did not contain the feature of Congressional apportionment amongst the States. That is the only ground that they took, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] has suggested. They did not deny that an income tax per se or inherently was a constitutional provision or assert that it had any suspicion of infirmity.

They merely held that the tax could not be enforced under the Constitution of the United States unless Congress provided for its apportionment amongst the States.

One would naturally say in thinking of a subject of this kind, first of all, that the tax in question must be one that is capable of being apportioned between the States in some just and proper sense. If it is what is called a direct tax—that is to say, tax upon the property or a tax upon the man or a capitation tax or a tax upon anything connected with a man in the nature of ownership or proprietorship—it must be capable of being apportioned among the States. They found that those taxes were direct taxes, at least those that were concerned or involved in the case that was at the bar of the court at the time the decision was made, and that they were capable of being apportioned among the States according to numbers, because they are derived in part from the use of personal and real property. The syllogism is difficult and the conclusion is not logical.

It is hard to find any injury a State could suffer because taxes that it is not required to pay are not apportioned according to numbers.

The question in this case is that of apportionment, first, in reference to the possibility of making an apportionment when we consider the subject-matter that is being taxed; and next, the historical question as to what that apportionment related to at the time that that feature was put into the Constitution of the United States.

That question of apportionment had reference, of course, when it was being put into that Constitution, to some great event, some great and agitating condition which was attempted to be settled and arranged by the provision of the organic law of the United States; and when we cast our eyes back over the history of the United States at that period and ascertain from the contemporaneous facts and also from the language of the different portions of the Constitution that there was a great national political question up for determination, which related to apportionment of taxation and representation, we naturally turn to that point, to that question, to ascertain whether this doctrine or this requirement of apportionment which was put into the Constitution did not have reference to that great fact.

What was it? The Constitution of the United States provided for the extermination of the slave trade, which should cease in 1820. It provided for certain rights in favor of the slaveholding States, based upon the fact that the slaveholders regarded property in human beings as being constitutionally right and morally right, but that the men who were included in this species of proprietorship or property were chattels—they might be sold and disposed of as horses, as cattle, or as anything else, for that was the law of slavery.

The question sprang up in the convention which framed the Constitution as to the right of representation in the popular branch of Congress. In order to make that question very clear and to settle it upon foundations that were admitted to be just by those engaged in that great political controversy, a regular census was ordained to be taken every ten years, and that was put into the Constitution.

In any other country of which I have knowledge the taking of a census is a mere ascertainment of the strength of the nation or country in population; but in the United States it is made the basis of representation, so that when we come to ascertain how many Representatives a State may have in the popular branch of Congress—each State being entitled, of course, to two Senators without reference to size or population—it was provided that the census returns should be the basis of apportionment.

Here was a great constitutional feature, an underlying feature, having reference to the continued progress of growth and power in the United States and the distribution of the political power among the several States of the American Union. The distribution of political power among the States according to the number of their inhabitants is a vital feature in our federation. The union of the States could not have existed, nor can it be preserved, without this constitutional provision. Compared with this, the just distribution of the burdens of taxation is a question of minor importance. It was associated with representation in the Constitution as a means of giving protection to slavery.

The taking of a census, therefore, was a matter of the greatest possible moment, for it was to be the measure for all time to come of the right and basis of representation amongst the States in the House of Representatives. Of course the census included all human beings in ascertaining the aggregate of population, and naturally it would include all human beings in ascertaining the basis of representation; but the slaveholding States insisted that all their slaves should be counted in the basis of representation, and the Northern States insisted that none of them should be counted, because they were chattels, and were not regarded and treated by the Southern States or the Southern people, in a political sense, as being human beings. This controversy originated in these conditions. It was a fierce and eventful controversy, and upon its settlement depended the establishment of this Union upon the foundation of this great Constitution. It was settled; and how was it settled? It was settled by a compromise agreement that three-fifths of the negro population should be computed in the basis of political representation.

That was the settlement of this great conflict between the North and the South, originating in the very cradle of the Confederacy before the United States Government under the present Constitution had been established or could be established, and forcing its way into the Constitution that was "to establish a more perfect Union." In that way the question of representation was settled by apportionment among the States, under which apportionment all of the white people were to be counted in the basis of representation, and three-fifths of the negroes, and none of the Indians who were not taxed. That was the situation, that was the controversy, and that was the plan of settlement.

At that period of time the Government of the United States had no very great foreign commerce; it could not then rely for revenues upon imports to any great extent; and it was found to be necessary, in the opinion of the wise ordainers of that Constitution, that a system of direct taxation, virtually acknowledged and enforced during the period of the Confederation by making tax assessments upon the States that were to be continued under the Constitution of the United States under the form of direct taxation of the people, instead of their indirect taxation through State assessments.

Then the Northern men asked the question: "If there is to be taxation such as existed under the Confederation, what are we going to do with the negroes, who are chattels—are they to be the subjects of a capitation tax or any other form of direct taxation?" The Southern men said, "No; they are not subject to capitation tax, because they are chattels." The Northern men said they were subject, because they were counted at three-fifths in the basis of representation in the House of Representatives.

This difficulty was settled by arranging that direct taxation and representation in the House of Representatives should be apportioned among the States in a certain proportion. Three-fifths of the negroes were to be counted and all of the white people, both in representation and direct taxation; the negroes as taxable chattels to the extent of three-fifths of their numbers and all other persons, except Indians not taxed, were counted as citizens subject to direct taxation by Congress without requiring the States to collect the taxes.

Now, we know how it was that this question of apportionment and direct taxation came to be united in the language of the Constitution, as follows:

Article I, section 3, clause 1. Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons.

It is a very simple history, and a very plain proposition, and there is no historian who can justly refer that language in the Constitution to any other great event. The statement of it, Mr. President, in the text I have read, is quite sufficient to make argument unnecessary on that point.

That was the occasion for the uniting of taxation and apportionment, and that, Mr. President, was the cause of the ordination in the Constitution of the United States that direct taxes and representation should be apportioned among the States according to numbers. If there had been no division of races in this country, if there had not been a large representation of a slave race in this country, who then were the cause of extreme solicitude among all the patriots who had just passed through the Revolutionary war, that language never would have found its way into the Constitution of the United States, and it would never have been considered at all appropriate or at all necessary that any provision should be made for the apportionment of direct taxation among the different States by act of Congress, according to numbers, for the reason that numbers would have had very little influence upon the subject of the equality of taxation or upon the income that might be derived from it.

It would be a natural, just, and uniform method of taxation that we should tax the people at large, leaving the distribution of the burdens of taxation, according to their wealth and their numbers, as Providence might have opened the way to them in the acquisition of property.

The Southern States have a large population that held the dual relation of persons and property to be dealt with both in representation and taxation, and that peculiar condition was provided for by a special provision in the Constitution, which I have just quoted. When slavery no longer existed, the reason for that provision ceased. It became obsolete, and would be so held as to any statute on the books; but we are not left to that argument to establish its disappearance from our Constitution. It has been superseded by a repugnant amendment of the Constitution, and it stands repealed by votes of the States which adopted the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. MORGAN. I do.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish so much to ask the Senator a question as to ask him to state as a part of his remarks his view. The Senator's argument is certainly one of the most interesting and instructive contributions to this great question which has ever been made—I am inclined to think the most interesting and instructive contribution to the debate that has ever been made, so far as I know—and I wish to inquire whether he thinks that early doctrine, which I believe has been entertained by all the judges in former times and lately, that the land tax is a direct tax is sound?

Mr. MORGAN. That a tax upon land is a direct tax?

Mr. HOAR. Yes; and if a tax upon land be a direct tax, how does the Senator reconcile that proposition with the doctrine he is now suggesting?

Mr. MORGAN. I am not stating a doctrine, Mr. President; I am stating the facts of history, and stating them, not with a view of maintaining any particular theory of the construction of the Constitution as it might have been heretofore construed, but to take the instrument up as it is to-day, and the facts as they exist to-day, and to show that the cause for inserting these words into the original text of the Constitution has disappeared, and with their disappearance, in the wisdom of some very great man—I do not know who he was; I wish I did, that I might now express on this floor my admiration for his wisdom—the occasion having disappeared, he saw that the apportionment of direct taxation was no longer necessary to the purposes of justice. He saw that it was necessary, when we were amending the Constitution of the United States, to follow up the abolition of slavery, and when we got to the second clause of the fourteenth amendment, to provide for that changed condition, and it was provided for by striking the words "direct taxes" from the text of the Constitution.

Mr. HOAR. My question, if the Senator will pardon me, was this: I understand the Senator's argument in substance—it is a very powerful one, indeed—to be that the direct tax, being a tax upon persons, was adjusted with reference to population in the same way as the right to vote is adjusted, to wit, all the persons, including Indians not taxed, were counted per capita. Then, in regard to the slaves, it was a compromise between the Northern idea that they ought to be counted according to numbers and the Southern idea that they ought to be treated as property or chattels, and that that explains the language of the Constitution; but that state of things having gone by, the object sought to be secured by the old constitutional provision has become not a practical one, because all the negroes now are free.

That is a very interesting suggestion and contribution, and a novelty so far as I am aware, perhaps not with the Senator himself, but it is of great interest. Now, I want to know how the Senator reconciles that theory, whether as a matter of history or as a matter of constitutional interpretation, with the conceded doctrine—conceded by everybody—that a land tax is a direct tax, and so is to be laid according to population, as prescribed in the old Constitution. If that be true, is the Senator's suggestion true, or is that a mistake, and have all the judges and writers been mistaken in that particular?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, that is a very disputed question, although the Senator from Massachusetts seems to think it is a pretty well settled one—perhaps it is in the generality of opinion among the members of the bar of the United States—as to whether a tax on land is a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution. It is direct, of course, in one sense, because it is imposed directly on property, but not more direct than the tax upon whisky or the tax upon tobacco, which is called an excise tax, that no one ever thought of taxing in proportion to the population of the States, respectively. It is, in fact, a tax on property. A direct tax, as the words were understood in connection with the then recent history of the taxation of the people for national purposes through State laws, may have meant, and, in my opinion, did mean, a tax levied upon the people directly by act of Congress, and did not relate to the nature, uses, quality, or condition of the property to be taxed.

Mr. HOAR. That is an excise tax.

Mr. MORGAN. Yet it is direct. I do not understand that the words "direct tax" in the Constitution have a certain specific meaning relating to the subject of taxation, but that the expression is rather a synonym for the other words which are used in connection with it; the other words being "capitation or other direct tax." When you say "capitation or other direct tax," you mean capitation or some other tax that is directly upon the persons, perhaps, and not upon the land; and you might argue that very rationally; but I am not now engaged in trying to account for the literal definition of the different words in this section. I wish to ascertain their meaning in the connection in which they are found.

I am trying to present what I conceive to be a very important historical fact, or a statement of a series of facts, to show that the people of the United States, when they came to rectify their Constitution after the civil war had ended and after all men became free, abolished the apportionment feature of the old Constitution except as to the basis of representation. If I show that, Mr. President, then my point is established. If I show that in the fourteenth amendment the apportionment feature of the original text of the Constitution in the third clause of the second section of the first article is abolished, repealed, or eliminated by amendment, as it relates to direct taxes, then there is no reason remaining, and I think none can be suggested rationally, for contending that taxes, whether they are direct or indirect, shall be apportioned according to numbers among the States, but that representation alone is now left to be so apportioned. All taxes, direct or indirect, when they are not levied upon specific classes of property or people, but are levied at large upon the people, their earnings, their incomes, or their property, adjust themselves amongst the different States and become as equal as it is possible for human laws to create equality of taxation.

One has only to read the two in connection to see that this second section of the fourteenth amendment does necessarily amend and repeal the apportionment that is provided in the text of the Constitution.

Representatives—

Says the fourteenth amendment—

shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, exclusive of Indians not taxed.

That is the organic law of the United States to-day, and if there is any text in the original Constitution of the United States that is in conflict with it, that text is necessarily eliminated, removed, repealed. That is the law of all statutes, organic or legislative. In the Constitution as it was originally adopted, changes in the text have been made by the substitution of other language relating to the same subject, such as the alteration of the method of choosing electors for President and Vice-President. In such cases the latest amendment supersedes the former provision by substituting a different text, which operates as a repeal of the original text without any declaration to that effect. I will read that language again, and then I will ask a question.

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed.

Is there a court in Christendom that would hold, upon that language, that there is any requirement for the apportionment of direct taxes? Take that as a statement of the original organic law, and I hold, and anybody would be obliged to hold, that it did not bring up the question of apportionment of taxation, because apportionment is not mentioned in it except with reference to Representatives, but in the original text of the Constitution apportionment is associated not merely with Representatives but also with direct taxation. Says the original text of the Constitution: "Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned." Says the fourteenth amendment, "Representatives shall be apportioned," leaving out "direct taxes."

Now, either those words have no meaning at all in the fourteenth amendment, or else they do extirpate from the text of the original Constitution the words "direct taxes." More than that, Mr. President, they extirpate all the language of the old Constitution that is changed in the fourteenth amendment.

There is but one possible chance to get out of this category, and that is that the fourteenth amendment did not expressly repeal the following clause, as it did expressly repeal the clause which I have just cited, being the fourth clause of the ninth section of the first article of the Constitution. I will read it:

No capitation, or other direct, tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

The Supreme Court have planted their decision upon that clause, just as if that clause had not been necessarily repealed by the clause I read from the fourteenth amendment, being the second clause of that amendment. I wish to say that this clause which I have just read, and I will repeat it—

No capitation, or other direct, tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken—refers to "the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken." It makes reference to a part of the Constitution preceding it which has been repealed, and, of course, if the part to which it makes reference has been repealed, the part which contains the reference is no longer in force. The part of "the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken" that relates to apportionment of taxes has no longer any force, and the reference made to it in the original text of the Constitution does not keep it in force after that text has been amended by striking out "direct taxes."

Mr. MILLS. May I suggest to the Senator from Alabama, in connection with his argument, that if that clause of the original Constitution is still in force, a capitation tax levied by Congress, or a poll tax, as we say in the States, must be levied upon three-fifths of the negro population?

Mr. MORGAN. As a matter of course; and not upon the other two-fifths.

Mr. MILLS. Very well. Before the war, when the negroes were property, the owner of the property could pay on three-fifths of his negroes, but now you take five independent negroes, who are not property at all, and if a capitation tax is levied, it must be levied according to three-fifths. Who is to determine which three of the negroes are to pay taxes and which two shall be exempt?

Mr. MORGAN. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Texas for the reduction ad absurdum he has presented here. It is absolutely impossible to answer that suggestion. This clause on which the Supreme Court rests its decision went with the first, necessarily. Otherwise the Constitution is left in inextricable confusion. It does require that only three-fifths of the negroes shall be taxed, leaving two-fifths entirely untaxed. I do not think I need go any further with this for the purpose I have in view, which is merely to show, if I can, to my own constituents and to the American people, as far as they are disposed to pay any attention to my observations, the reason for the faith that is in me, that the decision of the Supreme Court, omitting notice of these great historical facts and paying no attention to the fact that the fourteenth amendment repealed the third clause of the second section of the first article of the Constitution, has left the question where we, as a duty that we owe to ourselves and to posterity, must bring it up for readjudication. That is my point.

That is the object of my amendment, to get the subject before the Supreme Court for readjudication. When it gets there I can not doubt, unless I can doubt the justice of those great judges, that they will see that this question of apportionment of direct taxes amongst the people of the different States is no longer a question in the United States, that it has been settled by constitutional amendment. That is as far as I care to go in this matter, and I have made these observations for the purpose of showing the necessity of having the subject again brought before the Supreme Court for further examination, and if there were nothing else in this case but what I have gone over, it seems to me obvious that the Senate can scarcely refuse to have this question tested again, in view of the fact that we are driven to such extremities as we are now of increasing taxation and borrowing money in order to carry on the war with Spain.

Now, I turn to the decision itself. I have a complaint to make about the decision that any lawyer in the United States will appreciate, I think. It is a just complaint. The Supreme Court of the United States, having the ultimate power, which is the last and highest assertion of sovereignty, of deciding upon the validity of acts of Congress and the impropriety or invalidity of acts of the executive Government, holds such an attitude of supremacy—I might say dominion—over the destiny of these people and their rights that it becomes incumbent upon that court to forbear to stretch its authority by means of its own rulings. If there be one offense which it is possible that court could commit higher than all the balance of the crimes which could be committed by the other departments of the Government of the United States, it would be an attempt on their part to arbitrarily stretch their authority.

It is a uniform rule of all judicial procedure that no question is decided by any court in any judgment it may render that is not an issue in the cause, for the judgment of a court upon a particular right or a class of rights that are put in issue, although they may not have been the subject-matter of the particular suit, is so overwhelming in its conclusive effect that any of the rights which fall within the category of that particular right that was decided in the particular cause, afterwards being asserted in court, becomes res adjudicata, although it was not actually presented on the pleadings of the case. It becomes very necessary, not only as a matter of practice or convenience, but as a matter of safety to the people of the United States, that every court, and more especially the Supreme Court of the United States, should confine its decision to the questions involved in the case at bar and not attempt after deciding the case at bar, to give a wide sweep to the decision in order to cover other cases and other rights that were not in controversy before it.

Sir, if the Supreme Court of the United States can make pretext of deciding a particular cause and after it has decided that particular issue sweep out and announce that the effect of its decision is to decide and put an end to other controversies not in issue before the court, there can scarcely be thought of a more dangerous and disastrous usurpation of power over the people than that. That is what was done in this case.

The question in this case, and the only one, was whether the income of certain corporations was liable to tax under the Wilson law, and the objection to it was that the Wilson law did not apportion the taxes so levied amongst the States. That is the whole case. A tax was laid under the Wilson law upon the income of certain classes of corporations, and in the bill of equity which was filed before a judge of the circuit court of the United States for an injunction, the stockholder who filed the bill said that his company was about to make payment of taxes under the Wilson Act levied upon the income of the corporation, but that the income of the corporation was derived from the use of personal property and real property, and that it was a direct tax, because to tax the income of personal and real estate is the same thing as to tax the property itself, and the Wilson Act not having made an apportionment of the taxation among the States, that he had a right to the injunction.

That case was brought before the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal (the injunction had been refused in the court below), and for the nonce it was decided by a court equally divided in opinion, four on one side and four on the other, which meant an affirmance of the judgment of the court below. At all events, the decree of the divided court sustained the constitutionality of the income tax on those corporations in the Wilson bill.

Thereupon there was a rehearing granted in that cause, and one of the judges, Judge Jackson, of Tennessee, who had not sat in the case before, appeared in the Supreme Court and took part in the final hearing of the case, and the outcome of it was, at the end of their consultations, that there were four judges in favor of maintaining the constitutionality, or the propriety I may call it, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] very properly suggests, of such a system of taxation and five against it.

In the meantime, of course, one judge had changed his opinion. Who he was we do not know, nor do I think it is to the interest of the Republic that we should make an inquiry of that kind, for that judge doubtless did it in the exercise of a pure conscience; I think not of a right mind, because I do not think a very right-minded judge—one who is properly informed as to the necessity, at least, of the rule of stare decisis upon great questions of this kind—would have ventured to have overruled the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall and other judges which had stood unimpeached for a hundred years. It was a very rash venture. There must have been a very great pressure on his conscience to do that, and I give him credit for a conscience which could put him in antagonism to Chief Justice Marshall and most of the lawyers of the United States, and cause him to reverse his opinion inside of a month. I give him great credit for it. He was a heroic man. At the same time, I do not think he was a wise man.

I have stated the case that was decided, and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States rendered the last decision, October term, 1894. The judgment of the court on the rehearing and the decree of the court in that case was:

The decrees hereinbefore entered in this court will be vacated; the decrees below will be reversed and the cases remanded, with instructions to grant the relief prayed.

The relief prayed was an injunction against the collection of taxes upon the income of a particular corporation derived from personal and real property. That was the whole of it. They were not content to stop there, however, but they did what is very rarely done in any opinion of the Supreme Court. They summed up in syllabi what they conceived to be the effect of their decision, and instead of stopping upon the point they decided and the case they decided, they undertook to spread it over eleven sections of this law, which contain provisions that were utter strangers to the question of a corporation tax. What do they say?—

Our conclusions may, therefore, be summed up as follows:

First. We adhere to the opinion already announced, that, taxes on real estate being indisputably direct taxes, taxes on the rents or income of real estate are equally direct taxes.

That is the first point.

A tax on a distillery, or on the whisky made from corn raised on the ground where the distillery is worked, would be equally a direct tax, because it is levied upon income produced upon the real estate; but this is held to be an excise tax. A plain and sincere mind fails to perceive any sound reason for these nice distinctions. If the States were included in this constitutional inhibition against all direct taxation, they would necessarily perish for want of revenue; but it is held that this inhibition only applies to Congress. Why? Not because the tax is in its nature direct, but because it is directly levied by Congress upon the people, and because Congress, it is alleged, is prohibited from taxing the people directly, except upon the plan of apportionment among the States.

We are of opinion that taxes on personal property or on the income of personal property are likewise direct taxes.

If that is true, a license tax on sales of whisky or beer, or on their manufacture, when graded by the quantity sold, is a direct tax on personal property. Yet no one doubts that such a tax is constitutional if it is described in the statute as an excise tax.

That covered the case at bar. That decided it.

Third. The tax imposed by sections 27 to 37, inclusive—

When there was but a clause of one of these sections involved—the tax on corporations—

Third. The tax imposed by sections 27 to 37, inclusive, of the act of 1894, so far as it falls on the income of real estate and of personal property, being a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution, and therefore unconstitutional and void because not apportioned according to representation, all those sections, constituting one entire scheme of taxation, are necessarily invalid.

This tax, "so far as it falls on the income of real estate and of personal property" is held to be "unconstitutional and void." The part of it, if there is such a part, that is "the income" of skill or genius, not falling upon real or personal property, seems to remain taxable. You can not tax the canvas or the paint of a great picture, but the skill of the artist may be taxed. But there is no end of absurd dilemmas to grow out of this mistaken idea of the definition of direct taxation by Congress.

There comes to view the imperial spread of this usurpation on the part of that highest court of justice of the United States. There they left the case, left the text, their own judgment, and with a hand of tyrannic usurpation attempted to enlarge and extend the decision over eleven sections of this law containing taxes that have no relation to corporations or real property. That I dissent from as a Senator of the United States. I resent and deny and I denounce lawless use of the power of the Supreme Court of the United States to leave the issue presented in the particular case and, after they have decided that, undertake to spread the decision over eleven sections of an act of Congress which contain provisions entirely foreign to the case they decided. There, sir, is a demand upon the manhood of Congress—something greater than that.

There is a demand upon the conscience of Congress that they shall respond to the obligation they took when they were seated in this Chamber and in the other House, that they would protect and preserve the Constitution of the United States against all violation. And, sir, when the Supreme Court of the United States attempts, as it has done most indisputably, to spread its power over thirteen sections of a great law that the Democratic party enacted and the Republican party would not repeal in the Dingley Act, they committed against the Constitution of this country and the dignity and authority of Congress an aggression that we ought not to submit to with quietude, but whenever the occasion presents we ought to call their attention respectfully to the situation and demand that they shall again consider this matter, and that they shall confine their decision to the case at bar and to the questions put in issue by the parties to the suit.

In that connection I will proceed to read parts of this act to show the Senate of the United States that many things are taxed under these sections, from 27 to 37, inclusive, eleven sections, which were not considered or heard of upon the record in the case in which the decision was pronounced, and which has operated to create such a frown upon further legislative action, such an admonition to the Congress of the United States that it seems that all parties, Republican and Democrat and Populist, have been driven from the consideration of this subject as if it were under some tabu, as if we had no right to reconsider on our part, as they reconsidered on their part, the enactments which were made in the Wilson Act.

If they are right, it is a duty of respect and honor which we owe to the Supreme Court of the United States that we should repeal this action and denounce it as being unconstitutional. But, instead of that, when the opportunity was presented for its repeal in the Dingley bill, the Republican party of this country passed it over sub silentio; not, however, without their notice being called to it. I called their attention to it on the floor of the Senate. And it is left to stand for what it is worth; and what is it worth if we allow that action of Congress, matured in two Congresses and upon two great bills, both affirming the validity of the income tax, to stand as a dead letter on the statutes, because it has been denounced in that part of this opinion which is clearly obiter dictum, which was not involved in the case they decided, and which they had no right to denounce? Here is the particular section under which this controversy arose:

That from and after the 1st day of January, 1895, and until the 1st day of January, 1900, there shall be assessed, levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income received in the preceding calendar year by every citizen of the United States, whether residing at home or abroad, and every person residing therein, whether said gains, profits, or income be derived from any kind of property, rents, interest, dividends, or salaries, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation carried on in the United States or elsewhere, or from any other source whatever, a tax of 2 per cent on the amount so derived over and above $4,000, and a like tax shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income from all property owned and of every business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States by persons residing without the United States. And the tax herein provided for shall be assessed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and collected and paid upon the gains, profits, and income for the year ending the 31st day of December next preceding the time for levying, collecting, and paying said tax.

Under the provision of another section, section 29, in regard to the manner of assessment, it was enacted:

The net profits or income of all corporations, companies, or associations shall include the amounts paid to shareholders, or carried to the account of any fund, or used for construction, enlargement of plant, or any other expenditure or investment paid from the net annual profits made or acquired by said corporations, companies, or associations.

Now I want to read some of the other provisions here, or rather to call attention to certain parts of them:

SEC. 23. There shall be levied, collected, and paid—

Recollect that if there were no other part of this statute upon the books except this, it is a perfect law and could be fully executed without reference to any other law. It is separable from all the other sections and parts of this act, as a complete act of Congress, and is in no way dependent upon them for interpretation or the machinery of execution.

It is as correct and true to say that sections 1 to 24 are unconstitutional because they are included in the same act with sections 27 to 37 as it is to say that section 29 is unconstitutional because it is associated in the same act with section 27.

In section 30 salaries of officers are taxed upon the gross amount of income above $4,000 per annum. I will read it:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all salaries of officers, or payments for services to persons in the civil, military, naval, or other employment or service of the United States, including Senators and Representatives and Delegates in Congress, when exceeding the rate of $4,000 per annum, a tax of 2 per cent on the excess above the said $4,000; and it shall be the duty of all paymasters and all disbursing officers under the Government of the United States, or persons in the employ thereof, when making any payment to any officers or persons as aforesaid, whose compensation is determined by a fixed salary, or upon settling or adjusting the accounts of such officers or persons, to deduct and withhold the aforesaid tax of 2 per cent; and the pay roll, receipts, or account of officers or persons paying such tax as aforesaid shall be made to exhibit the fact of such payment.

This tax is collected, an excise, or duty, by the official who pays the salary, and has no possible relation to income from real or personal property, yet that is held to be unconstitutional only because it is found in the same act with an income tax on incomes derived from corporations, but in a different section of the act.

To illustrate this perfectly, I will take the case of a Senator of the United States who goes to Mr. Nixon's office for the purpose of drawing his pay, monthly, or as often as he wants to, if there is anything due to him. It is made the duty of the Financial Clerk of the Senate to take the tax out of his pay for that month and to account for it. There is a complete system of assessment and collection or imposition of the tax within that section. It is perfectly complete. Yet this tax is held to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. It is an interesting question whether we will so vote.

Now, let me ask what has that got to do with the income of corporations, whether on realty or personalty? Why did the Supreme Court stretch its jurisdiction to abolish that tax, along with the others, when the question of liability to taxation of the salary of an officer was not before it? Nobody argued it, and the court had no right to make a decision upon it. That tax, Mr. President, stands unrepealed and unassailed except by this carefully drawn obiter dictum, which is put in the form of a syllabus at the end of that decision.

If I were speaking of an ordinary tribunal I should be greatly tempted to indulge in denunciation about this ukase of the Supreme Court. There is many a judge in the world who has been questioned by the bar in a very serious way for trying to expand his jurisdiction and decide questions that were not before the court. If there is any one duty above another that a judge owes to the country and to the law, it is that he shall confine himself to the decision of the issues presented in the causes brought before him. There was no issue presented here as to a tax upon a Senator's salary, yet that tax is held to be unconstitutional. And so you may go through the different sections of this act. I use the one I refer to only for illustration. There is tax after tax now standing upon the statute book wholly unaffected by the decision of the Supreme Court, but forbidden to be collected by that court because it is associated, in a separate section of the statute, with a tax that is held to be unconstitutional.

Mr. President, I have presented the main propositions I wish to state without going over the whole of these eleven sections of the Wilson law, to show that other important features are not in the least affected by the judgments of the Supreme Court. I will not unnecessarily take up the time of the Senate. Why do we refuse now to demand of the Secretary of the Treasury that he shall collect these taxes, so far as they are not affected by the decision of the Supreme Court in the particular case? I do not mean in so far as they are not affected by that syllabus, for that is a stretch of authority that undertakes to blot out eleven sections of the law, when they were making a decision upon a single clause of a single section, the balance of the sections containing matter wholly foreign to the questions that were decided by the Supreme Court on the rehearing.

Is it not, then, our duty to pass this amendment, and to require the Secretary of the Treasury to "proceed to collect these taxes?" If he regards that decision of the Supreme Court as rendering the whole of these sections unconstitutional, and that Congress is imposing upon him a duty which we have no right to impose—that is to say, that you are making an unconstitutional demand upon him—we should turn to the Attorney-General and say: "If the Secretary of the Treasury refuses or omits to collect these taxes, you must mandamus him before a circuit court of the United States and compel him to do it."

This amendment permits the taxpayer, who has rights because he is a taxpayer under the enactment we are now considering, in the name and by the authority of the United States, to institute a proceeding in any circuit court of the United States, and he shall be exempt from costs in doing so; and there is a further provision that the court shall give judgment upon that petition; and if judgment is against the petitioner, he shall have the right of appeal, and the cause shall go upon the Supreme Court docket, and it shall be advanced and decided without undue delay—"with convenient speed" is the language of the amendment.

Now, Mr. President, I am not speaking upon a question foreign to this bill. I am merely asking that the Senate of the United States shall proceed to execute a law that was put upon the statute book after due consideration, and after its reconsideration on the passage of the Dingley bill it was not repealed, but was expressly exempted out of the repealing clauses of that statute, and is not in conflict with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Having stated my reason for insisting on this amendment, I leave the subject to the judgment of the Senate, but I call for the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the amendment.

It is being demonstrated under the requirements of a war with one of the oldest monarchies of the world that the opinion of a single judge against an indispensable sovereign power of this Republic has crippled the resources of the country to be derived through taxations, until the Government is forced into the market as a borrower to protect and defend the flag of the country. That opinion of a single judge, after being expressed for and against this sovereign power on two occasions within a month, finally settled down in hostility to the decisions of the same court pronounced by the greatest jurists the world has produced, that have stood for a century.

The result, couched in the edict of an obiter dictum, is a terrible trial to the patience of the country. The people are looking to Congress to rectify this departure from the settled law, and to the Supreme Court to reconsider this obstruction to public justice. Let us take up the task, Mr. President, and do our whole duty to the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama on this amendment asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BACON. I ask that the amendment be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. The amendment has been read two or three times in the hearing of the Senate. It is a very long one.

Mr. BACON. I do not care about its appearing in the RECORD again, but I desire to have it read for information.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not know but that the Senator might have been present one of the several times when it was read.

Mr. BACON. I was not present.

The Secretary proceeded to read Mr. MORGAN's amendment.

Mr. BACON. As I have had a copy of the printed amendment handed me, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. MONEY. I ask that the amendment be read. I have not a copy of it, and I have not heard it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, before the last section in the bill, the following additional sections:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury is required to proceed with the assessment and collection of taxes imposed by sections 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, and 37 of the "Act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 28, 1894.

SEC. —. That if the Secretary of the Treasury omits or refuses to proceed with the assessment and collection of any of the taxes imposed by any of the sections of said act of 1894, that are hereinbefore mentioned by their numbers, it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to institute proceedings in a circuit court of the United States against the Secretary of the Treasury to compel him to perform the duties, in that behalf, that are imposed upon him by this act. And if the Attorney-General shall omit or refuse to institute such proceeding on the application, in writing, of any person who is liable to pay any tax imposed by this act, such person is authorized to institute such proceedings in any circuit court of the United States, in the name of the United States of America, to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to execute the mandates of this act; and an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States may be taken by the unsuccessful party in such proceeding, which shall be advanced upon the docket of said court and heard with all convenient speed. No costs shall be taxed against the petitioner in any such proceeding, and no such proceeding shall abate in consequence of the death or resignation of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall be revived, on motion, against his successor in office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. He is not present. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. I would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], who is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], is absent, and it has been suggested that we transfer our pairs, so that the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] will stand paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. He not being present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. CULLOM. I heard the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] announce another pair, so that I shall observe my general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware.

Mr. MONEY. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SULLIVAN] is paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MALLORY. My pair having been transferred, as announced by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Allen,	Daniel,	Martin,	Rawlins,
Bacon,	Faulkner,	Mills,	Roach,
Bate,	Harris,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Berry,	Heitfeld,	Money,	Teller,
Butler,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,	Tillman,
Cannon,	Lindsay,	Murphy,	Turley,
Chilton,	McLaurin,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Clay,	Mallory,	Pettigrew,	White,
Cockrell,	Mantlo,	Pettus,

NAYS—38.

Aldrich,	Foraker,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Allison,	Frye,	McBride,	Spooner,
Barrows,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Thurston,
Caffery,	Gear,	Morrill,	Warren,
Carter,	Gorman,	Perkins,	Wellington,
Clark,	Hale,	Platt, Conn.	Wetmore,
Davis,	Hanna,	Platt, N. Y.	Wilson,
Deboe,	Hansbrough,	Pritchard,	Wolcott,
Elkins,	Hawley,	Quay,
Fairbanks,	Hoar,	Sewell,

NOT VOTING—16.

Baker,	Jones, Nev.	Mason,	Smith,
Chandler,	Kennedy,	Nelson,	Sullivan,
Cullom,	Kyle,	Penrose,	Turner,
Gray,	McEnery,	Proctor,	Vest,

So Mr. MORGAN's amendment was rejected.

Mr. TURLEY. If no amendment is now pending, I offer one at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The amendment is in order. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee will be read.

Mr. TURLEY. I will state that the amendment is printed. The part on the third page is left out, as it has been already incorporated in the bill. The amendment as I now offer it comprises merely the first and second pages of the print which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After line 25, page 60, insert:

That every person, firm, company, or corporation owning or possessing or having the care or management of any railroad, sleeping car, canal, steamboat, ship, barge, canal boat, or other vessel engaged or employed in the business of transporting passengers or freight for hire, or in transporting the mails of the United States from one State or Territory of the United States to any other State or Territory, or to or from any State or Territory of the United States and the District of Columbia, and every person, firm, company, or corporation carrying on or doing an express business from one State or Territory of the United States to any other State or Territory of the United States, or to or from any State or Territory and the District of Columbia, shall be subject to and pay a special annual excise tax equivalent to one-fourth of 1 per cent of the gross receipts derived by said person, firm, company, or corporation from passengers, freight, mails, or express matter so carried from one State or Territory of the United States to any other State or Territory of the United States, or to or from any State or Territory and the District of Columbia; and such tax shall be rated for the transportation of persons, freight, mails, or express matter from a port or place within the United States through a foreign territory to a port or place within the United States and not within the same State or Territory, and shall be assessed upon and collected from persons, firms, companies, or corporations within the United States receiving hire or pay for such transportation of persons, freights, mails, or express matter.

That from every person, firm, company, or corporation owning or possessing or having the care or management of any telegraphic or telephone line by which telegraphic or telephone dispatches or messages are received or transmitted shall be subject to and pay a special annual excise tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent on the gross amount of all receipts of such person, firm, company, or corporation for the transmission of dispatches and messages from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia.

Mr. TURLEY. Mr. President, the object of the amendment is to place the excise tax on revenues derived from interstate commerce. The course of the discussion here has developed, what is well known to us, of course, that this is a source of revenue which is exclusively within the reach of the General Government and which the States can not reach. It is a kind of taxation that the General Government alone can exercise. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I desire to announce the same arrangement of transfers of pairs has been made as I before stated. I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], so that the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] and myself can vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MALLORY. I vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were here, he would vote as I will vote. I therefore take the liberty of voting. I vote "nay."

Mr. MONEY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SULLIVAN] is paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Allen,	Faulkner,	Martin,	Rosch,
Bacon,	Gorman,	Miller,	Stewart,
Bate,	Harris,	Money,	Teller,
Berry,	Heitfeld,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Butler,	Jonas, Ark.	Murphy,	Turley,
Cannon,	Jonas, Nev.	Pasco,	Turpie,
Chilton,	McLaurin,	Pettigrow,	White.
Clay,	Mallory,	Pettus,
Daniel,	Mantie,	Rawlins,

NAYS—38.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Allison,	Foraker,	McBride,	Spooner,
Burrows,	Frye,	McMillan,	Thurston,
Caffery,	Gallinger,	Morrill,	Warren,
Carter,	Gear,	Perkins,	Wellington,
Clark,	Hanna,	Platt, Conn.	Westmore,
Cullom,	Hansbrough,	Platt, N. Y.	Wilson,
Davis,	Hawley,	Pritchard,	Wolcott.
Deboe,	Hoar,	Quay,
Elkins,	Lindsay,	Sewell,

NOT VOTING—17.

Baker,	Kennedy,	Nelson,	Turner,
Chandler,	Kyle,	Penrose,	Vest.
Cockrell,	McEnery,	Proctor,
Gray,	Mason,	Smith,
Hale,	Mitchell,	Sullivan,

So Mr. TURLEY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. COCKRELL subsequently said: Mr. President, when the vote was taken on the previous amendment, known as the Turley amendment, I was in the room of the Committee on Appropriations engaged in considering the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. I aimed to get into the Senate Chamber before the vote was announced, but when I arrived here the vote had already been announced. The senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] doubtless supposed I had voted, and so there was no announcement made that I was paired, and it does not appear that I was either paired or voted. I wish to say that if I had been present I should have voted "yea," though it would have made no difference in the result.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment of which I gave notice on Thursday last, though I have slightly modified it in the particulars which I will state after it has been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from California will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 61, at the end of line 14, it is proposed to insert:

Every person, firm, company, or corporation owning or possessing or having the care or management of sleeping cars operated upon any railroad shall pay an annual excise tax equivalent to one-quarter of 1 per cent on the gross amount of all receipts of said person, firm, company, or corporation derived from such ownership, possession, care, management, or operation of such sleeping cars, and a true and accurate return of the amount of gross receipts as aforesaid shall be made and rendered monthly by each of said persons, firms, companies, or corporations to the collector of the district in which any such person, firm, company, or corporation may be located or transact such business; such return shall be verified under oath by the person making the same, or, in the case of corporations, by the president or chief officer thereof. Any person or officer failing or refusing to make return as aforesaid, or who shall make a false or fraudulent return, shall be liable in a penalty of not less than $1,000 and not exceeding $10,000 for each failure or refusal to make return as aforesaid or for each and every false or fraudulent return.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the only change made in the amendment as printed is the insertion after the word "corporation," in line 6 of such proposed amendment, of the words "derived from such ownership, possession, care, management, or operation of such sleeping cars."

This amendment was inserted because it was represented, and I have no doubt correctly, that there were railroads having their own sleeping cars, and in that event the phraseology would tax the entire receipts of such railroads regardless of the sleeping-car business. There is no desire to injure those companies in any respect, and so this amendment has been offered as now suggested.

I suppose Senators who have thought it proper to vote for a reasonable tax upon the refining of oil and sugar will have no difficulty in voting for a most reasonable tax upon this business.

The sleeping-car business of the United States is not a charitable business. It is not conducted upon those broad philanthropic lines which have heretofore appealed to so many Senators in this Chamber, and which have justified them in so far as their own consciences are concerned in voting against placing a particle of taxation upon those agencies. The sleeping-car business of the United States is a business with which the traveling public is quite familiar, and that traveling public is thoroughly well satisfied that the sleeping-car business can stand a little tax.

While it might not be well to impose it upon them in time of peace, while it might not be proper as a contribution to our revenues in the most elaborate way when we have no war, yet when the country is threatened, it is thought, perhaps, they may, without serious injury to themselves, pay a reasonable amount of taxes; nor is it thought that this imposition will interfere with the consumer, whose unhappy state and whose danger has aroused the feeling care and the enthusiastic sentiments of gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber, for be it remembered that all these votes, Mr. President—and there are many of them which have been cast here—against placing any of the burdens of taxation upon the great interests of the United States are so cast because those who have cast those votes have felt for the consumer. The institutions themselves are not particularly thought of, but it is because of the consumer that we have refused to assess any of these taxes upon these very large institutions with two exceptions.

Mr. President, the consumer will not have to pay this tax. I do not think it likely that it will be so extensive that even those palace-car companies operating lines across the continent will ask much more than their present rates. They are now extravagantly high; notoriously so. Railroads sometimes engage in mutual competition with each other; we have cut rates occasionally in railroad travel; and the railroads suffer greatly for the time being and often lose money; but the palace-car companies go on in the same old way, levying their large tolls all the time; and with the exception of the elaborate outlay which they make in the way of compensation to their porters, it is not thought that any extravagant charges have been imposed upon them. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, if it is possible for us for a moment to do that which is absolutely just and right, let us put on this tax. The only criticism that can be made upon my amendment is that the tax is not large enough, that it ought to be greater; but I know there are Senators here who feel that a quarter of 1 per cent is the limit, and who think that anything higher would be oppressive. In deference to that sentiment, I have made the suggestion contained in this amendment.

I do not think it likely that these cars will suspend operations if we impose this tax; and while we think so much about the consumer, when we are reflecting upon the passage of this amendment let us ask ourselves whether all we have done in this bill is in the interest of the consumer.

I have heretofore referred, and I will not repeat it, to the onerousness of the taxation that is almost direct—if not technically so, then actually—upon a large portion of the toilers of the United States. We have not shed any tears for the consumer when we have been levying taxes upon tobacco and beer. We have wept not; on the contrary, we have been disposed to smile. [Laughter.] But in this particular instance, when the palace-car companies of the United States are to be asked to pay something, we are told: "Well, it would be a good thing if we could make these great institutions pay something, but we can not; they will lay it upon some one else, and therefore while we feel these are the most oppressive monopolies in the world, and while we would like to get at them and want to get at them, we can not get at them, and we refuse to levy a tax upon them because it will hurt some one else."

There may be people—of course outside—who will doubt the sincerity of these statements, but those of us who are here know that they are sincere, and, Mr. President, when I see these large institutions escaping taxation by the action of the majority here. I do not wonder at what uncharitable people abroad say about anti-election promises. For myself, Mr. President, I have been anxious to defend Senators and parties from that charge, and I have been defending them from that charge, but I confess that my ability to defend them is greatly lessened—and I am sorry for it—by their peculiar attitude upon this floor. I wish they would aid me in making the defense.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to ask the Senator from California a question. I ask him if he does not believe that instead of taxing the sleeping-car companies we would get more money by taxing the gross receipts of the porters on the sleeping cars? [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, in the section of country from which I come the sleeping-car business is done by the railroad companies, and I see no very good reason why this portion of their business should be taxed and the other portions of their business should not be taxed. The New York and New Haven road, on the line of which I live, runs and maintains its own sleeping cars. This bill proposes, or did propose originally, to tax that company on all of its gross receipts for all purposes on account of the fact that they are presumed to run sleeping cars in competition with some other company who might run them if they did not. I understand the Senator from California has arranged his amendment so that the companies will only pay on that portion of their gross receipts.

Can the Senator tell me any reason in morals or ethics or business why that portion of the receipts of that company should be taxed and the other portion not taxed? If the Senator has some feeling against any particular company, or if he thinks that their charges are too high and he thinks Congress has the power to regulate the charges of sleeping-car companies, would it not be better, more direct, more explicit, and give more relief to the suffering people of California and elsewhere if we should undertake to regulate those charges and make them reasonable, if they are now unreasonable, instead of trying to tax every railroad company in the United States which is presumed to put sleeping cars upon its lines and not attempt to tax any other thing?

Mr. PASCO. I am entirely in sympathy with the Senator from California, but I do not think he has carried his amendment nearly far enough. These companies get large revenues from their day service as well as from their night service, and I see no reason why the amendment should be limited to sleeping cars. I ask the Senator if there is any objection to extending it so as to include also palace cars? That can be done with a very slight amendment to the amendment, and I suggest to him that proper words be inserted so as to cover the palace cars as well as the sleeping cars. If he will accept that amendment, I shall be very glad, and in my judgment it will strengthen his amendment.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I am very much constrained myself to vote for this amendment. In a measure I agree with the honorable Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] that this tax, if imposed, would be a tax upon those who can afford to pay it. I can not, however, agree with the apparent, in tone at least, doxology of the Senator from California in his very mild and even tender criticism in regard to the votes that the majority gave here yesterday respecting the tax on what he is pleased to call the great patriot corporations of the country, namely, the oil trust, the sugar trust, or whatever it may be.

I desire to say, Mr. President, that I voted for the amendment to which he refers. I am willing to take such criticism as may be proper, but I am not willing to place, for illustration, one-fourth per cent tax upon sugar, and give those gentlemen who control that article absolutely, however unjust it may be, the right and power to raise the price of sugar 1 cent to the consumer, nearly three times the amount they themselves are taxed, and the same on oil. The Senator from California knows that when he was a boy the consumer of oil paid 50 cents a gallon for it, and to-day it is only 8 cents at retail, and less than 4 cents at wholesale; and now they control the output of it absolutely and can raise the price, and you would only tax the consumer. No one knows better than the talented Senator from California, with his large experience upon the Finance Committee, that that is true; and yet he rises here and makes some farewell criticism of Senators who do not seem to agree with him upon that subject.

I am willing to go and try to reach those who can afford to pay the taxation, but I am not willing to tax what I believe would be taxing the consumer four times as much as the Government would receive if the law imposed that tax.

Mr. WHITE. I appreciate the sincerity of the motive of my friend from Washington [Mr. WILSON], but I think perhaps he has been overconfident in the statements of some of his colleagues. I think the amendment as it is now drawn will cover the subject quite fully.

So far as the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] go, I will say to that Senator that I think we ought to go much further than we have gone; but the trouble is that we never find that Senator in our company when we make any movement at all in the direction of taxation on those who can afford to pay. The Senator from Rhode Island makes no movement in that direction, and then, when he has voted down amendments covering these great interests, he generally criticizes us because we do not include them.

I have no feeling against these corporations except that they ought to pay something. The difference between the Senator from Rhode Island and myself is that he thinks they ought to pay nothing. There is the essential feature of this matter. The Democratic party, if this is to be a party issue, can afford to stand upon its votes cast here; but it is not a party issue, and ought not to be made so in any way whatever.

Here is a proposition that all the political parties had in their platforms, and they have all asserted that they agree upon it. We all concur in saying that trusts ought to be controlled in some way, and it appears to me, notwithstanding the strong feeling on this matter, that even the Senator from Rhode Island ought to vote for this amendment. Certainly it was not introduced by me with the idea of making any special criticism upon any interest or any party or any individual. I introduced it because I thought it was absolutely just. I am satisfied it does not go far enough; but, so far as it goes, it has met the approval of the majority of Senators in this Chamber.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not intend to go into any argument as to the reasons why I am opposed to the tax on the gross receipts either of corporations or of individuals. I have very strong reasons which convince me that that kind of taxation is not necessary, is not just, is not equitable, is not proper, and should not be adopted by the Congress of the United States. In this bill, as the Senator perfectly well knows, those of us sitting on this side of the Chamber are in favor of taxing material things and the sale of material things.

We are putting a stamp tax upon the manufacture and sale of beer, upon the manufacture and sale of tobacco, upon certain instruments, certain transactions, and certain sales of manufactures and proprietary medicines; and we have got nothing else in this bill except taxes of that kind, which, as the Senator from Colorado said the other day, enforce themselves. We are opposed to putting anything else into this bill, especially putting into it doubtful provisions, which may or may not hereafter be sustained by the Supreme Court.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire simply to say a word in response to a statement made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] when he was formerly upon the floor, to the effect that the sleeping-car business is part of the railroad business. I do not think that can be sustained either as a legal or as a practical proposition.

The sleeping-car business is a distinct and separate business, so recognized by the courts, and is practically so in its operations. It is true that some railroad companies do their own sleeping-car business, but it is equally true that some railroad companies do their own express business. That does not make the sleeping-car business any more a legitimate part of the ordinary railroad business than does it make the express business a part of the railroad business; and the sleeping-car business is as distinct in its character, and in the practical operation of it, from the ordinary railroad business as is the express business.

We know the fact, Mr. President, that as to the very large preponderance of this business, it is done by companies which have no connection with the railroad companies whatever, except that they have contracts with the railroad companies. I know the fact that not only the sleeping-car business is conducted by separate companies, but that there is a portion of it that is conducted by the sleeping-car companies in copartnership with the railroad companies. I know the fact that there are many railroad companies which have contracts with the sleeping-car companies by which the ownership of the cars is in the railroad company or in the other. That does not control the question as to whether it is a railroad business or a sleeping-car business.

There is a regular contract between them by which the operation of the sleeping-car business upon a railroad is one in which losses and profits are divided. On the other hand, there are a great many contracts in which the railroad company not only allows to the sleeping-car company all the revenue derived from the sale of accommodations upon those cars, but the railroad companies pay as high as 3 cents a mile for every mile traveled over that road by any of the cars of the company. Then, as stated by the Senator, there are other cases in which the business is done altogether by the railroad company, but when the railroad company does it, it is not doing it as part of its own business.

But, Mr. President, the particular suggestion which I rose to make was this, and I think it may possibly appeal even to the Senator from Rhode Island. When the question came to be taken upon the amendment which proposed to tax the gross receipts of railroad corporations, it was urged in opposition to that proposed tax that the railroads, independently of that, would pay a very large stamp tax, and that that was a sufficient burden upon them; but we are here presented with the fact that if the amendment proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] is not adopted this very large business in this country, amounting to very many millions of dollars, will practically go without paying any part of this tax whatever, or without sharing with the balance of the business of the country in the burdens of this war.

What have they to do under this bill? What tax, as the bill now stands, will they be called upon to pay? They do not give bills of lading; they do not issue receipts; and if there is a single element in this bill which will reach sleeping-car companies, with their immense revenues and with their immense profits, I should like the Senator from Rhode Island to point it out. I think, Mr. President, that that suggestion is sufficient to control the action of the Senate regardless of party.

Mr. CULLOM. Let me ask the Senator, what difference does it make? Here is a merchant, say, doing a large business, probably as large a business as any car-building company. He pays the stamp tax in all of the transactions and contracts which he makes, and the Pullman Car Company or any other car company does the same thing.

Mr. BACON. But their business is not of such a character that they have any stamp tax to pay.

Mr. CULLOM. Why not? They are making contracts; they are issuing all kinds of orders, and making payments just as any other business men are doing; they are paying just as much taxes as other business men ordinarily pay, and the amount they pay depends upon the amount of business they do. That is one of the beauties of the stamp tax. When we have a stamp tax a man who issues checks or who makes contracts in carrying on his business is continually paying a tax because he is doing that business. The same rule applies to the manufacturer of sleeping cars, or what not, which applies to any other business.

Mr. BACON. We are not speaking of the manufacturer of cars. I have no doubt the very large corporation engaged in this business which has its home in the State of the Senator, and which does probably nine-tenths of all the sleeping-car business in this country, would think it a very beautiful arrangement if we should allow the tax to remain as it is here.

But the point to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate is that in the ordinary business of the sleeping-car companies—which is in selling berths and chairs and other accommodations similar to the hotel business—for instance, on a sleeping-car route there is no provision in this bill which would touch any part of that business. If there is, I ask the Senator to tell me what it is?

Mr. President, this business amounts, as I say, to very many millions of dollars a year, and it is one of the luxuries for which the public are content to pay very high prices. I say they are content to do it, but that is the more reason why they should pay a legitimate part of this immense war tax which is to be levied and collected.

I challenge the Senator to show in what particular the special company which I have in mind, which has its home in his State, upon the immense millions which it collects from the traveling public, will pay one single cent of stamp duty under this bill; what particular obligations issued by them, either in distributing their accommodations or in receiving money for them, they will have to put any stamps upon?

Mr. CULLOM. I admit that a conductor upon a sleeping car running upon a railroad does not take a receipt and put a stamp on the receipt which he would issue, if he had to issue one to a passenger upon the train, but there are various contracts made between the sleeping-car companies and the railroad companies which carry the car, and in that way they will be paying the ordinary stamp tax.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator from Illinois know something about those contracts? I happen to know something about them. The sleeping-car company will make one contract with the railroad company for ten or fifteen years, and that is to have one little stamp put on it every ten or fifteen years. It is a contract with one great system, which will control several thousand miles of railroad; and the contracts which the sleeping-car companies will make in the course of the year can be numbered on the fingers of two hands.

I speak with some degree of knowledge about the matter, and I have, of course, no desire to oppress these companies or that anything shall be done to oppress them, but I do think they ought to pay a part of the legitimate portion of the tax which is being levied upon the business of this country; and I do think that while it is true that the railroad companies, even in the absence of the gross-receipts tax which was proposed, will still pay a very large tax, it is equally true, that in the absence of the proposed tax, under this proposed amendment the sleeping-car companies upon their main business will not pay a dollar—I speak generally when I say dollar—certainly they will pay very little.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I think this is a very proper tax. It is not a tax upon commerce at all in the popular sense of commerce. It is a tax upon a luxury, and the same principle applies here which applies to the tax on beer, the tax on tobacco, and the tax on distilled spirits.

I shall vote for this tax with great pleasure. I hope it may not be shifted by these companies upon those who enjoy the benefits of paying two or three prices for the privilege of sleeping on a sleeping car. But if it be so, still the tax will be shifted by the company upon those who voluntarily pay the price for the luxury.

I thought it was very proper to tax the sugar trust and the coal-oil trust. One of those is a practical monopoly, because it has succeeded in controlling the transportation of coal oil into every portion of the United States. The other is a monopoly made so by a State statute and assisted by an act of Congress.

I was very sorry that my friend, when he introduced an amendment to tax the sugar trust, did not connect with it a proposition to take from the sugar trust the statutory advantage of the differential tax. I was sorry, also, that my friend did not include a tax on the white-pine trust; and I was sorry, also, that he did not take away some part of the profit that the consumer has to pay to the fruit raisers on the Pacific coast and in the State of Florida; and I was especially sorry, as he is such a friend of the consumer, that he did not propose to extend his tax to the borax trust, which has its habitation, I believe, on the far side of the Rocky Mountains. I am not going to offer to amend. As long as my friend confines his taxes to trusts and monopolies, I am with him; and if he chooses to put the borax trust or the borax monopoly and the fruit trust and the white-pine trust in the category of those who shall be taxed, I shall take great pleasure in voting for the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, in the community in which I live, provincial though it may be of course, the railroad company which serves the people builds its own sleeping cars and its own chair cars, and it runs them and collects pay for them as a part of the railroad business. It is just as much a part of the railroad business as the transportation of passengers in other cars or the transportation of freight.

Now, what I suggest is, that there can be no good reason, in my judgment, why this part of its business should be selected to pay a tax upon gross receipts.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Rhode Island will allow me, suppose that an outside company should furnish the railroad company with cars, would that make any difference in the principle?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think not. The selection of this business for taxation must be on account of one or two things, it seems to me—either, in the opinion of Senators who vote for it, that it is an illegitimate or improper business, or that it is unduly profitable; that the people who are engaged in it are making too much money.

I would suggest to the Senator from California that if he desires to tax sleeping-car tickets by a stamp tax, then he would offer an amendment which would be in consonance with the other provisions of this bill, and it seems to me it would be very much more just and more defensible than the picking out of one part of the business of a railroad company and making it pay on the gross receipts of that and not taxing the remaining portion of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have, while the discussion has been going on, drafted an amendment which I think will cover the precise point suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island. It may not be a proper amendment; it was hurriedly written, but I will read it. I will say that if the proposition now before the Senate is voted down, unless some other Senator offers an amendment, I will offer mine. It reads as follows:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1898, a stamp tax of one-fourth of 1 cent shall be levied and collected on every seat sold in a palace car and on every berth sold in a sleeping car, the stamp to be affixed to the receipt given for each seat or berth so sold.

Mr. WILSON. We have not been able to hear the Senator's amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will read it again:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1898, a stamp tax of one-fourth of 1 cent shall be levied and collected on every seat sold in a palace car and on every berth sold in a sleeping car, the stamp to be affixed to the receipt given for each seat or berth so sold.

Mr. BACON. I would ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he recollects the fact that in imposing a stamp tax upon medicine you put it at a quarter of 1 cent on a package worth 5 cents? Now, one-quarter—

Mr. DANIEL (to Mr. GALLINGER). Make it a cent.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator that we make it a half cent.

Mr. BACON. A cent is not too much.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. TILLMAN. Make it 5 cents.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no! I will modify my amendment when I offer it so as to make it 1 cent instead of one-quarter of a cent. I give notice of the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, when this bill was reported from the committee there was a provision that there should be a stamp tax put on messages sent by telegraph. The provision as it came from the committee would have required the sender of a message in every instance to attach the stamp to the message. I moved that those words be stricken out, so that it should be a tax upon the telegraph company, and not a tax on the patrons of the telegraph company.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think there is no objection to that.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In this bill from beginning to end the effort seems to have been to levy taxes upon those who patronize these institutions and to allow the men who own them, the men who have the capital in them, the business engaged in them, to go scot-free and pay no taxes whatever. This is another measure of the same kind, which proposes to make the passengers on sleeping cars, in addition to the onerous burden they bear now, pay this stamp tax, instead of making the companies pay it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to observe that I think the point made by the Senator from Arkansas is not very well taken. The seats are never sold, so far as I know, for less than 25 cents, and from that up to two or three or ten or twenty dollars, according to the distance traveled. I never purchased one certainly for less than 25 cents, however short the distance was. It seems to me if the companies are required to put on a 1-cent stamp they will not charge 26 cents, but that the company will actually pay the 1 cent. I offer this as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from California, to go in on page 53, after line 16.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Does he propose that the company shall affix the stamp?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly. The company shall affix it when the receipt is given to the passenger.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. WHITE. I ask that the amendment to the amendment may be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will again be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1898, a stamp tax of 1 cent shall be levied and collected on every seat sold in a palace car and on every berth sold in a sleeping car, the stamp to be affixed to the receipt given for each seat or berth so sold.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no provision that the company shall do it.

Mr. WHITE. I should much prefer to have the amendment offered by me voted upon as it stands. However, that is a mere matter of courtesy.

I wish to make a remark. I do not think the stamp provision will be effective at all. It merely holds out the "word of promise to our ear and breaks it to our hope." I wish to say that I do not design to interfere with the railroad referred to by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] or any other special railroad; but if it is true, as stated by the Senator from Georgia, that this is a railroad business, and the Senator from Rhode Island takes that position, then of course as the bill now stands there is a manifest discrimination so far as the sleeping-car monopoly is concerned.

I do not know exactly why my friend the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] has referred to the borax business and the fruit industry to-day. Neither of them is involved in this bill nor would action as to them be harmonious in this connection. I have not attempted in this brief amendment to reach all the monopolies of the United States. I well understood that I could not do that, for I could not get votes enough to come anywhere near passing the bill, and I am taking them up as nearly as I can seriatim. I do not know how much good fortune I may have as I go along, but I shall be very glad to vote for the taxing of any monopoly that my friend the Senator from Kentucky may refer to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would suggest to the Senator from California that he accept the amendment, modified so that there can be no question that the company will put on the stamp.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In addition to there being no provision that the company shall pay the tax, this is practically no tax at all. It is proposed to put a tax of 1 cent on a 25-cent ticket. You buy a sleeping-car ticket to California, and whatever it may cost, 1 cent goes on it, which will be practically no tax. As a rule the tickets cost not less than $2 or $3. This small tax amounts to nothing—1 cent on $5.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will stop a moment and consider the arithmetical side of this question he will find that it is putting on a larger tax than that proposed by the Senator from California. One cent a ticket is equivalent, according to my idea, to a much larger sum. One cent is a quarter of 1 per cent on how much, I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator started out to give me arithmetical information.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is one-quarter of 1 per cent on $4. Does the Senator think that the average cost of a sleeping-car ticket in the United States is $4? It certainly is not. This is putting a higher tax upon these companies than the quarter of 1 per cent on their gross receipts.

Mr. WHITE. I do not agree with the Senator from Rhode Island that this is putting on a larger tax. I suppose he supports the amendment with that view, and I naturally suppose the support it will receive from Senators who have been voting against a tax on gross receipts will be largely based upon the proposition that it will take more from the sleeping-car companies than the amendment which I propose.

Mr. President, I do not think that the person who buys a ticket will ever escape paying anything that involves putting a stamp upon the ticket. I think there is no question about that. As to the average cost of these tickets I have made no inquiry. Of course for a long distance, such a distance as from Chicago to California, the charge is $15.50 for a half section, $31 for a whole, and $59 for a drawing-room. Those, of course, are not the most prominent or usual cases where the distances are shorter, but I think the $5 charge will be found exceedingly frequent throughout the country generally. The reason why a stamp tax is preferred by these large institutions is because they will not have to pay it.

Now, as I said before, everyone knows that Pullman charges are up to the limit, and a great many people prefer to go through the trials of a night in an ordinary seat than to pay the very excessive charge.

Mr. CULLOM rose.

Mr. WHITE. But I will say to the Senator from Illinois, representing a State wherein one of the largest of these institutions is located, they might possibly get even on the public by reducing the bills of fare and taking off chicken à la Marengo and Boston baked beans.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion? The Senator seems to think that the public will have to pay the cost of the stamp, if the stamp provision is adopted instead of making the company pay so much per cent on the gross earnings. My judgment, from observation, is that it will be exactly the contrary. For instance, take a bank. I once had a little experience with a bank, and came very near having trouble about not having a stamp on every check.

The truth was that the bank took the checks without the stamps and put the stamps on, paid them itself; and that will be the case if this stamp is provided for to be put upon tickets. The railroad company or the sleeping-car company will provide the ticket with the stamp and the public will not pay a cent more for it, in my judgment, while if you make the company pay upon the gross earnings, when probably the company is not making a cent more than enough to pay expenses, you will find that the charge will be paid by the public instead of by the company.

Mr. WHITE. I do not know what became of the bank with which the Senator from Illinois dealt.

Mr. CULLOM. It is running yet.

Mr. WHITE. If it did business on that basis, it must have gone into solvency or changed management. If the Senator from Illinois imagines that when we send a telegram we will not be compelled to pay a tax upon it, he is mistaken. He says it is a matter of judgment. But in the case of the sleeping-car companies, above all others, it is certain we will have to pay the tax. They are in a position to make us do it. There is no competition usually with reference to them, and we have to deal with them and are in a position where we can not very well avoid it, and where they have the legal right to do it, they will do it.

The amendment proposed by me will compel them to pay the money into the Treasury of the United States, and it seems to me it is the only direct, certain, and proper method of getting at the subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have amended my proposed amendment to the amendment and ask that it may be read. I think the Senator from California will be satisfied that as I have modified it the company will have to pay the stamp tax.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. As a substitute for the amendment of Mr. WHITE it is proposed to insert, after line 14, on page 61:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1898, a stamp tax of 1 cent shall be levied and collected on every seat sold in a palace or parlor car and on every berth sold in a sleeping car, the stamp to be affixed to the ticket and paid by the company issuing the same.

Mr. ELKINS. That is more comprehensive than the Senator started out with. That would include every seat, I take it, for which a ticket is sold.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; only in a parlor or sleeping car.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I consider the stamp-tax amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire as a very good one, and I will support it. I have admired the playful humor of my friend the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] in attributing to those who did not vote for a tax upon the gross receipts of corporations the philanthropic idea of not destroying their scanty store; but the Senator does not suppose that that playful mood of his will be taken by anybody as serious. It is not—I know in my own case it is not—because I do not desire to tax corporations that I voted against the tax on gross receipts of corporations. A number of us have expressed our views on that point, and those views were that we had no right under the decision of the court to tax gross receipts of corporations any more than to tax the net income of corporations.

Besides that, some of us had the folly, I suppose, of thinking, particularly after the explanation of those in charge of the bill, that this was a tax upon a franchise granted by the State. It was distinctly averred to be a tax upon the occupation of being a corporation, and some of us, perhaps in our ignorance, thought that that subject-matter of taxation lay solely within the purview of the State power.

Now, I shall vote cheerfully for a tax upon these sleeping-car companies. I believe it is the universal consensus of opinion that the charges of the sleeping-car companies, if not extortionate, are at least excessive, and while some may urge or argue that it is a luxury to travel upon them, it is more frequently than otherwise a necessity, especially in the case of persons undertaking long journeys.

I do not want to evoke the specter of the dead past and refer to the attitude of my friend upon the matter of borax, but I submit to him that he ought not to attribute to us who are earnest, perhaps stupidly so, in the matter of opposition to the tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent upon the gross receipts of railroads any sort of desire to benefit these overgrown corporations.

Mr. WHITE. The borax question to which my friend refers is a matter of his own imagination. I can not understand exactly what he means by his remarks, for I have certainly no knowledge of the existence of facts upon which he can base anything of the kind. But since the Senator from Louisiana has actually agreed that he will vote for a tax upon a monopoly, I will accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, gladly accompanying my friend the Senator from Louisiana. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from California as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I offer an amendment to come in as an additional section.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. — That on and after the 30th day of June, 1898, and until the 30th day of June, 1900, in lieu of the duties now imposed by law on the dutiable articles imported from foreign countries, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on such dutiable articles 75 per cent of the several duties and rates of duty now imposed by law upon said articles severally, it being the intent of this section to reduce existing duties on said articles 25 per cent of such duties.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I fully recognize the fact that we are engaged in a foreign war. I fully appreciate the responsibilities which that changed condition imposes upon Congress. In common with every other member of Congress in both of its branches I know that the Government must have more money to meet the excessive expenditures required by a vigorous prosecution of the war.

Mr. President, there are two ways to obtain revenue, one by reducing the rates of taxation and the other by increasing the rates of taxation. I propose that which is the least burdensome to the people of the United States, that we shall first increase the revenues of the Government by reducing the burdens of taxation, and when we shall have exhausted that expedient, then, if more revenues are required, that we shall raise them by an equitable distribution of the taxing power by increased rates of taxation by excise.

Every gentleman in my presence knows that our duties now are beyond the revenue standard. They were not laid for the purpose of raising revenue. They were laid to prevent the raising of revenue, to prohibit imports from coming into this country, in order that our domestic producers should have the protection that would follow from that prohibition.

Mr. President, in 1873, after our civil war was over, during which high duties had been imposed in order to meet the requirements of that condition, we began to reduce duties. The amendment which I have offered is in the exact language of one of the laws that followed the peace that came after the war was over, reducing duties. That duty was reduced 10 per cent, a horizontal reduction, and this is a proposed horizontal reduction of 25 per cent.

In 1873 the value of the dutiable imports coming into the United States was $579,000,000. They brought revenue to the Government amounting to $312,000,000 at 36 per cent. From 1873 to the present time we have been increasing duties to prevent the increase of revenues and to prevent the increase of trade until today, as the result of the last experiment on that subject made eleven months ago, we have received $136,000,000 for eleven months, and at the rate of customs collections this, our present tariff, will produce about $146,000,000 during the fiscal year.

If we had the same rates, 36 instead of 47 per cent, as we have to-day, let down the duties, let the goods come in, let the people get them cheaper, we would have at the same ratio about $360,000,000 as revenue from our imports. Our population has increased 80 per cent since 1873. Imports increasing in the same proportion, our taxes on articles going into consumption and all other things being equal, the same tax on the same article would bring to the Government 80 per cent more revenue, and it would bring over $1,000,000,000 to-day instead of $579,000,000. Instead of that, Mr. President, the dutiable imports by existing law coming into the United States when the fiscal year ends will be but a little over $300,000,000.

Now, suppose we make the change which I have offered in this amendment, and which would be a reduction to about 36 per cent, just about the tariff rate of 1873. Imports will come into the country and our revenues will increase in the first year more, a good deal more, than has been estimated by my friend the distinguished Senator from Iowa who has charge of this bill. He estimated that the receipts from customs would be $180,000,000 in the next year. The chairman of the committee in the other House estimated $200,000,000 under this bill. It will not be either. It will be about $160,000,000.

With the ordinary increase of population, the same rates of duty standing, the same imports and exports, the same production of agriculture, and all these things moving along in the same way, the increase of the revenue would be from about $146,000,000, which it will be this year, to about $160,000,000. Why can we not reduce the taxation, let our people consume these necessary articles cheaper, and get a hundred or a hundred and fifty million dollars more revenue in order to carry on this war?

Mr. ALLEN. What is it now?

Mr. MILLS. I do not remember what it is, but the customs collections up to the present time are $136,000,000. It will be about $146,000,000, at the ordinary daily receipts as they have been coming in, with about three hundred and ten or fifteen or twenty million dollars of dutiable imports for the year.

Mr. President, as I said, our friends all know that these rates of duty were not put on for revenue purposes. We all know that when the then chairman of the committee, now the distinguished Chief Magistrate of the nation, reported the bill, he stated that the rates were beyond the revenue standard; that the revenues would not be so great. It was done for the very purpose of preventing revenues from coming in, and it did do it. The revenues ran down enormously. Last year we piled up the rates still higher. We have exercised the legislative authority in order to prevent revenues from coming into the Treasury.

I say the very first door is open to us as patriots in this war, while we are piling on duties, taxes, and excises and taxing the same poor people that are taxed to death already. The first and best way to get larger revenue is by reducing the duties which we have placed upon these goods, and let them come into this country and pay revenues toward the support of the Government.

Mr. President, this is all I care to say on the amendment. Of course I do not expect that the amendment will be adopted, because the bill has not been gotten up as a patriotic measure. It has not been intended to distribute taxation equally. It is a partisan measure from top to bottom. Instead of making some sacrifices on the part of the beneficiaries of this protective policy in time of war, they pile up the taxes on tobacco and on other things that are taxed already, and the poor people are paying the taxes, and the poor people are going to fight the battles of the country, while the protected monopolies are going, in time of war, to hold their grapples on the necks of the people and extort from their pockets the last dollar they can.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to an article appearing in the New York Commercial of June 1 in line with the remarks of the Senator from Texas. The article is entitled, "What Dingleyism is doing." I shall read it without any extended comments:

The striking feature in foreign commerce for the current fiscal year about to end promises to be the marked decrease in the importation of manufactures into the United States. The Commercial a few days ago referred to the gratifying increase in our exports, in which manufacturing as well as other industries played so prominent a part.

The figures relating to imports are even more interesting, showing as they do not only that there has been a decrease for the ten months ended April 30, 1898, of approximately $90,000,000, but that this decrease is in no small sense due to a falling off in imports of manufactured articles, the figures for 1897 being $27,397,568, as against $15,296,697 this year—a decrease of over $12,000,000 worth of manufactured goods. It is interesting to notice where the principal falling off occurs. Taking the figures of exports of manufactured articles from the United Kingdom alone to this country we find that in the four months ending April, 1897, the import of cotton piece goods was 26,699,400 yards, while this year for the current four months it has fallen to 20,820,000 yards.

In jute manufactures the figures for the same time were 68,573,000 yards in 1897 and only 31,491,800 in 1898, showing the remarkable decrease of over 50 per cent. Linen piece goods likewise show a falling off, from 42,289,200 yards in 1897 to 85,418,500 in 1898, while imports of woolen and worsted tissues have dropped from 26,685,900 yards in the first four months of 1897 to 8,540,900 in the corresponding four months of this year.

A marked falling off is also noticed in carpets, chemicals, earthen and chinaware, haberdashery and millinery, woolen and worsted yarns, and many other articles, the only noticeable increase being in silk manufactures, from 336,532 yards to 333,915, and in linen yarns from 238,100 pounds to 556,000. Even in hardware, the astounding decrease is noticed from $44,165 to $33,749 worth of goods.

Interesting as the figures are, they are especially suggestive of the beneficial effect upon the home market and the upbuilding of our manufactures that Dingleyism is working. Fewer imports—

And this is the portion of the article to which I desire to call especial attention:

Fewer imports, it is true, may mean a falling off in revenue to that extent, but a larger home market means more work and more money of our own.

I call attention to this because it is an open and flagrant confession that imports are falling off and that revenues are dropping off correspondingly as a consequence. This journal seems to think it is a thing upon which we should congratulate ourselves, that our imports are so small, that a deficit of something like over $60,000,000 exists in our revenues at this time.

I heartily concur with the idea expressed by the Senator from Texas, that if we would reduce our rate of tariff duties we would receive a larger sum of money in the aggregate and be able to supply the present deficit without increasing taxation in any other direction.

I regard this article as possessing significance, coming from a journal like this and expressing, as it does, the astonishing fact that a deficit in the revenues is a thing upon which the country should congratulate itself, because the American manufacturers will be able to make more money for themselves.

Mr. MILLS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LINDSAY. Before the vote is taken, I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. — That on and after the 30th day of June, 1898, and until the 30th day of June, 1900, in lieu of the duties now imposed by law on the dutiable articles imported from foreign countries, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on such dutiable articles 75 per cent of the several duties and rates of duty now imposed by law upon said articles severally, it being the intent of this section to reduce existing duties on said articles 25 per cent of such duties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. While I believe that if present he would vote on the same side of this question as I would, I am not certain of it, and therefore I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to know if the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. PETTUS. I am paired with that Senator, and withhold my vote.

Mr. MANTLE (after having voted in the negative). I wish to inquire if the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the junior Senator from Virginia has not voted.

Mr. MANTLE. I have a general pair with that Senator, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. WELLINGTON (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire if the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. SEWELL (after having voted in the negative). I desire to be informed if the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. SEWELL. He was in the Chamber just now.

Mr. QUAY (after having voted in the negative). I should be glad to be informed whether the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is recorded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. QUAY. Then I am compelled to withdraw my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (after having voted in the negative). I ask if the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Then I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—25.
Allen,	Clay,	Mills,	Tillman,
Bacon,	Cockrell,	Money,	Turley,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Murphy,	Turpie,
Berry,	Harris,	Pasco,	White,
Caffery,	Jones, Ark.	Rawlins,
Cannon,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Chilton,	McLaurin,	Sullivan,
NAYS—41.
Aldrich,	Foraker,	McEnery,	Shoup,
Allison,	Frye,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	Mason,	Stewart,
Carter,	Gear,	Morrill,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hale,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Clark,	Hanna,	Perkins,	Wetmore,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Pettigrew,	Wilson,
Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Platt, Conn.	Wolcott,
Deboe,	Kyle,	Platt, N. Y.
Elkins,	Lodge,	Pritchard,
Fairbanks,	McBride,	Sewell,
NOT VOTING—23.
Baker,	Heitfeld,	Mitchell,	Smith,
Butler,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Turner,
Daniel,	Kenney,	Penrose,	Vest,
Gorman,	Mallory,	Pettus,	Warren,
Gray,	Mantle,	Proctor,	Wellington,
Hansbrough,	Martin,	Quay,

So Mr. MILLS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I desire now to ask for a vote upon the amendment which I have explained to the Senate. As several Senators were then absent, I will just take one minute to explain it for the benefit of all. It is to prevent the adulteration of flour and treats adulterated flour as the present statutes of the United States treat oleomargarine, or artificial butter. If any Senators desire to see samples of the adulterants that are used, I have them here, and I have the analysis. This one [exhibiting], which is common in use, is known as "mineraline flour." It is ground clay, 95 per cent of which is not soluble even in acid. I have not yet been able to put in the RECORD the advertisement or circular letter which accompanies this class of adulterants, and I desire that Senators may hear how common it is to use this ground clay in the manufacture of flour. I will read the letter. It is as follows:

[The York Manufacturing Company, paints and wood fillers, 113 and 114 Fayetteville street.]

GREENSBORO, N. C., May 7, 1898.

GENTLEMEN: We invite your attention to our mineraline, which is without a doubt the greatest existing discovery.

There is no flour-mill man who can afford not to use it, for several reasons.

I wish Senators to understand that we have the analysis here from one of the best chemists in this country, showing that it is simply ground clay. I want to show the recommendations that go with it as it is sent to the flour mills. The letter proceeds:

Your flour will be much whiter and nicer. It does not injure the flour in any way, is not at all injurious to the health, and by using mineraline you realize a margin of from $400 to $1,000 on each carload you use.

To secure a low freight rate we mark it as "ship stuff."

We can furnish you mineraline free on board cars, your station, for high-grade flour at $20 per ton, for medium-grade flour at $16 per ton, for bread meal at $12 per ton, and for feed meal at $8 per ton.

For a high-grade flour use 15 per cent mineraline, for medium-grade flour use 12 per cent mineraline, for bread meal use 12 per cent mineraline, and for feed meal use 18 per cent mineraline.

We furnish all our customers with a mixer free of charge. This machine will distribute completely any proportion desired, and costs nothing to attach.

All you have to do is to bore a hole in your elevator pipe, clamp on the machine, attach a cord to run it, fill up the hopper, and set the feed to the proportion desired.

Inclosed find sample of our mineraline for medium-grade flour.

You can not afford to let your competitor beat you in both quality and margin. We would be glad to hear from you.

Very truly, yours,

THE YORK MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
By M. H. K.

Messrs. FISHER & MILLER, Huntingdon, Pa.

That sample has been analyzed, as I said, and the analysis is before the Senate and is a part of the records before the Ways and Means Committee of the House.

The next common adulterant is known as the barytes flour, or ground rock. I have samples of both and evidence conclusive that they are being used to add to the whiteness and to the weight of flour. The other adulterant which is most commonly used is the refuse of corn, known as corn flour, with all of the gluten and sugar extracted, bleached, as has been testified to by witnesses before the committee, with sulphuric acid. I showed a sample of that to the Senate, and also showed by a simple test, by applying it to litmus paper, that it contained sulphuric acid.

The Committee on Manufactures has adopted in the amendment the law applicable to oleomargarine, that it shall be stamped simply for what it is. If any gentleman shall say that it is a kind of tax not contemplated, there is a complete answer that it provides simply for a 1-cent stamp on 50 pounds or any part thereof—4 cents on a barrel of flour. It provides for a stamp tax, exactly the kind that is contemplated in this proposed law.

If the question is raised as to its not being a legal and constitutional thing to do, I shall take the time of the Senate, in answer, to read the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the oleomargarine cases.

It is said by some that we ought to make it a separate bill. This is the one chance. It must be in a revenue bill. The practical application and the common-sense application is that you can not regulate in so safe and sure a way and at the same time produce revenue enough from the adulterated article as under the plan proposed by this amendment. A revenue bill can not originate in the Senate. The amendment simply provides a definition for this mixed flour. If it becomes a law, it will prohibit the use of rock and clay, because it compels the marking upon the outside of the package of the ingredients. It may be that what is known as mineraline is not deleterious to health. If not, then the gentlemen who make it ought not to be unwilling to have it marked for what it is.

I do not think that the amendment has been reported in full to the Senate. I think I have stated all I care to state, unless some one can give me some reason why he thinks it ought not to become a law. If any good reason can be given, I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. MASON. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not within the power of the several States to enact similar statutes in regard to this matter and to impose a penalty for the adulteration of flour?

Mr. MASON. There is no doubt that the States have certain police powers the same as they have as to the manufacturers of oleomargarine; but the Senator well understands that an article may be manufactured in one State and sold in another, whereby the people are defrauded and cheated. The men who have blended and mixed flour, which is made in my State, may possibly sell it in the State represented by the Senator who has just spoken. The object of the amendment is to protect the inhabitants of one State against the fraud of the inhabitants of other States. That is the policy which was adopted by the Congress of the United States in the Forty-ninth Congress, and which was approved and sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. WILSON. That was a separate bill, was it not?

Mr. MASON. That was a separate bill, and this is a separate bill which is offered now as an amendment to this revenue bill, and the Senator certainly ought not to object to the merits of the amendment if it is germane to the pending bill. The bill provides for a stamp tax, and that is what we are asking for in this amendment. It is a separate section, and made a different section, but it is absolutely germane and certainly can not be objected to by anyone who favors such legislation.

There are 70,000,000 people in this country who want wheat flour, and they are entitled to have what they buy as flour marked for what it is. Seventy-five or 80 per cent of the flour now put upon the market is adulterated. This gives a fair opportunity, or at least it gives notice to the people that they will get that which they want to buy and which they are paying for.

The Supreme Court said in one sentence, which I should like to read:

The statute seeks to suppress false pretenses and to promote fair dealing in the sale of an article of food. It compels the sale of oleomargarine for what it really is, by preventing its sale for what it is not.

I propose when they sell ground clay that they shall sell it for ground clay, and when they sell corn flour, from which the gluten has been extracted, for wheat flour, it shall be sold for what it really is, and not for wheat flour. The Supreme Court further say:

Can it be that the Constitution of the United States secures to anyone the privilege of manufacturing and selling an article of food in such manner as to induce the mass of people to believe that they are buying something which in fact is wholly different from that which is offered for sale? Does the freedom of commerce among the States demand a recognition of the right to practice a deception upon the public in the sale of any articles, even those that may have become the subject of trade in different parts of the country?

Under this amendment there is no tax upon corn flour and there is no tax upon wheat flour. It simply requires a 4-cent stamp upon a barrel of flour which masquerades as wheat flour when, as a matter of fact, it may consist of refuse from the factory of the glucose trust, and clay and ground rock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Illinois will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. —. That for the purposes of this act the words "mixed flour" shall be understood to mean the food product made from wheat, and mixed, blended, or compounded with ground corn or other foreign substances, or with the manufactured product of any other grain than wheat.

SEC. —. That special taxes are imposed as follows: Manufacturers of mixed flour shall pay $10. Every person who manufactures mixed flour for sale shall be deemed a manufacturer of mixed flour. Every person who packs, repacks, or mixes flour for sale so as to accomplish the product designated as mixed flour under this act shall also be deemed a manufacturer of mixed flour. Sections 3232, 3233, 3234, 3235, 3236, 3237, 3238, 3239, 3240, 3241, and 3243 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are, so far as applicable, made to extend to and include and apply to the special taxes imposed by this section and to the persons upon whom they are imposed. Every person who carries on the business of manufacturer of mixed flour without having paid the special tax therefor, as required by law, shall, besides being liable to the payment of the tax, be fined not less than $10 and not more than $5,000.

SEC. —. That all mixed flour shall be packed by the manufacturer thereof in barrels, bags, or other packages not before used for that purpose, and each package containing mixed flour shall be plainly marked, stamped, or branded "Mixed flour," together with the true weight of such package, the names of the ingredients contained therein, the name of the manufacturer or packer, and the place where manufactured or packed. That all sales and consignments of mixed flour shall be in the original packages; and every person knowingly selling or offering to sell, delivering or offering to deliver, any mixed flour in any other than marked, stamped, or branded packages, as required by this act, or who packs in any package or packages any mixed flour in any manner contrary to law, or who falsely marks, stamps, or brands any package or packages, or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for each offense not more than $500 and be imprisoned not more than one year.

SEC. —. That every manufacturer of mixed flour shall securely affix, by pasting on each package containing mixed flour manufactured by him, a label, on which shall be printed, besides the number of the manufactory and the district and State in which it is situated, these words:

"NOTICE: The manufacturer of the mixed flour herein contained has complied with all the requirements of law. Every person is cautioned not to use either this package again, or the stamp thereon again, nor to remove the contents of this package without destroying said stamp, under the penalty provided by law in such cases."

Every manufacturer of mixed flour failing or neglecting to affix such label to any package containing mixed flour manufactured by him or packed, repacked, sold, or offered for sale by or for him, and every person who removes any such label so affixed from any such package, shall be fined not less than one nor more than fifty dollars for each package in respect to which such offense is committed.

SEC. —. That upon all mixed flour which shall be manufactured and sold or removed for consumption or use there shall be assessed and collected a tax of 1 cent for each 50 pounds or fraction thereof contained in any package, to be paid by the manufacturer, packer, or repacker of the same. The tax levied by this section shall be represented by coupon stamps; and the provisions of existing laws covering the engraving, issue, sale, accountability, effacement, and destruction of stamps relating to tobacco and snuff, as far as applicable, are hereby made to apply to stamps provided for by this section.

SEC. —. That whenever any person sells or removes for sale or consumption any mixed flour upon which the tax is required to be paid by stamps, without the use of the proper stamps, it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, within a period of not more than two years after such sale or removal, upon satisfactory proof, to estimate the amount of tax which has been omitted to be paid and to make an assessment therefor, and certify the same to the collector. The tax so assessed shall be in addition to the penalties imposed by law for such sale or removal.

SEC. —. That all mixed flour imported from foreign countries shall, in addition to any import duties imposed on the same, pay an internal-revenue tax of 1 cent for every 50 pounds or fraction thereof contained in any package, such tax to be represented by coupon stamps; and the packages containing such imported mixed flour shall be marked, stamped, and branded and labeled in the same manner as mixed flour made, packed, or repacked in the United States.

SEC. —. That every person who sells or offers for sale any imported mixed flour not put up in packages stamped as provided by this act shall for each offense be fined not less than $5 nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

SEC. —. That every person who knowingly purchases or receives for sale any mixed flour which has not been branded or stamped according to law shall be liable to a penalty of not less than one nor more than fifty dollars for each such offense.

SEC. —. That whenever any stamped package containing mixed flour is empty it shall be the duty of the person in whose hands it is to destroy utterly the stamps thereon, and any person willfully neglecting or refusing to do so shall for each offense be fined not exceeding $50. Any revenue officer may destroy any emptied mixed-flour package upon which the tax-paid stamp is found; and all packages of mixed flour subject to tax under this act that shall be found without stamps or marks as herein provided shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. —. That it shall be the duty of every person who shall manufacture, pack, repack, sell, or offer for sale, who shall export to a foreign country mixed flour, to brand upon every barrel, bag, or other package containing such article the words "Mixed flour" in plain roman letters not less than one-half inch square.

SEC. —. That all fines, penalties, and forfeitures imposed by this act may be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. —. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may make all needful regulations for the carrying into effect of this act.

SEC. —. That this act shall go into effect on the ninetieth day after its passage; and all packages containing mixed flour found on the premises of any person on or after the ninetieth day succeeding the date of the passage of this act shall be deemed to be taxable under this act, and shall be taxed and have affixed thereto the stamps, marks, and brands required by this act or by regulations made pursuant to this act. And for the purpose of securing the affixing of the marks, stamps, and brands required by this act, the mixed flour shall be regarded as having been manufactured or sold or removed from the manufactory for consumption or use on or after the date this act takes effect; and such mixed flour on hand at the time of the taking effect of this act may be marked, stamped, branded, and labeled under special regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. —. That the word "person" contained in this act shall mean and include any person, firm, or corporation; and that the word "manufacturer" of mixed flour under this act shall mean and include any manufacturer, packer, or repacker of mixed flour, or any packer, repacker, or mixer of flour who thereby accomplishes the product designated as mixed flour under this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to prevail.

Mr. MASON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. I should like to have a roll call.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MASON. I desire to say that there is one part of the proposed amendment which ought to be perfected before it is voted upon; and that is in regard to the time of its going into effect. I will ask unanimous consent to strike out the section which fixes the time when the provision shall go into effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can be done in the Senate, the Chair will inform the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the roll is called, I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois a question. I was given a sample of what is said to be a by-product of glucose. It was stated to me that in the manufacture of this product sulphuric acid was used and that it was not extracted, and that this piece of litmus paper, which I suppose was first made moist and then subjected to that material, turned this color [exhibiting] for the reason that there was free sulphuric acid in its preparation. If that be so, it is a very serious matter and appeals to me more strongly than any other suggestion the Senator has made; yet I hold in my hand here a document issued by the Glucose Sugar Refining Company, of Chicago, in which Mr. Magnus Swenson, who signs himself "Secretary and manager Walburn-Swenson Company; formerly chemist University of Wisconsin; agent United States Department of Agriculture, etc.," says:

I am thoroughly familiar with the various processes employed by your company in the manufacture of starch from Indian corn, and hereby certify that no sulphuric acid is used in its manufacture.

What I wanted to ask the Senator was, What proof he has that sulphuric acid is actually used and what proof he has that the change in this litmus paper is caused by the presence there of sulphuric acid? The Senator knows probably that other chemical ingredients besides sulphuric acid will change litmus paper from its natural color to a color substantially the same as the litmus paper I now hold in my hand.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, the Senator will remember that I stated that so far as the adulteration of what is called corn flour is concerned, I have no positive proof that it is deleterious to health. I called attention to, and I inserted in my remarks, an affidavit which was produced by a gentleman before the Ways and Means Committee of the other House and published as part of their record. Following that affidavit was the certificate of a large number of persons that the gentleman who had made the affidavit is a reputable citizen.

That affidavit states that refuse from the glucose factory where he works is used. He drew a picture of it; and it is illustrated and inserted as part of my remarks. That refuse, which is called corn flour, is not properly called corn flour, because under the analysis it is not disputed that all of the life-giving properties are extracted except starch, if that be a life-giving property. It is put into large vats and sulphuric acid is run through it; and a picture of the vats is given, and a statement is made under oath as to how it is manufactured. That was done, as I remember, at St. Louis. My proposition is, whether it is deleterious to health or not, corn flour ought not to be permitted to be sold to the people of this country as wheat flour.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. MASON. And whether the gentleman who makes the statement to which I have referred states truly, or whether he misstates, or whether the man who made the affidavit before the Ways and Means Committee testified falsely or not—whichever one is right or wrong—there ought to be no objection to a man paying 4 cents tax on a barrel of corn flour when he seeks to sell it for wheat flour, which contains 15 or 20 per cent of a cheaper article, whether it be prejudicial to health or not.

The test showing the change of color in the paper was made by a gentleman who is a member of the House of Representatives, and there is no objection to giving his name—Mr. COX. He states to me in the Senate Chamber that he has made this test himself, after reading the affidavit that there was sulphuric acid in this flour. He simply put a small amount of it on the paper and then moistened it, and the discoloration was clear to his mind. Whether he has had any scientific training upon the subject I do not know, but he says it was clear to his mind. I simply stated—and gave the source of my authority—that he gave it as his opinion that the article contained sulphuric acid; but whether it does or not, whether it is healthful or not, as the Supreme Court say in regard to the sale of oleomargarine, if a man wants to sell lard, let him sell it for lard; if he wants to sell tallow, let him sell it for tallow. That has been the adopted policy of this Government, and it has been sustained by the Supreme Court.

I say to the Senate of the United States now—and I hope you will hear me for one minute—that this is the last opportunity you will have for a long time to come to give to the people of this country notice of the kind of flour they are eating. Is it not fair to the millers of the country who grind wheat and sell it for wheat flour, is it not fair to the consumers of the country, and is it not true that it is owing to the mixing of this adulterated flour that our export trade has fallen off?

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Senator allow me to suggest that I am informed from a source that is entirely reliable that a measure is being considered in another place covering this whole subject embraced in his amendment, and that it is about to be reported to another body, and will probably be acted on at an early date?

In this connection, I suggest that while I am earnestly in favor of the proposition embraced in the Senator's amendment, yet, so far as I am concerned, I shall vote against it in this connection, because I think it has no place on this bill. It is not necessarily a revenue proposition. The bill under consideration is a purely revenue measure; and if you begin to load it down with propositions of this kind, we shall never reach a conclusion.

I beg the Senator to withdraw the proposition. It would probably receive the support of the Senate presented as a separate proposition, but on this measure it certainly has, in my judgment, no legitimate place.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, at last I have found one Senator who gives some reason why the distinguished Christian tradesmen of this country should be permitted to sell corn and clay for wheat flour. The reason is that the Senator has been informed that somewhere, some time, and somehow the question is being settled as a separate bill. It has been considered in that body as long as it has been considered here. The bill which I introduced in this body was introduced in one other body at the same time. If it is not a revenue measure, the Supreme Court does not know what it is talking about. That court sustained an exactly similar bill, to manage and control the business of oleomargarine, upon the ground that it was a revenue measure and that it was within the legal, constitutional power of Congress to regulate the subject.

More than that, Mr. President, I have not only made this proposition in the form of a revenue measure, but I have made it a revenue measure in the way of a stamp tax, from which the Senators upon the committee have so loudly contended that they were going to raise a large amount of revenue.

Who can it hurt if we let the people know whether they are buying wheat flour or clay or ground rock? The men who make this ground rock and sell it for flour, the men who make ground clay and sell it for flour, and the men who use the refuse of the sugar-trust factories and sell it for wheat flour are the only persons who can be injured by this amendment.

Name anyone else who will be injured by it. It can only be the man who is masquerading skimmed milk for cream, the man who is putting upon the public something that is not fair and honest to the consumer, the man who can hide within a barrel of flour 30 or 40 per cent of clay rock, that will not dissolve or digest in the stomach, as testified to by the gentlemen whose testimony I have read before the Senate, and I am to be told now, at this moment, after having adopted the stamp-tax theory, which was approved by this committee, that we must allow these men to continue to sell to the people and to the soldiers of the country hard-tack made of clay and ground glass and half-ground clay and ground stone to fight the Spaniards on because, forsooth, it is to be considered in a separate bill in some other body!

The amendment I have offered is a legitimate and germane amendment to this bill, and I hope the Senate of the United States will, at least in the passage of this bill, give the people some chance to defend themselves against the class of persons who are known as the glucose trust, who sell millions of pounds of their worthless products by fraud and by deceit, and get them into the stomachs of the people and take the money out of the pockets of the people by a clear case of confidence game, not only injuring the health and morals of the community, but destroying the business of the millers who are willing to buy wheat in the open market, grind it in an honest mill, and sell it for what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. BATE. Will the Chair kindly state the parliamentary status of the motion? Is it a motion to lay the amendment upon the table or upon the adoption of the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLAURIN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BURROWS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. In his absence I will withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—41.

Allen, Bacon, Baker, Berry, Butler, Cannon, Carter, Chandler, Cockrell, Davis, Elkins,	Fairbanks, Foraker, Gallinger, Harris, Heitfeld, Jones, Nev. Kyle, Lodge, McBride, McMillan, Mantle,	Martin, Mason, Mitchell, Money, Morgan, Nelson, Perkins, Pettigrew, Platt, N. Y. Quay, Rawlins,	Roach, Shoup, Spooner, Stewart, Teller, Thurston, Tillman, Wilson.
--	--	---	---

NAYS—29.

Aldrich, Allison, Bate, Chilton, Clark, Clay, Cullom, Deboe,	Frye, Gear, Gorman, Hale, Hanna, Hawley, Jones, Ark. Lindsay,	McEnery, Mills, Morrill, Pasco, Platt, Conn. Sewell, Sullivan, Turley,	Turpie, Vest, Wellington, Wetmore, White.
---	--	---	---

NOT VOTING—19.

Burrows, Caffery, Daniel, Faulkner, Gray,	Hansbrough, Hoar, Kenney, McLaurin, Mallory,	Murphy, Penrose, Pettus, Pritchard, Proctor,	Smith, Turner, Warren, Wolcott.
---	--	--	--

So Mr. MASON's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer an amendment to come in right after the bond provision.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

That all that portion of section 3 of chapter 15 of the laws of the second session of the Forty-third Congress, approved January 14, 1875, which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue, sell, and dispose of the bonds of the United States for any purpose whatever, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, this amendment is intended to repeal the provisions of the act of 1875 under which during the last Administration over $250,000,000 of bonds were issued. I believe that the construction placed upon this law by that Administration was an incorrect one—that no such authority exists, and that the bonds issued were issued without authority of law and therefore void. It seems to me that under these circumstances, in view of the fact that this belief is entertained by very many people, in view of the fact that doubt is cast upon these securities, it is best to repeal the law and prevent the issue of further securities under it.

I doubt if we shall ever have another President of the United States who would pursue the course, in many respects, pursued by the last President, and I certainly hope we never shall have. Yet, in view of the fact that sufficient pressure was brought upon him many times to violate acts of Congress, many times to violate his oath of office, many times to pursue a course which was a disgrace to a free country and a free people, in view of the fact that he was twice elected, the danger still exists, and therefore it seems to me expedient and proper that all semblance of power to place a bonded indebtedness upon the people of the United States should be taken away. Congress, which represents directly the people of this country, can be trusted when it is necessary to incur a bonded debt. No lingering, continued authority should be granted.

No power to place upon this country a debt without limit should ever be conferred upon the Executive or any branch of the Government. It is contrary to the theory and genius of our institutions. Therefore it seems to me exceedingly proper at this time that we should take away all chance to exercise such power and all excuse for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. BATE and Mr. STEWART. Let the amendment be stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that it seems to me we might put it in more definite shape, saying that no bonds shall be issued except as herein provided for.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the only law which does it.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the only law which authorizes it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW and Mr. MILLS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLAURIN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 31, nays 43; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Allen, Bacon, Bate, Berry, Butler, Cannon, Chilton, Clay,	Cockrell, Harris, Heitfeld, Jones, Ark. Jones, Nev. McEnery, Mantle, Martin,	Mills, Money, Morgan, Pasco, Pettigrew, Pettus, Rawlins, Roach,	Stewart, Sullivan, Teller, Tillman, Turley, Turpie, White.
--	---	--	--

NAYS—43.

Aldrich, Allison, Burrows, Caffery, Carter, Chandler, Clark, Cullom, Davis, Deboe, Elkins,	Fairbanks, Foraker, Frye, Gallinger, Gear, Gorman, Hale, Hanna, Hawley, Hoar, Kyle,	Lindsay, Lodge, McBride, McMillan, Mason, Mitchell, Morrill, Murphy, Nelson, Perkins, Platt, Conn.	Platt, N. Y. Quay, Sewell, Shoup, Spooner, Thurston, Wellington, Wetmore, Wilson, Wolcott.
--	---	--	---

NOT VOTING—15.

Baker, Daniel, Faulkner, Gray,	Hansbrough, Kenney, McLaurin, Mallory,	Penrose, Pritchard, Proctor, Smith,	Turner, Vest, Warren.
---	---	--	-----------------------------

So Mr. PETTIGREW's amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer an amendment to be inserted as a new section.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That none of the bonds or certificates of indebtedness issued under or by virtue of the provisions of this act shall be used as a basis for the issuance of national-bank currency or national-bank notes, nor shall the Secretary of the Treasury hereafter have authority to, or increase the gold reserve by the sale of bonds under this or any prior act of Congress unless the necessity therefor has been first declared to exist by special act or resolution of Congress; that as long as the Secretary of the Treasury shall pursue the policy or practice of redeeming legal-tender notes of the United States exclusively in gold coin it shall be the duty of any national bank having outstanding national-bank notes or currency to redeem the same exclusively in gold coin of standard weight and fineness whenever the same are presented at its counter in the sum of $50 or more, and a failure of any such national bank to so redeem its outstanding national-bank notes or currency in the sums aforesaid shall forfeit its right to issue any further or additional bank notes or currency, and on proof to the Comptroller of the Currency that any such national bank has refused to make such redemption, he shall take such steps as may be necessary to prevent any further issuance of national-bank notes or currency by such bank.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. On that I should like to have a yeas-and-nay vote. The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. If he were present, he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TILLMAN. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. McLAURIN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 42; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Allen, Bacon, Bate, Berry, Butler, Cannon, Chilton,	Clay, Cockrell, Harris, Heitfeld, Jones, Ark. Jones, Nev. McEnery,	Mantle, Mills, Money, Morgan, Pettigrew, Roach, Stewart,	Sullivan, Teller, Tillman, Turley, Turpie, White.
---	--	--	--

NAYS—42.

Aldrich, Allison, Burrows, Caffery, Carter, Chandler, Clark, Cullom, Davis, Deboe, Elkins,	Fairbanks, Foraker, Frye, Gallinger, Gear, Gorman, Hale, Hanna, Hawley, Hoar, Kyle,	Lindsay, Lodge, McBride, McMillan, Mason, Mitchell, Morrill, Murphy, Nelson, Perkins, Platt, Conn.	Platt, N. Y. Quay, Sewell, Shoup, Spooner, Thurston, Wellington, Wetmore, Wolcott.
--	---	--	--

NOT VOTING—30.

Baker,
Daniel,
Faulkner,
Gray,
Hansbrough,

Kenney,
McLaurin,
Mallory,
Martin,
Pasco,

Penrose,
Pettus,
Pritchard,
Proctor,
Rawlins,

Smith,
Turner,
West,
Warren,
Wilson.

So Mr. ALLEN's amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk as a proviso to the last section, authorizing the issuance of bonds and certificates of indebtedness.

The SECRETARY. As a proviso to section 28 of the bill, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That except as in this act provided the Secretary of the Treasury shall not hereafter have authority to issue any bond or interest-bearing obligation of the United States unless theretofore specially authorized to do so by special act or resolution of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHILTON. I send to the desk an amendment which I offer.

The SECRETARY. After line 20, page 56, it is proposed to insert:

OTHER PROPRIETARY PREPARATIONS.

For and upon every packet, box, bottle, pot, phial, or other inclosure containing any articles, substances, preparations, or compounds, except food products and preparations otherwise provided for in this act, that are made and sold or removed for sale under patent right, trade-mark, or any name or designation not open to general use.

Where such packet, box, bottle, pot, phial, or other inclosure, with its contents, shall not exceed, at the retail price or value, the sum of 5 cents, one-fourth of 1 cent.

Where such packet, box, bottle, pot, phial, or other inclosure, with its contents, shall exceed the retail price or value of 5 cents and shall not exceed, at the retail price or value, the sum of 10 cents, one-half of 1 cent.

Where each packet, box, bottle, pot, phial, or other inclosure, with its contents, shall exceed the retail price or value of 10 cents and shall not exceed the retail price or value of 25 cents, 1 cent.

Where each packet, box, bottle, pot, phial, or other inclosure, with its contents, shall exceed the retail price or value of 25 cents and shall not exceed the retail price or value of 50 cents, 2 cents.

Where such packet, box, bottle, pot, phial, or other inclosure, with its contents, shall exceed the retail price or value of 50 cents and shall not exceed the retail price or value of 75 cents, 3 cents.

Where such packet, box, bottle, pot, phial, or other inclosure, with its contents, shall exceed the retail price or value of 75 cents and shall not exceed the retail price or value of $1, 4 cents.

Where such packet, box, bottle, pot, phial, or other inclosure, with its contents, shall exceed the retail price or value of $1, for each and every 50 cents or fractional part thereof over and above the $1, as before mentioned, an additional 2 cents.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, it will take a few moments only to explain the nature of this amendment. I hope it will be adopted by vote of Senators on both sides. Under the bill as already framed proprietary medicinal preparations are taxed. Perfumery is taxed also. It has seemed to me that we ought to reach by this bill another large class of preparations such as Sapolio, Pearline, Diamond Dyes, stove polish, shoe polish, and articles of that kind. They are sold at a certain fixed price, say 10 cents or 25 cents or 50 cents for the box or package.

The manufacturers of such articles have made immense fortunes in the last few years. The profits in this line of trade must be very considerable. I do not think that matters of this kind ought to be decided upon any narrow ground, and I ask Senators for a good reason why the druggist should be singled out to bear the burden of a stamp tax, while the man who makes Sapolio or any other preparation which he sells under a name which the public have not the right to use should go scot-free.

I will explain briefly in detail the amendment I propose:

For and upon every packet, box, bottle, pot, phial, or other inclosure containing any articles, substances, preparations, or compounds, except food products—

The exception will let out canned vegetables, fruits, oysters, fish, beef, and all articles of that kind. After exempting food products the amendment continues—and preparations otherwise provided for in this act, that are made and sold or removed for sale under patent right, trade-mark, or any name or designation not open to general use.

Then follows the amount of the stamp tax at the same rate as that fixed on perfumery and patent medicines. I have no desire to detain the Senate, and with this explanation, which I think should commend this amendment favorably to gentlemen on all sides, I will ask that a vote be had upon it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, possibly some of the articles mentioned by the Senator from Texas should be subjected to a stamp tax, but the trouble with this amendment is that nobody can tell to what extent it will be carried, or what its scope will be, as to what articles will be covered. For instance, articles of common laundry soap or of ink or of manufactures like steel pens and an infinite variety of articles would be covered by the description contained in the amendment of the Senator from Texas, and just what would be covered by food products it is impossible to say; because just what are food products?

For instance, would an article like baking powder, which is used in the preparation of food, be construed by the Treasury Department to be a food product? I agree that some of these proprietary articles could be taxed, but the committee found extreme difficulty in preparing an amendment that would cover articles which clearly ought to be taxed and not tax the great variety of articles which the Senate would by unanimous vote determine should not be taxed.

Mr. CHILTON. Just one word. The criticism of the Senator from Rhode Island is entirely unjustifiable. There is no ambiguity whatever in this amendment. Baking powder will clearly not be taxed, because it is a food product. All things which enter into the composition of the food of the people will escape. Why should not steel pens or bottles of ink, if they are made under a name or designation not open to public use, pay a small tax? Why should not stove polish or shoe polish be subject to a tax if it is made under a proprietary name or designation?

Remember, too, that the tax is very small. If the article is sold at retail for less than 5 cents, the tax is only one-fourth of 1 cent. If it is sold at from 5 to 10 cents, the tax is one-half of 1 cent. If it is sold for more than 10 cents and less than 25 cents, the tax is but 1 cent.

The difficulties which have been suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island are purely imaginary. Food products are clearly exempted by this amendment. He might as properly argue that the other parts of this bill which provide that medicinal preparations shall be taxed is open to the charge of ambiguity. What are medicinal preparations? Every clause of this bill can be subjected to strained criticism. The difficulty which the Senator from Rhode Island suggests is purely fantastic.

The phrase "food products" would include everything that is used for food, such as coffee, tea, oysters, fish, beef, tomatoes, beans, and all sorts of fruits and vegetables. Even baking powder would be included under the term food products. There is no difficulty whatever in arriving at the true construction of the terms of exception.

We ought not to discriminate against those persons who manufacture medicines or perfumery in this country and relieve everybody else from the operation of the stamp tax. If there be any way of levying a tax which will not fall on the consumer, it is by levying it on these proprietary articles which have their price fixed upon the bottle or package. It is difficult in such case for the manufacturer to raise his price to the ordinary purchasers in the daily trade.

The manufacturer of proprietary articles, such as Diamond Dyes, for example, have made great fortunes in their business. The other lines of manufacture covered by this amendment are notoriously profitable. Why should they not be subjected to the same inconvenience and to the same contribution to the expenses of our present emergency as those who make patent medicines or perfumery? I see no difficulty whatever in administering this amendment, and I ask for a yea-and-nay vote on the proposition.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, just another word. The Senate should remember that at the present time all the infinite variety of manufactures in the United States, or substantially all, are sold under some proprietary trade-mark. It would cover nine-tenths of the manufactures of iron and steel. Every pen-knife which is sold under a trade-mark or a distinctive name, every anvil, every locomotive, every article or thing in our infinite variety of manufactures, would be covered by this provision as it stands, or is likely to be covered by it.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will permit me to suggest that the phraseology of this amendment limits the tax upon articles in inclosures of some kind.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is an inclosure? It is ambiguous.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator asks what is an inclosure. You might as well say that the provision in another part of the bill about patent medicines, where the word "inclosure" is used, is ambiguous.

Mr. ALDRICH. A penknife in a box would be an inclosure. There is nothing that is not sold in an inclosure of some kind or other. All articles are packed and sold in inclosures. A piece of cotton cloth sold under a trade-mark would have to pay a tax under this provision. There is nothing in our infinite variety of manufactures which would not be or likely to be subject to tax under the provision of the Senator's amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Would the Senator tax a pair of shoes in a box?

Mr. CHILTON. I will wait until Senators get through, and then I will explain the amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to inquire whether the Senator would require a stamp to be put on a box containing a pair of shoes or on every tin can containing paints for farmers to use? You can extend it indefinitely. There are ten thousand articles the Senator's amendment would tax or about which there would be a question whether they should be taxed under this provision.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, perhaps I should say nothing further, but I do not like for the case to rest upon the hypercriticism which has been offered by the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Connecticut. The Senator talks about a knife. That would not be taxed. Why? Because it is not sold in a package at retail.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes, it is.

Mr. CHILTON. Not in a package at retail. They put up, say, a dozen knives in one package, and they are sold separately at retail. But suppose it is true that knives are sometimes sold at retail in separate boxes. In such a case could not the knife well bear a small tax? The language is "packet, bottle, pot, vial, or other inclosure." This is precisely the language used in that part of the bill which the Senators from Rhode Island and Connecticut have supported in the clauses about medicines and perfumery, and they now profess to see in it something vague.

Then take paints. This tax is very small at best. If paints are sold under a proprietary name and in a box or packet, they should be taxed. The paint manufacturers who have built up a reputation for a particular brand of goods, and are thereby enabled to secure a special profit from the public, can well afford to contribute a small sum to support the war which their country is now waging with the Government of Spain.

Mr. President, let us throw off all evasion. If we do not want to tax these things, let us come out boldly and say so, but do not conjure up difficulties which have no foundation in reality.

I ask for a vote by yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON], upon which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLAURIN], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 41, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—41.

Allen,	Gallinger,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Bacon,	Gorman,	Money,	Sullivan,
Bate,	Harris,	Morgan,	Teller,
Berry,	Heitfeld,	Murphy,	Tillman,
Butler,	Jones, Ark.	Nelson,	Turley,
Caffery,	Jones, Nev.	Pasco,	Turpie,
Cannon,	Lindsay,	Perkins,	Vest,
Chilton,	McNery,	Pettigrew,	White,
Clay,	Mantle,	Pettus,
Cockrell,	Martin,	Rawlins,
Daniel,	Mills,	Reach,

NAYS—31.

Aldrich,	Elkins,	Hoar,	Quay,
Allison,	Fairbanks,	Kyle,	Sewell,
Barrows,	Fryer,	Lodge,	Spooner,
Chandler,	Frye,	McBride,	Thurston,
Clark,	Gear,	McMillan,	Wellington,
Cullom,	Hale,	Morrill,	Wetmore,
Davis,	Hanna,	Platt, Conn.	Wilson,
Deboe,	Hawley,	Platt, N. Y.

NOT VOTING—17.

Baker,	Kennedy,	Pritchard,	Warren,
Carter,	McLaurin,	Proctor,	Wolcott,
Faulkner,	Mallory,	Shoup,
Gray,	Mason,	Smith,
Hansbrough,	Penrose,	Turner,

So Mr. CHILTON's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LINDSAY. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert between lines 9 and 10, on page 41, the following proviso:

Provided, That no stamp tax shall be required on any bundle or package of newspapers wholly or partially printed and intended for general circulation and weighing not more than 100 pounds.

Mr. ALLEN. That is in substance the amendment I handed to the Senator from Iowa a few moments ago.

The purpose of this amendment is to relieve newspapers intended for general circulation and reading from all forms of taxation. This particular amendment is designed more especially to reach and benefit the country newspapers. As is well known, the great majority of those papers use what are known as ready prints, one side of which is published at a central place and sent by express to the country offices, where the other side is printed. It strikes me at least that the country press, having a greater struggle for an existence than even the metropolitan press, should be placed upon terms of equality with the metropolitan press. I understand that bundles of papers sent out by the daily press will not be taxed under this bill; that they will be free absolutely from taxation; whereas every sheet of paper used by the country press will be taxed at the rate of 1 cent a pound.

Mr. ALLISON. The provision as proposed by the committee does tax bundles of newspapers as other bundles are taxed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. When sent by express.

Mr. ALLISON. When sent by express or by freight. The committee had before it the representatives of the newspapers, who, under a misapprehension of the construction of the provision, made some criticism; but when they understood the situation as respects newspapers they were satisfied.

The amendment makes an exception which ought not to be made, I think, in the regard suggested by the Senator from Nebraska. If the country newspapers have a portion of the paper printed in one place and the remaining portion in another they can send now by mail their papers at the rate of a cent a pound under the post-office law. If they circulate their papers in the country in which they publish the paper, they send them absolutely free of postage. A bundle of papers weighing 100 pounds, as suggested by this amendment, would pay only 1 cent under the extreme construction of the law, and it seems to me it is not worth while to make an exemption of that character.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator, I think, does not put this matter in its true light. He says that the committee had before it representatives of the press, but I do not understand the Senator to claim that any representatives of what is known as the ready-print press appeared before the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not, because in any event the bill can not operate harshly upon any country newspapers. A cent upon a bundle weighing 100 pounds, even if transported by express, is all that can be charged, and if they transport it by means of the United States mails, they can transport it at the rate of a cent a pound.

Mr. ALLEN. It would be a dollar a week for every ordinary country newspaper.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the way most of them transport their newspapers now.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator will permit me, I think there is a misunderstanding between the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Iowa in one respect. To exempt the ready prints that are sent in bundles and bulk from the ready-print houses to the newspapers from the payment of this tax is the one point. I understood the Senator from Iowa to be arguing the proposition as to whether the papers were going out to be sent to subscribers. One proposition is quite different from the other.

Mr. ALLISON. I may not understand the amendment. I only heard it read at the desk. Perhaps I did not gather its meaning. But if I understand the Senator from Nebraska, he proposes that white paper half printed sent from one city to another by express, not weighing more than 100 pounds, shall be exempt from the tax.

Mr. ALLEN. That is my proposition.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes; that is it.

Mr. ALLISON. I say that matter can be sent by mail at the rate of a cent a pound, which is as cheap as the express company carries it, and then it will pay to the Post-Office Department that amount.

Mr. STEWART. I do not understand that it can be sent by mail except from the publication office. It can not be sent from one printing establishment to another in the mail.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly—

Mr. ALLEN. There is no mail bag that would hold any one of these ordinary bundles.

Mr. STEWART. It can not be done.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I will waive that point. Here is a bundle of newspapers weighing 100 pounds to be sent, if you please, from Omaha to Fremont.

Mr. STEWART. To another newspaper office, to be distributed from there.

Mr. ALLISON. To be sent to the publishers from one publishing office to another part of the publishing office.

Mr. STEWART. You can not do that under the law. They are very particular and it can not be done.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. It is to be sent by express?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. Can anyone tell me why that bundle should be exempt when every other thing that is sent by express, if it only weighs an ounce or 2 ounces, shall pay a cent under the bill? I do not think there is any reason why there should be this exemption. Therefore I hope the Senator from Nebraska will not press the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I think I can offer a sufficient reason. I do not believe in taxing newspapers, or books, or magazines at all. I believe there should be the freest and most unrestricted circulation of newspapers and other means of intelligence. It is well known to the Senator from Iowa, as a man of large experience and one who has lived in the West a great many years of his life, that the great struggle of the Western press is with the country press, not with the daily press in the cities. Now, should any tax, however light it may be, be placed upon the circulation of the country press and by that means restrict and cripple it, for that is the effect of it?

Mr. ALLISON. Then I think the Senator's amendment should go much further. It should exempt from the operation of the tax all white paper used by newspapers. Certainly there is no reason for exempting paper half printed upon any more than there is for exempting white paper, if the paper is used by country newspapers. Why not exempt from the operation of the law all express matter carried to them or from them?

Mr. ALLEN. I will go to the extent of exempting all white paper, or partially printed paper, that may be actually used for newspaper purposes. I do not think there should be the slightest restriction in the way of taxation placed upon the dissemination of knowledge. Mr. President, this can only be regarded as a direct thrust and blow at the country press, an attempt to stifle or destroy it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Nebraska has spoken several times of the country press. Does his amendment apply to the country press alone?

Mr. ALLEN. No; my speech is not quite as broad as the amendment; but I am speaking about that particular branch of the press that reaches the masses of the people. We know, as a matter of fact, that the papers published in the cities, especially the daily papers, do not reach the masses of the people. The contents may reach them after a time in the form of weeklies and semiweeklies. The press upon which the masses depend is the weekly press, and it is not only weekly in its publication, but many times weakly in a financial sense. No tax or exaction should be placed upon that press that will curtail its circulation or impede it in the slightest degree. It is the only source of information that stands between thousands of citizens and the government, State and national.

Mr. President, I do not think it has been the policy of the United States heretofore to tax the means of intelligence and the dissemination of knowledge among the people, and I hope the Senator from Iowa will accept the amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, the amendment which the Senator from Nebraska seeks to have incorporated upon this measure does not, in my opinion, affect in the slightest degree the country press. The newspapers and serial publications of the United States use the mails of the United States at an expense of a cent a pound, until (and this statement can not be reiterated too often) 65 per cent of the expenses of the mail service of the United States is expended on second-class mail matter, which brings but 3 per cent of the revenue. No weekly newspaper, no country newspaper, ever uses the express companies under any circumstances whatsoever. They invariably use the post-office, and the post-office alone.

The express companies only come in competition with the post-office upon certain daily newspapers where there are fast trains. By sending the papers in packages to news agents in the different towns they can get from half an hour to an hour ahead of the post-office; and for that reason, and that reason alone, they use them. The post-office charges 1 cent a pound. The express companies, like everybody else more or less afraid of the newspapers, gives those daily newspapers a rate of half a cent a pound. They rush down just before the time of the leaving of the trains with a number of parcels and throw them in the cars of the express companies, and they are taken to the destination of the news agents along the line.

We have taken a great deal of pains to investigate just how many of these packages are sent in the whole United States by all four of the express companies in a whole year. It amounts for every newspaper in the United States to the enormous sum of 6,000,000 packages, the total revenue for which, from all newspapers of the United States, will be $60,000 to the Government, and it is the imposition of this tax of $60,000 of which these associations complain.

Mr. President, there is a reasonable complaint which some of the reputable newspapers make—for there are some that are reputable. They claim that the delay necessary in affixing a number of stamps to the separate packages would not give them time between the delivery of the package and the carrying of it to its destination to enable them to get down in time. But under the provisions of the section, which are very reasonable in their character, the receipt may be handed by the express company afterwards, or it is but a moment's trouble, if there are fifty-five different packages, to put 55 cents on a receipt and hand it back. It does not take any longer than it takes to sign a name.

There is nothing serious at all in the imposition of the charge. The only complaint I have heard made has been the complaint that the time necessary in affixing the stamp is so great that they do not want to have the necessity imposed upon them to pay this tax.

If the tax is uniform, there is no reason in the world why a lot of newspapers should not pay a cent a hundred pounds, especially when you find that $60,000 is all that all of them can pay. If we wanted to raise a more substantial tax and reach the sum that some of the members of the Senate think we ought to have from the bill, $300,000,000 a year, the most equitable tax we could levy would be a tax upon the circulation of newspapers, and to save espionage we should make it a condition that the daily statements of their circulation should be accepted by the officer of the law as conclusive evidence of the number of copies they had sold. Such a tax would bring us at least $100,000,000 a year.

Mr. President, there is a letter, which was sent to one of our colleagues in the Senate and handed to me as a member of the committee, in which the suggestion was made by the proprietor of that great newspaper, the New York Journal, that if this tax of 1 cent is imposed on newspapers, he would have to raise the price of his newspaper, and he pays only his proportion of $60,000 annually! Why, Mr. President, he spends more than that in red ink; and the news that has been disseminated during the months since this war began and the share these newspapers have had in its creation ought at least to make them willing to pay their share of this burden.

There are newspapers and newspapers. All of us remember the time when the daily press—and there are many such publications now—was an educator in the household; but gradually there has sprung up this line of newspapers, to which sensation is everything and the truth absolutely nothing; who attract all sorts of publications and cartoons, which can help nobody, but which can always tear down, for slander, however nameless or however unworthy, may always destroy. Such publications have had much to do with bringing about the condition of affairs which now exists.

I do think, Mr. President, that it would be rather beneath contempt for the Congress of the United States to say that all the newspapers of the United States could not pay $60,000 a year toward carrying on this war.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, a committee of very intelligent gentlemen, representing the press of the United States officially, explained to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and myself the workings of their system of delivering newspapers and asked for our interpretation of the provisions of the bill as it now stands. The chairman of that committee, who publishes a large newspaper in the city of Cincinnati, said:

We publish an afternoon paper and we want to send our paper to our customers in Kentucky. We send to the station of the Kentucky Central Railroad, or whatever railroad it may be, addressed to the railroad, a bundle containing 100 smaller bundles, which are put into the baggage car of that company, and by the baggagemaster distributed along the road.

Those gentlemen asked us how we would construe the provision of this bill as it stands as to how many stamps they would have to put on that bundle. We said that as it was a single shipment of papers only one stamp would be required, as there was no obligation assumed on the part of the railroad company to deliver those newspapers anywhere. That bundle would be marked, for instance, "Kentucky Central Line," and sent and delivered to the baggagemaster. He could easily give his receipt for the reception of that one single package, and for the payment of 1 cent the newspapers would be taken, without any general or special obligation on the part of the railroad company or the express company, to be distributed by it being thrown upon the railroad platform, and those gentlemen would only have to pay 1 cent.

In justice to those gentlemen, I will say that the objection was not so much to the amount to be paid as it was to the time that would be required in getting a large number of receipts to cover the smaller packages inclosed in this large bundle, that a longer time would be required than an afternoon newspaper could afford, and that they were in great haste to get their papers on the fast trains.

Those gentlemen said, if that was the construction to be put upon the bill—and it seemed to them that it was certainly a proper construction—they had no fault to find with the provision and would cheerfully pay the tax which is imposed by it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads [Mr. WOLCOTT], in his remarks a few moments ago, thought proper to call attention to the fact that the newspapers of the country were carried by the Post-Office Department for 1 cent a pound, and he stated that that was the cause of the deficit in the Post-Office Department. He further stated that this fact could not be iterated and reiterated too often. I suppose he meant that therein was the keynote and the sole cause of the deficit in the Post-Office Department, and that it was the patriotic duty of Senators to continue to iterate and reiterate that statement and call attention to the cause of the deficit.

Mr. President, the fact is that the same newspapers are carried by the express companies for one-half cent a pound. If the express companies can carry this second-class matter for one-half cent a pound, why is it that the Post-Office Department can not make a profit by carrying them at 1 cent a pound? That is a fact which ought to be iterated and reiterated, and which can not be spoken of too often.

The trouble is, as has been shown in this Chamber a number of times, that we pay between 5 and 6 cents a pound to the transportation companies for the carriage of second-class matter, for which we charge 1 cent. But why do we pay 5 or 6 cents a pound for transporting this matter when the express companies, who pay 40 per cent of their business to the railroads, can carry it for one-half cent a pound? When the express companies charge one-half cent a pound, 40 per cent of that amount goes to the railroad companies and only 60 per cent to the express companies. That is, the railroads get one-fifth of a cent a pound on newspapers when carried by express.

For the very same matter on the same train the Government is charged by the railroads 5 and 6 cents a pound. That is a fact which the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads ought to have spoken of; and it is a fact that can not be iterated and reiterated too often by those who represent the interests of the Government, and who want to increase the efficiency of the Post-Office Department instead of crippling it.

Mr. President, this is the cause of the deficit. The truth ought to be told. The Government and the public are being robbed in the interests of the railroads and the express companies.

I would not have referred to this matter at this time had not the chairman of the committee gone out of his way to make a statement which, in my judgment, grossly misrepresents the facts.

Mr. President, we have been told many times during the last month about the great offense or crime of certain newspapers in bringing on this war against Spain. I have heard it since this war began and before. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Wolcott] has just aired again his grievance against these papers. I do not stand here now as the champion of any newspaper, but I have heard it said again and again that certain newspapers were the cause of this war, and then I have heard those newspapers reflected upon and criticised and called "yellow journals."

Mr. President, if those newspapers are the cause of the war, is it anything to their discredit? Do not the facts justify the war? Did not these so-called "yellow journals" first give us the facts? When those who are criticising those newspapers as "yellow journals" were trying to excuse Spain, and lay the blame upon Captain Sigstee and the officers of our own Navy, it was the "yellow journals" who were telling the truth. Those papers were the only ones that were giving us the facts. They were ahead of the President and the War and Navy Departments of our Government. They were ridiculed and denounced; they were accused of being liars and slanderers, but they were unearthing the facts, and it may be that we never should have gotten the truth otherwise. I do not charge that; but they were in the field first, and they did tell the truth. When the Navy Department was insisting that the destruction of the Maine was from an internal explosion, it was these papers that told us the shocking truths about the conditions in Cuba, when certain powerful agencies were trying to suppress the truth. This is a righteous war; and if the so-called "yellow journals" are responsible for it, it is greatly to their credit. It is a proof of their Americanism.

If they are responsible for the war, it was because they called to our attention and to the attention of the country the fact that the Maine was blown up and our brave sailors murdered by treachery in a friendly harbor; and that, too, at a time when, I am sorry to say, some Senators were denying the truth as a libel on Spain.

Mr. President, those so-called "yellow journals" may have their faults, but it seems that it was not until they unearthed the truth about the horrible butchery and starvation in Cuba and the blackest treachery in the destruction of the Maine that they became odious to a certain class of persons who have been attacking them ever since. Yes, there is journalism and journalism, and some of it may be yellow; and there is oratory and oratory, and some of that, too, may be yellow.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, this provision affecting the stamp tax upon goods transported by express companies requires that a receipt or other evidence shall be used for each shipment. The Senator from Rhode Island says that he and the Senator from Iowa assured the newspaper people that that meant that all the bundles sent out at any one time over a particular railroad might be included in a general bundle, and that the express agent might open that one bundle and distribute the several bundles contained in it along the road at the points of their particular destination.

Mr. ALDRICH. I made no such general statement as the Senator from Kentucky seems to think. I stated that under the conditions which I described in detail, in my opinion, clearly one stamp would be sufficient, because it would be a single shipment. A Cincinnati newspaper publisher, for instance, sends to the Kentucky Central Line a bundle of newspapers marked "Kentucky Central Line." They receive it, and they will have to give only one receipt, because it would be only one shipment.

If they were sending to forty or fifty people and the company were to become responsible for the delivery to those forty or fifty people, then undoubtedly forty or fifty stamps would have to be placed upon the bundles; but in the case to which I have referred—which was the case described by those gentlemen, and which is the usual case, and that which covers all their shipments substantially—I am myself satisfied that my construction of the law that only one stamp would be required is the correct one.

Mr. LINDSAY. The Kentucky Central line is not a newspaper agency. The Kentucky Central Line is a railroad transportation company carrying express matter for an express company. If the papers shipped from Cincinnati by that line go to Lexington, and they stop at Paris, at Cynthiana, at Falmouth, and at all intermediate points, do I understand the Senator to say that these fifteen or twenty packages intended to be distributed along the line of that railway may be inclosed in one general package, directed to the Kentucky Central Railway, and then distributed by the express agent and treated only as one bundle?

Mr. ALDRICH. Unquestionably, if the railroad or express company assume no responsibility for their delivery. The papers are received by the express company into the baggage car of the company without any obligation and without any mark stating where they are going. It seems to me, under those circumstances, that there can be no doubt but that would be the construction.

Mr. LINDSAY. If that be true, then the express company can receive any other matter in the same way. For instance, a shipment of goods over that line on any particular train to be distributed at a half dozen points may be included in one bundle and have only one stamp, and the express company may undertake to distribute it in the same way.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is a good lawyer and understands the language of statutes very well.

Mr. LINDSAY. I only want to get at the interpretation.

Mr. ALLISON. I will ask the Senator to interpret it himself, and that is what I rose for. Beginning in line 20, on page 41, I ask the Senator to interpret this phraseology:

It shall be the duty of every railroad or steamboat company, carrier, express company, or corporation or person whose occupation is to act as such, to issue to the shipper or consignee, or his agent, or person tendering goods for transportation, a bill of lading, etc.

The consignor is the newspaper publisher or company. Who is the consignee if it is not the carrier itself, under the situation as explained by the Senator from Rhode Island? Here is a shipment addressed to the Kentucky Central Railroad Company, if you choose, by the consignor.

That company is the consignee or the person to whom this bill of lading is issued. That bill of lading, manifest, or whatever you term it, must have a stamp upon it. Now, where is the provision of this bill which requires that company to issue a bill of lading on its own responsibility, except the responsibility involved in the receiving of that shipment of newspapers? I can see no possible way by which the construction that is given by the Senator from Rhode Island can be evaded or avoided. The consignor or the shipper is the newspaper company, and the person to whom it is shipped is the railroad company.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would suggest to my colleague on the committee that they could give no other bill of lading than that, because the newspapers are delivered to the railroad company all in one bundle and have no other mark except "The Kentucky Central Railroad."

Mr. LINDSAY. That is a very ingenious method of stating the proposition; but the railroad company is not the consignee at all.

Mr. ALLISON. Who is, then?

Mr. LINDSAY. The railroad company is the carrier, and the party to whom the goods are shipped is the consignee.

Mr. ALLISON. They are not shipped to anybody.

Mr. LINDSAY. They are shipped to somebody. Let us see—

Mr. ALLISON. The newspaper people said they were not.

Mr. LINDSAY. Let us see if they are not. A package is put up for a news dealer in Lexington, a package for a news dealer at Cynthiana, or Paris, or Falmouth, and they are all put into one general bundle. That general bundle is directed to the railroad company. The railroad company is not the consignee. Nothing is shipped to the railroad company. The goods are delivered to the railroad company to be carried by the railroad company to the various consignees and delivered to them. If the railroad company undertakes to put all these bundles in one and to issue only one receipt, and then open that bundle and deliver out to half a dozen persons, the railroad company will be defrauding the revenue and will be liable under this bill to be punished therefor.

The truth is that each shipment is to be evidenced by a receipt. The bill says:

It shall be the duty of every railroad or steamboat company, carrier, express company, or corporation or person whose occupation is to act as such, to issue to the shipper or consignee, or his agent, or person tendering goods for transportation, a bill of lading, manifest, or other evidence of receipt and forwarding for each shipment received for carriage and transportation, etc.

A shipment 20 miles out is not a shipment to another point 40 miles out, nor a shipment to another point 60 miles out, nor a shipment to another point 100 miles out. Each one of these shipments is a different shipment, and you can not disguise the fact.

If the newspaper people have gone away from Washington satisfied with these representations, then they are resting upon a false hope, because no court will ever concede the act to mean any such thing as that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator permit me to say that I entirely agree with him in his construction of the law? I desire to say, also, as it may possibly influence his argument, that though there may be sixty or more packages of newspapers in one bundle, yet under the contention which is made they would only pay a tax of 1 cent, instead of a tax being paid upon each particular package as a separate shipment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Suppose a large dry goods house in Cincinnati desires to send to Paris, or to any point upon the Kentucky Central Railroad, a large number of bundles to be delivered either by a local express company or by their own agent, and puts them all into one package, would it be an evasion of the law, or would there be any defrauding on the part of the railroad company if they only affixed one stamp to the bill of lading or receipt given for the shipment?

Mr. LINDSAY. If a merchant in Cincinnati desires to ship to his own agent in Paris—

Mr. ALDRICH. That is exactly what the newspaper proprietor does. The railroad company is its own agent. They get nothing for the distribution. They do it for the public good, I suppose, or some other patriotic purpose, but they get nothing for this delivery, and they are not responsible for it. They are acting for themselves instead of being anybody else's agent.

Mr. LINDSAY. But if the railroad company or the express company, as the agent of the shipper, should do that, it would be a clear and palpable evasion of the law. You can not convert the carrier into an agent in order to escape the payment of this stamp duty. If you can do that for the benefit of the newspapers, then the merchant can convert the carrier into his agent, and he can ship sixty packages of the most valuable goods in his establishment to be delivered at sixty points along the line of the railroad and pay only one stamp. The law was not intended to enable anybody to take such an advantage as that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Kentucky seriously argue that a newspaper proprietor or anybody else would deliver goods to an express company or a railroad company, and, in order to save a cent, relieve that railroad company of responsibility for the carriage of the goods?

Mr. LINDSAY. I am only commenting upon your interpretation of the statute which you have yourself drawn, and I am attempting to show that the interpretation is palpably wrong. If the newspapers ought to be relieved at all, let us relieve them by an express exemption, rather than by a forced interpretation, which no court will ever accept.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I hope the Senator will amend his proposition. This hundred pounds is an absolute exemption. Let him amend the proposition without limitation, and let us take a vote upon it. I am willing to take the sense of the Senate upon that.

Mr. LINDSAY. I do not want to make it without limitation.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to disturb the Senator; but the amendment proposed by the Senator operates to absolutely exempt newspapers. If that is the sense of the Senate, I am perfectly willing that it shall go into the bill as proposed.

Mr. LINDSAY. There is one other point I desire to turn my attention to, and that is the point made by the Senator from Colorado, that the United States mail will carry all these papers very much cheaper than they can be carried by express, but that the newspapers resort to the express companies.

Mr. BACON. It is cheaper by the express companies.

Mr. LINDSAY. It is cheaper to the express companies, but not cheaper to the United States. The cheapness is to the shipper. I understand that the shipper can ship all such goods as those at a cent a pound, and that that is cheaper than it would be by express, but that they resort to the express in order to save time.

I have understood all the while about this class of mail matter that it costs the Government three or four times as much to carry it as the postage amounts to. Then, if we will so arrange this stamp tax as to take away the advantage of shipping by the express companies, if we will take away the advantage of saving time by an onerous and annoying stamp tax, we will force all these matters into the United States mail, and where we get $1 for carrying it, we will expend $3. If we have got this much out of the mail, and thereby save to the extent these newspapers are shipped by the express companies, it seems to me we ought not to drive it back, and thereby incur this unnecessary burden so far as the mail carriage is concerned.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I am not so anxious to save a penny here or there by taxing the newspapers. The press of the country, in my judgment, is willing to take its fair share of the burden; but I do beg Senators not to compel the newspapers to go into the mails in all these cases, for the result of it will be very considerable delay in the reception of the morning papers in all the towns within a hundred miles of the office of publication. The newspapers can frequently get the rapid express train an hour or two hours before the mail train goes out, and they do not like to lose subscribers, as they inevitably would in this way.

I say I do not care so much about the penny or two of taxation, but I do most seriously object to delaying the big bundle by requiring it to be opened and a penny stamp, or something of that sort, stuck on each one of the separate packages and a voucher taken for it. Anybody can see in a moment when a wagon goes down, as it does very frequently, on a run to meet one of these trains—I speak of what I have seen and helped to do—it can not stop then, and it can not start any earlier, as there are certain hours for going to press and certain work to be done. An edition is got out exactly at 4 o'clock for a variety of reasons. They can not spend ten minutes pasting and taking receipts and all that sort of thing. It is done like lightning.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, this discussion has called my attention to the possibility of the misconstruction of the meaning of the word "shipment" in the second line on page 42 of the pending bill, and I should like to have the interpretation of the Senator in charge of the bill of that one word. I will read it and explain why I ask it:

Express and freight: It shall be the duty of every railroad or steamboat company, carrier, express company, or corporation, or person whose occupation is to act as such, to issue to the shipper or consignor, or his agent, or person tendering goods for transportation, a bill of lading, manifest, or other evidence of receipt and forwarding for each shipment received for carriage and transportation.

Now, in my country we are shipping peaches, or will begin next week, and those peaches are packed in crates, say six baskets, and they are bundled into the refrigerator car until the carload is made up. Does the word "shipment" mean that a bill of lading shall be given to the shipper for the entire shipment at one time, one receipt, or to give a separate bill of lading for each package?

Mr. WOLCOTT. One for the whole shipment.

Mr. TILLMAN. For the carload?

Mr. WOLCOTT. One cent.

Mr. TILLMAN. At one time, one bill of lading suffices.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; 1 cent.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wanted to know because of the interpretation which the Senator from Kentucky has applied to newspapers, where the railroad receives a package of newspapers and distributes them along the line itself.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If it is a hundred carloads of coal, it is 1 cent; if it is one box, it is 1 cent; large or small, whatever the shipment may be, it is 1 cent.

Mr. LINDSAY. If it is all consigned to the same person at the same place?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. LINDSAY. But if a carload of peaches is consigned to fifty different people living at different places, then each separate shipment will have to pay the stamp tax and take a separate receipt for it.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I do not think there can be any doubt about the rule of law which will apply to a case of this kind. If the newspaper puts up a lot of packages of papers to be delivered at the same place but to different individuals, or to be delivered at different places to different individuals, and all those packages are put into one big package, there can not be the slightest doubt, under the language employed in the pending bill, that each one of the separate packages would have to be stamped, for the railroad company is not the consignee any more than the Senator from Colorado or the Senator from Montana would be the consignee were I to ship to him for the use and benefit and to be delivered to the Senator from Illinois or the Senator from Iowa certain packages. In every one of those cases in law the consignee would be the real party in interest and the person receiving it for distribution would be the agent, respectively, of those parties, and I do not believe there is a court in the land that would hold to the contrary. In fact, the precedents are that way.

Mr. President, I placed my objection to this upon an altogether broader ground. I do not believe it good policy in a Government sustained by popular suffrage, and whose foundation rests upon popular intelligence, to impose a tax upon any of the means of conveying intelligence or useful information. You virtually lay a tax upon education. You might as well say that every child in the land who is compelled to have a schoolbook, and every individual who reads any book, must pay a tax upon the schoolbook or upon the work to be read. I believe everything in the form of newspapers and magazines, in their different forms, should escape taxation.

I understand, and we all realize the fact, that newspapers and books are exactly like men. Some are good, some are bad; some are useful, some are harmful; but a man is not required to read yellow literature unless he wants to. He is not required to read a poor book, an indifferent book, unless he desires to, any more than he is compelled to associate with a bad man. He has his choice of literature to read. It is the absolute freedom, not the license, but the absolute, dignified, unrestricted freedom of the press of the country, including the daily and weekly papers and the serials, upon which the safety of our country depends; and however much we may deprecate, as at time we do, the unwarranted license of bad men who control newspapers, that is no argument that we should place a restriction upon papers calculated to convey useful information to the masses of the people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY].

Mr. SPOONER. Let it be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after the words "one cent," in line 7, page 42, of the reprint, the following proviso:

Provided, That no stamp tax shall be required on any bundle or package of newspapers wholly or partially printed and intended for general circulation and weighing not more than 100 pounds.

Mr. LINDSAY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. GORMAN (when Mr. GRAY's name was called). I was requested to announce a pair between the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], who appears to be absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. SULLIVAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McLAURIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], and wish to withdraw my vote.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire again to announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—47.

Allen,	Daniel,	Martin,	Rosch,
Bacon,	Foraker,	Mason,	Shoup,
Baker,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Spooner,
Bate,	Gorman,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Berry,	Hansbrough,	Money,	Teller,
Butler,	Harris,	Morgan,	Thurston,
Caffery,	Hawley,	Murphy,	Tillman,
Cannon,	Heitfeld,	Nelson,	Turley,
Chandler,	Lindsay,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Clay,	McBride,	Perkins,	White,
Cockrell,	McEnery,	Pettus,	Wilson,
Cullom,	Mantie,	Rawlins,

NAYS—31.

Aldrich,	Frye,	McMillan,	Wellington,
Allison,	Gear,	Morrill,	Westmore,
Carter,	Hale,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott,
Davis,	Hoar,	Platt, Conn.
Deboe,	Kyle,	Platt, N. Y.
Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Quay,

NOT VOTING—21.

Barrows,	Hanna,	Penrose,	Turner,
Chilton,	Jones, Ark.	Pritchard,	Vest,
Clark,	Jones, Nev.	Proctor,	Warren,
Elkins,	Kenney,	Sewell,
Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Smith,
Gray,	Mallory,	Sullivan,

So Mr. LINDSAY's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer what I send to the desk as a separate section.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as an additional section the following:

An annual tax of 1 per cent on the assessed value thereof is hereby imposed on all yachts owned or used by citizens of the United States or in the waters of the United States.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TILLMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as an additional section the following:

That on and after the — day of —, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the following articles imported from foreign countries the following duties, namely:

On teas of all kinds, 15 cents per pound.

Mr. GEAR. I move to strike out "15" and insert "10." I think the proposed rate of tariff is too high.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina as amended.

Mr. ALLEN and Mr. NELSON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be stated again.

The Secretary again read the amendment, as follows:

That on and after the — day of —, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the following articles imported from foreign countries the following duties, namely:

On teas of all kinds, 10 cents per pound.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest that there should be a date inserted in the amendment. I suggest to the Senator the 1st of July.

Mr. TILLMAN. Any day. I thought it would go into effect on the day when the law itself went into effect.

Mr. COCKRELL. No date is necessary.

Mr. TILLMAN. Say the 1st of July.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be from the passage of the act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be modified as indicated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to fill the blank by inserting "the 1st day of July."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON], but I am told that he is in favor of the amendment and I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WILSON. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. The question has come up rather suddenly, and I am not advised how he would vote on this question.

Mr. WARREN. I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. I am informed that he would probably vote "nay" if he were here. As I should vote "yea," I withhold my vote under the circumstances.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—38.

Butler,	Gorman,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Caffery,	Harris,	Money,	Teller,
Cannon,	Heitfeld,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Carter,	Jones, Ark.	Murphy,	Turley,
Chandler,	Jones, Nev.	Perkins,	Vest,
Chilton,	Kyle,	Pettus,	Westmore,
Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Pritchard,	White,
Elkins,	McBride,	Rawlins,	Wolcott,
Foraker,	McLaurin,	Rosch,
Gear,	Mills,	Sewell,

NAYS—32.

Allen,	Clay,	Hanna,	Pettigrew,
Allison,	Cullom,	Hansbrough,	Platt, Conn.
Bacon,	Daniel,	Hawley,	Platt, N. Y.
Baker,	Davis,	Hoar,	Quay,
Bate,	Deboe,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Berry,	Fairbanks,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Barrows,	Frye,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Clark,	Gallinger,	Nelson,	Wellington,

NOT VOTING—19.

Aldrich,	McEnery,	Pasco,	Thurston,
Faulkner,	Mallory,	Penrose,	Turner,
Gray,	Mantie,	Proctor,	Warren,
Hale,	Martin,	Smith,	Wilson,
Kenney,	Mason,	Sullivan,

So Mr. TILLMAN's amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 70, after line 4, insert:

Every contract, combination in the form of a trust, or association or corporation whose effect is to restrict the quantity of production or increase the price of any article, or any conspiracy in restraint of trade, shall be deemed a trust within the provisions of this act.

There shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of 5 per cent upon the value of all articles manufactured by a trust as above described.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall make all the necessary rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this act, and the tax shall be collected by the Secretary of the Treasury; and any person connected with or in the employ of any trust as herein described, who shall sell any article, the property of said trust, upon which the tax has not been paid, shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned for not less than one nor more than five years.

And all goods sold without the payment of tax as herein provided shall be seized and sold, and the proceeds of such sale turned into the Treasury of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, of course the object of my amendment is not so much to obtain revenue as to destroy trusts. Trusts have grown up covering almost every article of manufacture in this country, combinations in restraint of trade for the purpose of fixing the price, with the object of plundering the consumer. We have undertaken to reach two of these organizations by placing a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent upon the manufacturers and refiners of sugar and oil, but the imposition of that tax is not sufficient to affect those two great combinations.

One-fourth of 1 per cent upon the products of the sugar trust will be a tax of about $400,000, and about one hundredth of 1 per cent per pound upon sugar, while we give them a discriminating duty of more than one-tenth of a cent upon all refined sugar. Therefore the tax which we have already levied against the sugar trust amounts to nothing. It does not even encourage the independent refiner. It accomplishes no purpose except to secure $400,000 of revenue.

If the burden which I propose, 2 cents a pound, does not dissolve the trust, it at least gives an opportunity to the independent refiner to compete with them in the market. In my opinion it will dissolve and destroy the trust and restore again competition in this trade. The fundamental principle of our civilization is based upon competition, and when that is destroyed the ultimate result of our civilization must be either plutocracy or socialism. In the past every nation that has gone down has gone down because the result has been plutocracy. If we are to continue these trade combinations which destroy absolutely the very fundamental law of our civilization, the choice with us must be that which I believe we already have, the continuance of plutocracy or absolute socialism. I am in favor of neither, but I am in favor of socialism before I am in favor of plutocracy.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, is the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota amendable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I offer the following as an addition to the amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to amend the amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have not yielded the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs the Senator's pardon; he thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I beg the Senator's pardon, too. I have been listening attentively to him, and I am not willing to interrupt any flow of eloquence in which he may be engaged, but I had certainly supposed he had concluded.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow my amendment to be read?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, a 2 per cent tax upon the gross product of the sugar trust will yield a revenue of $3,200,000, which is certainly not a burdensome tax. I believe it would drive the sugar trust out of existence. I hope it would drive it out of existence; I hope it would destroy it; but in proportion to their profits, Mr. President, it is not a burdensome tax. In the testimony before the committee three or four years ago, perhaps two years ago, there is the evidence of Mr. Havemeyer, which I shall read. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] asked him the following question:

And what difference does it make for the consumers in this country in a year, in your judgment?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. It has been in three years past three-eighths of a cent more on every pound they ate, as against doing business at a loss.

Senator ALLEN. And that would be about how much, in round numbers?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. It is a large sum in the aggregate.

Senator ALLEN. How many millions?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. I should say it was close to $25,000,000 in three years.

In other words, as a result of the combination, as a result of the trust in sugar, they were able in three years to take $25,000,000 out of the pockets of the people of this country. My amendment would impose a tax upon the trust of $3,200,000 a year.

I know that those who argue whenever we try to put a tax upon corporations that it must come out of the consumers say that this trust will immediately add the same to the price. But, Mr. President, there are independent refineries, and more will be built, and it will give them a chance to compete. Although they may raise the price somewhat, I do not believe they can raise it to an extent which will make the consumer pay more than a small proportion of this tax.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. The difficulty with me, sympathizing with the general purposes of the Senator, is to know how the assessors of these taxes can ascertain whether the merchandise, the personal property, to be taxed is the subject of a trust or the result of a trust. That is the difficulty. When we pass a law that directs our Treasury officials to collect a tax, the duty which they have to perform must be plain and specific. It must not be indefinite. The duty that is imposed upon them must not be impossible of execution. Now, how can they tell whether the property which they are expected to collect the tax upon is a trust property or is not a trust property? That is what troubles me. I shall be glad to have the Senator explain it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Well, Mr. President, there are two arguments always used when we do not want to tax a corporation or a trust. One is that the tax will be placed by the corporations upon the consumer. The other is that we are legislating so that we shall have a lawsuit. We anticipate a lawsuit. In fact, the Standard Oil trust have already said that they will not pay the tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent; that it is unconstitutional. Although they divided in dividends, I understand, $31,000,000 last year, still they insist that they will not pay even the $400,000 which would be their share of the tax under the amendment already adopted. Is it any reason for refusing to impose this tax because we fear some court will refuse to enforce it?

If the Senator from New Hampshire is satisfied with that argument, I am not. If the provision which I have presented does not to his mind accomplish the object, then I shall be very glad to have him present an amendment which will perfect it in that particular.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am willing to try it, and therefore I offer my amendment to be added to that of the Senator from South Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield the floor?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I yield the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be read:

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the amendment the following:

And in addition to the foregoing there shall be imposed on the annual income of all plutocrats an excise duty of 2 per cent.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to hear the Senator from New Hampshire explain that amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. We will let the Treasury officials do the best they can. They shall ascertain what articles of commerce are dealt in by trusts, and they shall tax them. They shall ascertain as well as they can who are plutocrats and what their income is, and they shall tax that 2 per cent. Now, they shall do the best they can, and if the courts stop them they lose so much money, and we must borrow it until we can impose a tax that will raise the money.

I am perfectly willing, Mr. President, if my amendment is adopted, to vote for the proposition of the Senator from South Dakota and let the tax collector and the courts fight it out. If we get some money, it will be so much. If we do not get any money, somehow or other the money that is necessary to win military victories over the Kingdom of Spain will be forthcoming; Senators need not fear.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. PETTIGREW. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The Secretary again read Mr. PETTIGREW's amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire simply to point out that this amendment punishes the innocent purchaser of all the sugar or any other article manufactured by a trust in this country. It punishes the innocent purchaser by seizing and selling at the Government expense the article which they have innocently purchased. I think it is the most unjust proposition toward innocent people, whom the Senator wishes to protect, that can be possibly devised.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to amend the amendment by making it one and a half per cent instead of 2 per cent.

The SECRETARY. Amend the amendment by striking out the word "five" in the sixth line and inserting "one and one-half," so as to read:

Every contract, combination in the form of a trust, or association or corporation whose effect is to restrict the quantity of production or increase the price of any article, or any conspiracy in restraint of trade, shall be deemed a trust within the provisions of this act.

There shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of 1½ per cent upon the value of all articles manufactured by a trust as above described.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall make all the necessary rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this act, and the tax shall be collected by the Secretary of the Treasury; and any person connected with or in the employ of any trust as herein described, who shall sell any article, the property of said trust, upon which the tax has not been paid, shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned for not less than one nor more than five years.

And all goods sold without the payment of tax as herein provided shall be seized and sold, and the proceeds of such sale turned into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask a question. We now have upon the statute books a law which makes trusts unlawful. If we should now tax them, would we not make them lawful?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SULLIVAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—years 24, nays 45; as follows:

YEAS—24.
Allen,	Chilton,	McEnery,	Rawlins,
Bate,	Clay,	McLaurin,	Roach,
Berry,	Cockrell,	Money,	Teller,
Butler,	Harris,	Pasco,	Turley,
Cannon,	Heitfeld,	Pettigrew,	Turpie,
Chandler,	Jones, Ark.	Pettus,	White,

NAYS—45.
Aldrich,	Foraker,	Lindsay,	Shoup,
Allison,	Frye,	Lodge,	Spooner,
Bacon,	Gallinger,	McBride,	Stewart,
Burrows,	Gear,	McMillan,	Tillman,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vest,
Carter,	Hale,	Nelson,	Wellington,
Cullom,	Hanna,	Perkins,	Wetmore,
Daniel,	Hansbrough,	Platt, Conn.	Wilson,
Davis,	Hawley,	Platt, N. Y.	Wolcott,
Deboe,	Hoar,	Pritchard,
Elkins,	Jones, Nev.	Quay,
Fairbanks,	Kyle,	Sewell,

NOT VOTING—20.

Baker,	Mallory,	Mitchell,	Smith,
Clark,	Mantle,	Morrill,	Sullivan,
Faulkner,	Martin,	Murphy,	Thurston,
Gray,	Mason,	Penrose,	Turner,
Kenney,	Mills,	Proctor,	Warren,

So Mr. PETTIGREW's amendment was rejected.

Mr. DANIEL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 60, after line 25.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert on page 60, after line 25, the following:

SEC. — Every person, firm, company, association, or corporation in the United States doing business for profit, and whose gross annual receipts on such business shall not exceed $10,000, shall pay an annual license tax of $1, and if the gross annual receipts in such business exceed $10,000 and are less than $100,000 shall pay an annual license tax of $10. If the gross annual receipts of such person, firm, company, association, or corporation exceed $100,000, such person, firm, company, association, or corporation shall pay an annual license tax equivalent to one fourth of 1 per cent of such gross receipts in excess of $100,000; Provided, That this section shall not apply to banks nor to any other person, firm, company, association, or corporation that is subjected to excise tax under sections 1, 2, and 3 of this act, nor to religious, educational, benevolent, eleemosynary, or cemetery corporations; municipal or other public corporations; fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations operating upon the lodge system and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, and other benefits to the members of such societies, orders, or associations, and dependents of such members; building and loan associations which make loans only to their shareholders; nor shall corporations which buy and sell raw or unmanufactured domestic agricultural products be required to pay any tax with respect to such dealings except as otherwise provided in Schedule A of this act.

Mr. DANIEL. I will briefly explain the amendment. It has been framed to meet the objections which have been made in the course of the debate in the Senate. It does not discriminate between corporations, persons, or firms. It taxes all equally. It has been framed also to meet the objection that we are singling out certain corporations. If that amendment were adopted, I should move to strike out those which have been singled out.

This applies to everybody, everywhere, and to all businesses; it is a distinctively diffusive tax, spreading all through the country to all classes of people, small in amount, and it will enable us to relieve the excessive taxation to some degree which has been placed through the agency of stamps upon the druggists of the country and perhaps some of those that are to be placed on documents and other matters, where it would be peculiarly annoying. There is no exemption whatsoever, but the provision is such that the small and struggling corporations and the small and the struggling people may not feel the heavy hand of taxation.

There is a scale of tax, first, only of $1 up to $10,000 of receipts and $10 up to $100,000, and then those who are taxed above are not taxed on the hundred thousand dollars. So I think the amendment meets the various phases of objection which have been urged in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. In line 10, on page 49 of the reprint of the bill, before the word "fire" in parenthesis, I move to strike out the word "and;" and after the word "fire" to insert "except farmers' purely local cooperative companies and associations."

That is, I will say to the Senator from Iowa, simply to conform to the fire-insurance features of this bill, to the amendment made the other day. The proposed amendment is in similar language.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, on page 49 of the reprint of the bill, it is proposed to strike out the word "and" before the word "fire;" after the word "fire" to insert a semicolon instead of a colon, and then to insert "except farmers' purely local cooperative companies and associations."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer what I send to the desk as an independent section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following as an independent section:

SEC. — That so much of the act of August 27, A. D. 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," as relates to the levying and collection of an income tax be, and the same is hereby revived and reenacted; and it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to collect the income tax therein imposed, beginning with the fiscal year commencing the 1st day of July, 1898; and all provisions of said act necessary and proper to carry out the purpose hereof and to administer said law are hereby revived and reenacted.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk, to come in as an independent section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as an independent section the following:

SEC. — That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and empowered to issue, in exchange for coin, or to pay for salaries and other dues from the United States, noninterest-bearing Treasury notes of a less denomination than $50, payable on demand by the assistant treasurers of the United States at Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, not exceeding in amount $200,000,000, which Treasury notes shall be a full legal tender for all debts, public and private, to the same extent and in the same manner as Treasury notes now in existence.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not know under the liberal rule generally recognized by the Senate whether I would now be permitted to offer an amendment which I desire to offer. It would be irregular, I recognize, of course, after the amendment which was changed upon the suggestion of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator had better wait until the bill is reported to the Senate. It will be in the Senate in a moment.

Mr. BACON. Of course, I can do that, if desired.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think that will be better.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendments be voted upon in bulk?

Several SENATORS. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole will be regarded as concurred in. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendments are concurred in. The bill is now in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to offer a substitute for section 28, providing for the issue of bonds.

Mr. ALDRICH. I believe that amendment has been read. If so, I suggest that we vote on it without having any further reading of it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the amendment has been read, and I suggest that we vote on it without any further reading.

Mr. CHANDLER. Senators may have changed their minds since the amendment was read the first time, and certainly it ought to be read before it is finally voted upon.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no doubt it will be read before it is finally adopted.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Rhode Island will concede the fact that this bill ought not to be passed hastily, and no proposition which the Senator from Rhode Island presents ought to be voted on without being read at the time it is voted on.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not making any proposition myself.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from North Carolina, as I understand, proposes a substitute for section 28.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, for section 28.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I desire to move to amend section 28. I presume the amendment I propose to section 28 ought to be voted on before the substitute is voted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's amendment will be first in order.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out, in line 19, on page 76 of the reprint bill, the words "after ten years from the date of their issue;" so that these bonds will be payable at the option of the Government at any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated. The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend, in section 28, page 76, line 19, after the words "United States," by striking out the words "after ten years from the date of their issue."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The effect of this amendment is to make the bonds payable at the option of the Government at any time after they are issued, instead of being payable ten years after date. By the provision as it stands now the bonds are payable after ten years from their date, at the pleasure of the Government, and finally payable in twenty years. This amendment will make them payable at the pleasure of the Government at any time after their issue; so that the Government will not be compelled to wait ten years before paying these bonds, or be compelled to buy them at a premium. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, there is another view of this case, on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to strike out the provision for the payment after a period of ten years, that it will disturb the business of the national banks very seriously if they can not make a permanent investment in these bonds so as to carry on their operations. I think, inasmuch as we are here for the accommodation of the national banks, when this bill is to be passed upon their demand, the Senator from Arkansas, perhaps, had better look around and see what effect it is going to have on them.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We will consider that afterwards.

Mr. MORGAN. I will vote for the amendment upon the ground that it will prevent the national banks, or have some tendency to prevent the national banks, from absorbing these bonds when they get them in their vaults or in their hands, and commence their banking operations upon them. If we can call them within four or five years instead of ten years, the Democracy of the United States will be very diligent in order to call them in, and in order to get rid of the incubus this bill is about to put on us, and let the people of the United States get free from this bonded indebtedness that is now being imposed upon them.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, there are two sufficient reasons why the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas should not prevail. In the first place, between now and the expiration of ten years' time there will be bonds expiring bearing a higher rate of interest, which must be paid by the Government, or should be paid, consulting its own interests, and which will absorb any possible surplus funds we may have within that period. The second reason is that these bonds can not be sold, probably, at par unless they have a certain definite time to run.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, yes, they can.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Government has the option to pay these bonds, it is not bound to pay them unless it is to the interest of the Government to do so. But what this provision will guard against is the sale of these bonds at par, which will be done as soon as this bill passes; and if the Government undertakes to pay one of them, it will have to pay 120 or 125 to get it. This will give the Government the option to buy these bonds at any time it pleases.

I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas, to save time, to insert in his amendment, in line 18, in place of the word "coin," the words "lawful money." This is to be a popular loan, and there is no question about the patriotism of the people and their willingness to take the bonds.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think it better that it should remain as it is. The Senator from North Carolina and I believe in paying these bonds in coin; I do, at any rate; and I believe coin ought to be the money of the United States—gold and silver.

Mr. STEWART. I would suggest that there will be no difficulty in selling these bonds at par if they are made receivable for Government dues. After the vote is taken, on the amendment I shall offer an amendment making them receivable for Government dues. There will be no difficulty about their being at par then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORMAN (when Mr. FAULKNER's name was called). I have been requested by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] to announce his pair on this vote with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. If the Senator from West Virginia were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired on this vote with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. He would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. If present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 31, nays 42; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Allen,	Cockrell,	Martin,	Stewart,
Bacon,	Daniel,	Mills,	Sullivan,
Bate,	Harris,	Money,	Teller,
Berry,	Helfeld,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Butler,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	Turley,
Cannon,	McEnery,	Pettus,	Turpie,
Chilton,	McLaurin,	Rawlins,	White,
Clay,	Mantle,	Roach,

NAYS—42.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Lindsay,	Pritchard,
Allison,	Foraker,	Lodge,	Quay,
Baker,	Frye,	McBride,	Sewell,
Burrows,	Gear,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Mason,	Spooner,
Carter,	Hale,	Morrill,	Thurston,
Chandler,	Hanna,	Murphy,	Wellington,
Clark,	Hansbrough,	Nelson,	Wetmore,
Davis,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Wolcott,
Deboe,	Hoar,	Platt, Conn.
Elkins,	Kyle,	Platt, N. Y.

NOT VOTING—16.

Cullom,	Jones, Nev.	Pasco,	Turner,
Faulkner,	Kenney,	Penrose,	Vest,
Gallinger,	Mallory,	Proctor,	Warren,
Gray,	Mitchell,	Smith,	Wilson,

So the amendment of Mr. JONES of Arkansas was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move, in line 19, page 76, to strike out "ten" and insert "three;" so as to make the bonds payable three years after date of issuance, at the option of the Government, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PASCO (after having voted in the affirmative). I see that the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] is not present. I am paired with him, and therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 42; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Allen,	Cockrell,	Martin,	Stewart,
Bacon,	Harris,	Mills,	Sullivan,
Bate,	Helfeld,	Money,	Teller,
Berry,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,	Tillman,
Butler,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,	Turley,
Cannon,	McEnery,	Pettus,	Turpie,
Chilton,	McLaurin,	Rawlins,	White,
Clay,	Mantle,	Roach,

NAYS—42.

Aldrich,	Elkins,	Hoar,	Platt, N. Y.
Allison,	Fairbanks,	Kyle,	Pritchard,
Baker,	Foraker,	Lindsay,	Sewell,
Burrows,	Frye,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Caffery,	Gallinger,	McBride,	Spooner,
Carter,	Gear,	McMillan,	Thurston,
Chandler,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Wellington,
Clark,	Hale,	Murphy,	Wetmore,
Cullom,	Hanna,	Nelson,	Wolcott,
Davis,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,
Deboe,	Hawley,	Platt, Conn.

NOT VOTING—16.

Daniel,	Mallory,	Penrose,	Turner,
Faulkner,	Mason,	Proctor,	Vest,
Gray,	Mitchell,	Quay,	Warren,
Kenney,	Pasco,	Smith,	Wilson,

So the amendment of Mr. JONES of Arkansas was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, yesterday when the Senate adopted an amendment providing for the coinage of the silver in the Treasury, offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], I gave notice that I should offer the provision which had been reported by the committee on the same subject, to take the place of it. After consultation with gentlemen associated with me on the committee, and others, I have concluded that I will not make the proposition, in view of the fact that the amendment of the Senator from Colorado provides for the coinage of all the silver in the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the Senator from North Carolina to withhold his amendment until I can offer an amendment and get action on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the amendment to that portion of the bill which the Senator from North Carolina proposes to strike out? If so, it is in order now.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out, on page 77, beginning in line 9, all after the word "allotted" to the end thereof, as follows:

And a sum not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent of the amount of the bonds herein authorized is hereby appropriated to pay the expense of preparing, advertising, issuing, and disposing of the same.

Under the proposal to issue $300,000,000 of bonds there is a direct appropriation of one and a half million dollars. If the proposition of the House to issue $500,000,000 of bonds should obtain in conference, there would be a direct appropriation of two and a half million dollars made absolutely, and it is impossible to conceive of an expenditure of so vast a sum in the preparation and issuance of bonds by the Treasury Department. It seems to me that the reason for striking out this clause is self-evident without argument. The appropriation of two and a half million dollars or one and a half million dollars for any such purpose is absurd upon its face.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that it may be stated again.

The SECRETARY. After the word "allotted," in line 9, page 77, it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the section, as follows:

And a sum not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent of the amount of the bonds herein authorized is hereby appropriated to pay the expense of preparing, advertising, issuing, and disposing of the same.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Secretary to read lines 5 and 6.

The Secretary read as follows:

That such bonds and certificates shall be issued at par, no commissions shall be allowed thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I think a quarter of 1 per cent would be ample.

Mr. TELLER. One-eighth is ample.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator to allow something in the way of expenses for the disposal of the bonds.

Mr. CANNON. I think no amount is necessary. The Treasury Department has under its control ample facilities for the printing of the bonds. There is no direct appropriation at this time necessary for that purpose, and the bonds can all be placed among the people of the United States absolutely without expense, as can be ascertained by public correspondence by any Senator present. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] sitting at my left suggests to me that the bonds can not be sent by express without expense. I have in my possession a letter from the Adams Express Company, directed to myself, which is as follows:

Replying to your inquiry of May 8: Understanding that it was the desire of the Government to solicit subscriptions to the new loan from all classes in all sections of the country, we tendered the Secretary of the Treasury the services of our agencies for that purpose, and we are informed that those services will be accepted.

We have communicated to the other express companies our action and have little doubt that they will display their patriotism in a similar manner.

I have in my possession a letter from the National Park Bank, of New York, tendering its free services to the Government for the placing of these bonds among the people. I have in my possession a letter from the New York Bank Note Company, showing that the expense of issuing 500,000 separate bonds by private concerns would be less than $100,000. It would appear that no appropriation whatever is necessary. It occurs to me that it is unwise at this time to place a floating amount, one and a half millions or two and a half millions, $750,000 or one and a quarter million dollars, at the disposal of the Treasury Department.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, in connection with what has just been stated by the Senator from Utah, I wish to call attention to an editorial in a recent issue of the New York Commercial. It is only a few lines, and I desire to read it. The absurdity of the proposition to provide a fund of a million and a half or two million and a half dollars for advertising these bonds, it seems to me, is shown when I read this paragraph:

Numbers of national banks have been applying to the Comptroller of the Currency in advance to have bank notes printed for them in anticipation of purchasing war bonds, by deposit of which the new notes will be secured. Charles G. Dawes, Comptroller of the Currency, said last week that the Bureau of Printing and Engraving was actively printing bank notes in anticipation of the demand. The applications have come from all sections of the country and the understanding is pretty general that bonds will eventually be issued.

This was a week ago.

Some of the local banks have been making arrangements to take bonds for themselves or their correspondents, and there have been shipments of currency to this city intended to pay for bonds. It was pointed out yesterday by a local bank officer that out-of-town banks will fare better by sending in their applications for bonds direct to Washington than by subscribing for them through their New York correspondents, as the loan is to be a popular one, which it will be the intention of the Government to have taken in all parts of the country.

So it seems that advertisement is not necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. There will be more or less expense, but certainly not one-half of 1 per cent. I agree with the Senator from Utah that this amount is larger than necessary; but it is in the discretion of the Secretary. However, I believe myself that these bonds will be taken by the people of the United States and that whatever expense is necessary for printing the bonds can be paid out of another fund, and therefore I am entirely content that the amendment of the Senator from Utah shall be adopted.

Mr. MORGAN. The article from the New York paper which the Senator from Arkansas has just read contains a statement of facts that no gentleman in this country has yet ventured to deny. I read that same paper here yesterday or the day before.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator called my attention to it nearly a week ago.

Mr. MORGAN. I called the Senator's attention to it nearly a week ago, as he states. Some person here in the Senate knows whether it is true or whether it is not true. The paper has asserted, and it is a very important statement, that these banks have swarmed in with their orders upon the Printing Bureau of the United States to have all their notes prepared in time to avail themselves of this issue of bonds. I have on two or three occasions, to-day and yesterday, made some observations on that subject which I think the Senate thought were unjustified, perhaps a little impatient criticism on my part; but it is a solemn fact, Mr. President, that these notes are now prepared and ready for issue to take up all these bonds. That is why I say that part of this bill is framed on the demand of the national banks.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am inclined to think that the editorial to which the Senator from Arkansas referred was published before the amendments reported from the committee, which perhaps may have been based more or less upon the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury that he did not think the people would take these bonds, and which absolutely required the Secretary of the Treasury to offer them generally everywhere at par, inviting bids and to accept bids first that are smallest in amount and the bids of individuals.

Mr. MORGAN. I am very glad that provision has been made, but the $300,000,000 of bonds authorized under this act and the $100,000,000 of interest-bearing Treasury notes, which are simply absurd on their face, will find their way into the national banks and are intended to find their way into the national banks. That is the purpose of the bill, and the national banks have no idea of relaxing their power over the Senate to permit them to do what ought to have been done for the war instead of furnishing an opportunity to the national banks for a great speculation in handling the war funds.

Now, sir, I have characterized this on this floor, and I intend to stand by the characterization until somebody brings proof that I am mistaken about the facts which have been here asserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is agreed to without objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let us have the amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the amendment has been read. Does the Senator desire to have it read again? It is a very long amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desired that it might be read, but the Senator from North Carolina has concluded to briefly state exactly what it is, and therefore, in order to expedite the business of the session, I hope that the reading may be omitted and that the Senator may briefly state what his amendment is, so that we shall all understand it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is right.

The amendment proposed by Mr. BUTLER is as follows:

Sec. —. That there be, and is hereby, established a system of postal savings banks, to be under the direction and supervision of the Postmaster-General and the Secretary of the Treasury in conformity to the provisions of this act.

Sec. —. That each and every post-office within the United States which is authorized to issue money orders, and such others as the Postmaster-General, in his discretion, may from time to time designate, are hereby declared to be postal savings bank offices to receive deposits and invest for or repay the same to the depositors or their legal representatives, as hereinafter provided: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, if he deems it necessary or more practical, establish at first postal savings banks only at the money-order offices of the first, second, and third classes, then extend the system as rapidly as practicable to all other post-offices named above.

Sec. —. That any person, including married women and minors (unless the parents or guardians of the latter shall file a written protest), may deposit and open an account at any one of such offices. Deposits of married women, or from a single woman who may afterwards marry, shall be kept as her sole and separate property, same as if she were single; and such deposit shall not be subject to the control nor be liable for the debts of her husband. Deposits may be made by husbands, payable to their wives or any member of their family. Parents may accumulate a fund for their growing children by depositing a sum of money for each, to be paid at some specified date or when each child becomes of age.

Sec. —. That at least $1 or a larger amount in multiples of 10 cents must be deposited before an account is opened with the person depositing the same, but 10 cents or multiples of the same may be deposited and credited in pass book after such account has been opened: Provided, That no one shall be permitted to deposit more than $1,000 for the first month and not more than $200 in any one calendar month thereafter: And provided further, That in order that smaller amounts may be saved to be deposited, any person may purchase from any such office, for 1 cent, a postal savings card, on which may be attached especially prepared adhesive stamps, to be known as "postal savings stamps," and when the stamps so attached amount to $1 or a larger amount in multiples of 10 cents, including the 1-cent postal savings card, may be presented to any such office as a deposit for opening an account; or when the stamps attached amount to 10 cents or any multiple of 10 cents, including the 1-cent postal savings card, it may be presented to the office where such person has an account as a deposit, but no stamps other than the specially prepared postal savings stamps shall be accepted as a deposit; and when such card and stamps thereon attached are redeemed by any postmaster he shall cancel the same. It is hereby made the duty of the Postmaster-General to prepare such postal savings cards and postal savings stamps of the denomination of 1 cent, 4 cents, 5 cents, and 10 cents, and keep them on sale at every postal savings bank office; and every such postal savings bank office shall be kept open for the transaction of business every day (Sundays and legal holidays excepted) during the usual business hours of the town or locality where such bank is located, or between such specific hours as the Postmaster-General may direct, and as late as 9 o'clock p. m. on at least two evenings in each week.

SEC. — That the postmaster of any such office shall upon the receipt of any such deposit for opening an account deliver to the depositor a postal savings bank pass book, which shall bear the name of the person for whom the deposit is made and such other memoranda as may be necessary to identify the same, as well as the signature or mark of the depositor, in which pass book the postmaster shall at the time enter the amount and date of the deposit, and the entry shall be attested by him in such manner and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may direct, and every succeeding deposit shall be entered and certified in like manner; and every such deposit shall upon the day of such receipt be reported by the postmaster to the Postmaster-General, and the acknowledgment of the Postmaster-General, signified by the officer whom he shall appoint or designate for that purpose, shall be forthwith transmitted to the depositor, and the said acknowledgment shall be conclusive evidence of the claim of the depositor to the repayment of the deposit on demand with any interest that may have been allowed and entered, or may have accrued; and until such acknowledgment is received the entry by the proper officer in the deposit pass book shall be conclusive evidence of title as respects the deposit made; and it shall be the duty of every depositor to see that he receives such acknowledgment. If he does not receive the acknowledgment within twenty days of the time for making his deposit with the postmaster, it shall be the duty of the depositor to notify the Postmaster-General of such fact, and to demand from the Postmaster-General the acknowledgment due him. In case a depositor shall lose his pass book, he may secure a duplicate of the same upon application to the Postmaster-General, upon the payment of a charge to be fixed by the Postmaster-General by general regulation, but in lieu of payment of cost of same it may be charged to the account of such depositor.

SEC. — That interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum shall be computed, allowed, and entered in the pass book to the credit of each depositor once in each year, and shall be added to and become a part of the principal money; but such interest shall not be computed or allowed on any amount less than $1 or some multiple thereof, and not commence until the first day of the calendar month next following the day of such deposit, or when deposits of a less amount shall have amounted to the total of $1, and shall cease on the first day of the calendar month in which such deposit is withdrawn. Provided, That if any deposit shall exceed $500 in any one year that no interest shall be allowed on that part of the deposit in excess of the $500, exclusive of accumulated interest, and that interest shall never be allowed on any amount to the credit of any one person in excess of $1,000, exclusive of accumulated interest.

SEC. — That every depositor shall forward his deposit pass book to the Postmaster-General, in an envelope free of postage, which will be furnished him at the postal savings bank office, once in each year, on or within thirty days after the anniversary of the first deposit made, for examination and entry of amount of interest found due.

SEC. — That on demand of the depositor or party legally authorized to claim on account of a depositor, made in such form and manner as shall be prescribed by the Postmaster-General, for repayment of any deposit or any part thereof, the Postmaster-General shall draw a check on the Treasury for the amount, or may issue an order or warrant on any postal-savings bank office, payable to the depositor, and forward the same to the depositor forthwith, and such check may be cashed at any postal-savings bank office; but an order or warrant shall be cashed only at the office on which it is drawn: Provided, That when the deposit has been made by a trustee for another the application must be signed by both of such parties, or the survivor, or the executor, or the administrator of the survivor representing said party; And provided further, That when a deposit has been made by a minor under 15 years of age the application shall also be signed by the parent or guardian, if such party shall have filed a written request or notice to that effect.

SEC. — That no sum of money deposited under this act shall, while in the hands of any postmaster, or while in the course of transmission to or from the Postmaster-General, or while in the possession of the United States, at any time be liable to demand, attachment, seizure, or detention under any legal process against the depositor thereof.

SEC. — That the postmasters and other officers of the post-office engaged in the receipt or payment of deposits shall not disclose the name of any depositor, or the amount deposited or withdrawn, except to the Postmaster-General or to such of his officers as are appointed to assist in carrying into operation the provisions of this act, or to such other person or persons as the Postmaster-General may by general regulations or special order direct.

SEC. — That all moneys received for deposit under this act shall be forwarded to the Postmaster-General, or to such United States depository as he may designate, as often as once each week, and daily from such offices as he may designate; and all moneys so forwarded shall be paid into the Treasury and shall be credited to an account to be called "The post-office savings bank" account; and all sums withdrawn on account of depositors or for other purposes shall be charged to such account. The Postmaster-General may, with the advice and approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, designate such United States depositories as may be convenient for the postal savings bank offices and for the Treasury, where deposits provided for by this act may be forwarded by postmasters.

SEC. — That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to invest such postal savings bank funds, in excess of what shall be deemed by him and the Postmaster-General necessary to keep on hand as reserve for redemption purposes and for expenses of administering this act, and in excess of what may be needed to carry on the war with Spain, in United States bonds, as far as possible to do so, and realize a profit for the postal savings bank fund; and he is further authorized to invest any funds that he may not be able to so invest in State bonds under same limitations, or to loan to banker or approved depositories within the States where such postal deposits are made, upon such security and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, at a rate of interest that will yield a profit for the postal savings bank fund, and all such postal savings deposits are hereby declared preferred claims against the banks holding the same, and against any persons who have become bound as security therefor: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury, instead of investing or loaning such funds in the manner provided above, may turn the same, or any part of the same, into the general fund of the Treasury when, in his judgment, the condition of the Treasury demands it.

SEC. — That the banks receiving deposits of postal savings funds, as provided in this act, shall keep separate and distinct accounts of all receipts and payments; and the balance sheets of such accounts, from the 1st of January to the 31st of December in each year, inclusive, and for any shorter period, if the same be required, shall be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury and Postmaster-General and laid before Congress not later than the 31st day of January in each year.

SEC. — That the Postmaster-General, with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, if he shall deem it wise and necessary for the better working of the postal savings bank system, may designate certain post-offices of the first class as subdepositories, which, for a certain area, may be directed and required to perform, under rules and regulations, certain duties of the Post-Office Department in the postal savings bank work, such as receiving daily reports and remittances from the postal savings bank offices within a given area, and receipting for the same, repaying to depositors upon proper demand, and such additional duties as may be found necessary or expedient to facilitate the administration of this system; and the postmasters at subdepositories shall, at the end of every calendar month, or more frequently if required, make reports to the Secretary of the Treasury of all postal savings funds as shall have been received by them during the preceding month, or shorter period, from the receiving offices, and amounts disbursed upon demand of depositors, and at the same time furnish copies of said reports to the Postmaster-General, together with any further detailed report he may require; and also transmit said moneys, not disbursed, to the Secretary of the Treasury or such banks or approved depositories as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, in conformity to the terms and provisions of section 11 of this act.

SEC. — That any depositor having standing to his credit for three months the sum of $10 or more may make application to the Postmaster-General that United States bonds be issued to him in lieu of such deposit; thereupon the amount specified by the applicant, being in $10 or multiple thereof, shall be transferred to the general fund of the Treasury, and bonds of the denomination of ten, fifty, or one hundred dollars each shall be issued to the depositor in lieu thereof at his option, one ten-dollar bond for each $10, or one fifty-dollar bond for each $50, or one one-hundred-dollar bond for each $100 so transferred. All such bonds shall be due and payable in any lawful money of the United States on or before twenty years from date at the option of the Government, or upon demand of holder after six months' notice; shall be dated July 1 or January 1 of the year issued, and shall bear interest at the rate of 2 1/2 per cent per annum, which interest shall become due and payable on the 30th day of June of each year; and such bonds shall be known as United States Postal Savings Bonds, and the words "United States Postal Savings Bonds" shall be printed upon the face of each of said bonds. And the holder of such bonds may deposit the same with the Post-Office Department at Washington for safe-keeping and take the Postmaster-General's receipt for the same: Provided, That not more than $1,000 face value of such bonds shall be issued to any one depositor in any one year. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be prepared the various denominations of United States postal savings bonds that may be required.

SEC. — That the Postmaster-General may in his discretion, or shall, upon the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, require an additional bond of any postmaster of a postal savings bank office or subdepository, provided such bond shall not be excessive or unreasonable in amount.

SEC. — That the Postmaster-General, with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make the necessary regulations and prepare the necessary instructions for carrying this act into effect, including regulations regarding the deposits and withdrawal of deposits by minors and trustees, and the final disposition of deposits of deceased persons, and such regulations and instructions shall be binding on all persons to the same extent as if such regulations formed part of this act, and the Postmaster-General may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, change such regulations from time to time as may be found necessary to secure the best administration of this act; and the Postmaster-General shall transmit to Congress on the first day of each session a copy of all regulations made and in force and of all changes made subsequent to his last report, and the reasons for such changes.

SEC. — That the Postmaster-General shall cause to be prepared and printed all necessary books and blanks required to carry this act into effect.

SEC. — That the Postmaster-General shall, as soon as practicable after the end of each month, make a report to the Secretary of the Treasury of all moneys received and paid during the preceding month, and the total amount of deposits at the end of each month, and such report shall be published by the Secretary as soon after the close of the month as is practicable. The Postmaster-General shall make an annual report of the total amount of deposits received and repaid to depositors, or invested for them, and the total amount due depositors for each year ending June 30, with the classification of depositors and the amount deposited, drawn out, and the amount due each class, and a statement of expenses incurred; also a copy of all regulations made and in force and of all changes made in regulations since his last report, and the reasons for such changes, and such other particulars and recommendations as he shall deem necessary. Such annual report shall be transmitted to Congress upon the first day of each regular session.

SEC. — That there is hereby created the office of Fifth Assistant Postmaster-General, and such officer shall be appointed in the same manner in which the other Assistant Postmaster-Generals are appointed, and with the same salary. The duties of such officer shall be, under the direction and subject to the supervision of the Postmaster-General, to take charge of and conduct all the business of the Post-Office Department pertaining to postal savings banks. And it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to designate such officer or officers and subdivisions of his Department as may be necessary to take charge of and conduct the business of the Treasury Department pertaining to postal savings banks.

SEC. — That the provisions of the several statutes relating to the larceny, embezzlement, or misappropriation of the postal funds, money-order funds, postage stamps, stamped envelopes, or postal cards, and to the forging or counterfeiting of postage stamps, the stamps printed upon stamped envelopes or postal cards, or the dies, plates, or engravings used in the manufacture of the same, be, and they are hereby, extended, including the punishment prescribed therefor, and made applicable to the commission of similar crimes in connection with the postal savings system hereby established.

SEC. — That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to carry this act into effect and operation, and that the expenses of administering this act shall be paid out of the money received under the operation thereof.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senate has decided to borrow money to carry on the war instead of raising it by taxation. The bond section of this bill, which the Republicans and Gold Democrats have joined in putting into this bill, professes on its face to be a popular loan; but it is not. The bankers will get the bonds. The masses of the people will have no chance to buy them. The substitute which I offer for this bond section is absolutely a popular loan. If we are to borrow money to carry on the war, then let us borrow it from the people, if they are willing to loan it to the Government.

My substitute goes further. It provides for borrowing this money at 2 per cent instead of at 3 per cent. My substitute is what is known as the postal savings banks system. It is not in the shape that I would offer it as a complete independent measure, but it is specially prepared for the purpose of raising money for this war. The substitute provides that the money raised through the post-offices by deposits from the people shall be used for carrying on the war, or so much of it as may be necessary, and then the machinery is provided, as is provided in all other countries that have postal savings banks system, for the disposition of the remainder.

Mr. President, every time that this proposition to establish depositories at the post-offices in the United States to give the people an opportunity to deposit their small earnings—every time such a proposition has been before Congress we have been met with the objection that the Government would not be able to use the enormous amount of money that the people would deposit with the Government at the low rate of 2 per cent. The most serious objection, the objection that it has been the most difficult to meet, has been the one that it would raise more money than the Government could use or invest. I have had it thrown at me and figures quoted to show that Great Britain to-day has $550,000,000 raised by her postal savings bank system, and it was said if Great Britain raised $550,000,000 by that means, that in this country more than twice that amount would be deposited by the people and we would be flooded with money at 2 per cent.

Mr. President, there is not a person opposed to this system who will dare to say that this arrangement will not raise more money year by year than this bond provision provides for. It will raise it from the people from every post-office in the United States. The people who have their little earnings in their stockings stand to-day ready to chip it in and let the Government have the use of it at 2 per cent. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] stated in the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads two or three weeks ago that there would be $1,000,000 deposited under this system in his city of Chicago on the first day that the postal savings bank system was put into operation.

Mr. President, this would truly be a popular loan. It would raise the money necessary for the war. It would raise more money than is necessary for the war, and besides, it would give to the masses of the people the benefits of the system which have been so admirably set forth by Postmaster-General Gary in his annual report. He argued the question from the great advantages that would come to our citizenship, how it would be conducive to patriotism and better citizenship, how it would teach our people to become money savers as well as money makers.

But, Mr. President, if that argument were not good, there is now a reason for the establishment of this system to allow the people to contribute their money, through the post-offices, to the Government to carry on this war. The people will loan all the money necessary under this system. The Treasury would be benefited, because the Government would get the money at a lower rate of interest. The people would be benefited, for they would get interest instead of being taxed to pay interest to capitalists. If we are to borrow money, why pay 3 per cent when we can get it at 2 per cent? This amendment is a saving of 1 per cent on every dollar borrowed. That is a saving of $3,000,000 a year. Besides, the interest the Government pays it will pay directly to the people in every quarter of the country, not only in every State and in every county and in every township, but at every post-office.

France has carried a greater debt per capita than any other people in the world, and at the same time prospered as no other people have ever prospered. She did it by borrowing her money from her own people. Half of the burden of a national debt is removed if the debt is held by the masses of the people and the interest is paid out so that it is broadly circulated and not concentrated at the money centers. A debt of a thousand million dollars would not be half so burdensome on the Government with the interest paid to the masses of the people as a concentrated debt of half the amount at the same interest. So we not only have the advantage of a lower rate of interest, but we have the advantage of the interest that is paid being distributed and diffused.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will unanimously adopt this amendment; but if it does not, at some time in the near future I will discuss at some length and in detail the proposition to establish a permanent system of the postal savings banks. I hope that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will soon report such a bill. The committee has had under consideration now for over five months two bills, one introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] and one by me.

The committee has made amendment after amendment and change after change, and what I offer this evening as a substitute to the bond provision is the sum total of the wisdom of our committee after five months' consideration. It is not the original bill that I offered; it is not the original bill that the Senator from Illinois offered; but they are the provisions that have been changed and modified from week to week by the committee, composed of members of all parties. I had hoped that the bill would have been reported before now, so what I offer is not a crude piece of legislation. It has had up to this hour certainly more careful attention than the majority of bills that come before this body.

It has been framed not from a partisan standpoint, not from the standpoint of a person who looks upon it as a hobby or a pet measure; but it has been criticised and amended by a committee some of whom favor the proposition and some of whom oppose it. Amendment after amendment has been suggested by those opposed to the proposition, and many such amendments have been accepted because there was merit in them. So it is a carefully prepared plan for giving the people a chance to contribute their money and carry on this war, and to contribute it at a rate of 2 per cent interest.

If Congress will adopt this amendment, we will get all the money necessary at 2 per cent, and at the same time confer a blessing upon the masses of our people. Do we prefer to give the capitalist 3 per cent to giving the people 2 per cent?

If this amendment is voted down, that is what it will mean. It will mean more—that the real purpose of this bond issue is to give the national banks a chance to invest in these bonds at 3 per cent and then to issue their bank notes on the bonds and lend the notes to the people at from 6 to 12 per cent interest. Thus we see that such bank paper, based on these bonds, will cost the people from 9 to 15 per cent interest, and is not as good money as the greenbacks, which is Government money and which costs the people no interest.

That is why the Republicans and the Gold Democrats voted against greenbacks. They did it in the interest of the bankers.

I suppose they will vote against this amendment for the same reason.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, I wish to say just one word. For five years past I have had a bill before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads providing for the establishment of postal savings banks. At the beginning of the present session I reintroduced the bill, and it is now before that committee for consideration. I have for a number of years been a strong advocate of this proposition, and I believe it will prove to be ultimately one of the greatest blessings to the people of our country. But at the same time I believe it is very similar to a large number of amendments which have been offered to the bill, which have merit in them as independent propositions, but which are inopportune here. Therefore I shall vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEWART. I now desire to offer the amendment which was read some time ago, proposing to issue Treasury notes payable in one year and drawing interest not exceeding 3 per cent. The rate was 3 per cent, but it has been modified so as to draw interest not exceeding 3 per cent, and receivable for Government dues. This is the plan uniformly adopted previous to 1862. The original plan is said to have been drawn by Madison. It was started under his Administration. My amendment, except that it is adapted to the present occasion, does not vary in any particular from the bills that have been passed, one after another, of precisely the same character. It is no new language. It has been used and construed.

I do not ask to have the amendment read, but I think it is so important and so much more economical and satisfactory to raise money this way than by the issue of long-term bonds in the first instance that I shall ask for the yeas and nays on it. It is the plan adopted in the war of 1812 and in the Mexican war, and it prevented the accumulation of a large bonded debt. It kept the country practically out of debt. One of the great merits of the proposition is that it facilitates the payment of taxes, the notes being receivable for Government dues. There never has been any trouble about its operation, and its results have been most satisfactory. I will ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment which he has explained and on which he demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLEN rose.

Mr. STEWART. It is to supersede the two sections of the bond provision.

Mr. MANTLE. I wish to ask the Senator from Nevada what amount of paper he proposes to issue?

Mr. STEWART. Five hundred million dollars. That is in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, however. That amount will cover the whole business.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much?

Mr. STEWART. Not exceeding $500,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called on agreeing to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ALDRICH answered to his name.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to move to lay the proposed amendment on the table. I make the motion because I can not and will not vote for any provision that has the feature of drawing interest attached to it one way or the other.

Mr. BATE. I desire that the amendment may be read to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the roll call the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has already responded. It is too late to move to lay the amendment on the table, and the roll call will proceed.

Mr. BATE. Has the amendment been read to the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been read to the Senate.

Mr. BATE. I have not heard it read; and there are many Senators here in the same situation.

Mr. ALDRICH. It has been read.

Mr. BATE. It has not been read to-day. I want to hear it read.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] can not, when a Senator is on his feet, answer to his name for the purpose of cutting off any motion that may be made. I was on my feet long before the first name was called.

Mr. HALE. I suggest that by unanimous consent the Senator from Nebraska be allowed to move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. Now I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. STEWART. Before I give unanimous consent—

Mr. HALE. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. STEWART. As several gentlemen have asked for the reading of the amendment, I would like to have it read in part. Some of it is administrative, and that part need not be read. I should like to have that portion read which strikes out the two sections, so that Senators can see what the provision is. Let enough of the amendment be read so that its meaning can be ascertained. Some of it is administrative, and that part need not be read.

Mr. HALE. That is, let enough of it be read so that we can see to vote against it.

Mr. STEWART. Of course the gentleman from Maine will vote against it. That is a foregone conclusion.

Mr. BATE. I do not know what the amendment is, because it has not been read to-day. When it was read, I do not know. I only know that it relates to the currency question, which is a very sensitive one. We want to know what we are going to vote upon. Five or six Senators around me desire to have it read, and I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read Mr. STEWART'S amendment, which was to strike out sections 27 and 28 from the bill and insert:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury be hereby authorized to cause Treasury notes, payable to bearer, for such sum or sums as the exigencies of the public service may require, but not to exceed at any time the amount of $400,000,000, and of denominations of $10 and multiples thereof, to be prepared, signed, and issued in the manner hereinafter provided.

SEC. —. That such Treasury notes shall be paid and redeemed by the United States at the Treasury thereof after the expiration of one year from the date of issue of such notes; from which dates until they shall be respectively paid and redeemed they shall bear such rate of interest as shall be expressed in such notes, which rate of interest shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury at not exceeding 8 per cent per annum; Provided, That after the maturity of any of said notes interest thereon shall cease at the expiration of sixty days' notice of readiness to redeem and pay the same, which may at any time or times be given by the Secretary of the Treasury in one or more newspapers at the seat of government. The redemption and payment of said notes herein provided shall be made to the lawful holders thereof, respectively, upon presentment at the Treasury, and shall include the principal of each note and the interest which shall be due thereon. And for the payment and redemption of such notes at the time and times therein specified the faith of the United States is hereby solemnly pledged.

SEC. —. That such Treasury notes shall be prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be signed in behalf of the United States by the Treasurer thereof, and countersigned by the Register of the Treasury. Each of these officers shall keep, in a book or books provided for the purpose, separate, full, and accurate accounts, showing the number, date, amount, and rate of interest of each Treasury note signed and countersigned by them respectively, and also similar accounts showing all such notes which may be paid, redeemed, and canceled, as the same may be returned; all which accounts shall be carefully preserved in the Treasury Department. And the Treasurer shall account quarterly for all such Treasury notes as shall have been countersigned by the Register and delivered to the Treasury for issue.

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, with the approval of the President, to cause such portion of said Treasury notes as may be deemed expedient to be issued by the Treasurer in payment of warrants in favor of public creditors or other persons lawfully entitled to payment, who may choose to receive such notes in payment at par; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, with the approval of the President, to issue the notes hereby authorized to be issued, at such rate of interest as may be offered by the lowest responsible bidder or bidders who may agree to take the said notes at par after public advertisement of not less than ten days in such papers as the President may direct; the said advertisement to propose to issue such notes at par to those who may offer to take the same at the lowest rate of interest. But in deciding upon these bids no fraction shall be considered which may be less than one-fourth per cent per annum.

SEC. —. That said Treasury notes shall be transferable by delivery.

SEC. —. That said Treasury notes shall be received by the proper officers in payment of all duties and taxes laid by the authority of the United States, of all public lands sold by said authority, and of all debts to the United States, of any character whatever, which may be due and payable at the time when said Treasury notes may be offered in payment thereof; and upon every such payment credit shall be given for the amount of principal and interest due on the note or notes received in payment, on the day when the same shall have been received by such officer.

SEC. —. That every collector of the customs, receiver of public moneys, or other officer or agent of the United States who shall receive any Treasury note or notes in payment on account of the United States, shall take from the holder of such note or notes a receipt on the back of each, stating distinctly the date of such payment and the amount allowed on such note; and every such officer or agent shall keep regular and specific entries of all Treasury notes received in payment, showing the person from whom received, the number, date, and amount of principal and interest allowed on each and every Treasury note received in payment, which entries shall be delivered to the Treasury with the Treasury note or notes mentioned therein; and, if found correct, such officer or agent shall receive credit for the amount, as provided in the thirty-second section of this act.

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized to make and issue from time to time such instructions, rules, and regulations to the several collectors, receivers, depositaries, and all others who may be required to receive such Treasury notes in behalf of, and as agents in any capacity for, the United States, as to the custody, disposal, canceling, and return of any such notes as may be paid to and received by them respectively, and as to the accounts and returns to be made to the Treasury Department of such receipts, as he may deem best calculated to promote the public convenience and security, and to protect the United States, as well as individuals, from fraud and loss.

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be paid the principal and interest of such Treasury notes as may be issued under this act, at the time and times when, according to its provisions, the same should be paid. And said Secretary is further authorized to purchase said notes at par for the amount of principal and interest due thereon at the time of such purchase. And so much of any unappropriated money in the Treasury as may be necessary for the purpose is hereby appropriated for the payment of the principal and interest of said notes.

SEC. —. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to cause a statement to be published monthly of the amount of Treasury notes issued and paid and redeemed under the provisions of this act, showing the balance outstanding each month.

SEC. —. That a sufficient amount of money necessary to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. BATE. The administrative part of the amendment I do not care to have read. I wanted to get at the principal point. I withdraw the request for its reading. The Secretary need not read any further for me.

Mr. CULLOM. That is right.

Mr. STEWART. It will be observed that I have modified the amendment so as to make the amount $400,000,000, which is precisely the amount proposed to be authorized by the bill in other forms.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves to lay the amendment of the Senator from Nevada on the table. [Putting the question.] The yeas appear to have it.

Mr. STEWART. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORMAN (when Mr. GRAY'S name was called). The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. The Senator from Delaware would vote "yea," if present, and the Senator from Missouri would vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. I do not see him in his seat, and will therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. WARREN. I had overlooked for the moment an arrangement whereby, upon the motions pertaining to this subject, the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] would be paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. I therefore announce that they are paired on this vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. DANIEL (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. DANIEL. Then I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire that I may be permitted to say that I do not favor the class of issues provided for by this amendment, but I prefer them to the ordinary bonds.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is out of order.

Mr. BACON. I desire to change my vote. I vote "nay."
Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] that we exchange our pairs. I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], and he is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH]. We will both be at liberty to vote, if that will be agreeable to him.

Mr. DANIEL. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. I vote "yea."

Mr. DANIEL. I vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I understand that my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] has been transferred to another Senator, and so I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 55, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—55.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	McEnery,	Rawlins,
Allen,	Foraker,	McMillan,	Roach,
Allison,	Frye,	Mantle,	Sewell,
Baker,	Gallinger,	Mason,	Shoup,
Burrows,	Gear,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Sullivan,
Cannon,	Hale,	Murphy,	Teller,
Carter,	Hanna,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Warren,
Clark,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Wellington,
Cullom,	Kyle,	Platt, Conn.	Westmore,
Davis,	Lindsay,	Platt, N. Y.	Wilson,
Deboe,	Lodge,	Pritchard,	Wolcott,
Elkins,	McBride,	Quay,

NAYE—18.

Bacon,	Clay,	Money,	Turley,
Bate,	Daniel,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Berry,	Harris,	Pettus,	White,
Butler,	Heitfeld,	Stewart,
Chilton,	McLaurin,	Tillman,

NOT VOTING—10.

Cookrell,	Jones, Ark.	Martin,	Proctor,
Faulkner,	Jones, Nev.	Mills,	Smith,
Gray,	Kenney,	Morgan,	Turner,
Hansbrough,	Mallory,	Penrose,	Vest,

So the motion to lay Mr. STEWART'S amendment on the table was agreed to.

Mr. TURPIE. On behalf of the majority of the Committee on Finance, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as a substitute for the sections providing for bonds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out sections 27 and 28, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue from time to time, as the exigencies of the public service may require, on the credit of the United States of America, $150,000,000 of United States Treasury notes, or so much thereof as may be required, of the denominations of five, ten, twenty, and fifty dollars, or some multiple thereof, payable to bearer at the Treasury of the United States, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States at any time after one year from date of issue, on call after thirty days' public notice, and payable three years from date of issue, and bearing interest from date of issue at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, and such notes, when issued, shall be receivable in payment of all taxes, duties, debts, and demands of every kind due to the United States, and shall be issued at the par value thereof in payment of services, supplies, and debts for which the United States may become liable by reason of the existing war with Spain, and when returned to the Treasury shall be reissued to an equal amount, and said notes shall be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal authority, and the Secretary of the Treasury may issue such notes at par to borrow money.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, allow me to say very briefly that the amendment provides for the issue of $150,000,000 of Treasury notes proper, bearing 2 per cent interest, redeemable in one year, at the pleasure of the Government, and running three as the extreme term of their tenure, to be used exclusively for the payment of war expenditures in the existing hostilities with Spain. They are not legal tender, and they are made only a tender for public debts and dues, and only receivable for those purposes. This we prefer to a bond issue.

We prefer the issue of the legal-tender notes in the first place, but the Senate has already expressed its opinion on that question; and though many of our friends were hostile to the issue of anything in the shape of legal tenders, we hope that some Senators who voted against the issue of legal tenders may vote for this amendment. It is certainly a proper, legitimate, and well-precedented use of the power of the Government in issuing its own credits under these forms.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana whether I correctly understood his amendment when I understood it as providing that these notes are to be made receivable by the creditors of the Government for past obligations, whether they consent or not?

Mr. TURPIE. No; it says for supplies and services during the existing war.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. TURPIE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GORMAN (when Mr. GRAY'S name was called). The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] on this question. The Senator from Delaware, if present, would vote "nay," and the Senator from Missouri would vote "yea."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I announce the pair on this vote of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], with whom I have a general pair; and I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. QUAY (after having voted in the negative). I inquire whether the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. QUAY. Then I will withdraw my vote, being paired with that Senator. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 45; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Allen,	Clay,	McLaurin,	Roach,
Bacon,	Cockrell,	Mantle,	Stewart,
Bate,	Daniel,	Money,	Teller,
Berry,	Harris,	Pasco,	Tillman,
Butler,	Heitfeld,	Pettigrew,	Turley,
Cannon,	Jones, Ark.	Pettus,	Turpie,
Chilton,	McEnery,	Rawlins,	White,

NAYE—45.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Lindsay,	Sewell,
Allison,	Foraker,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Baker,	Frye,	McBride,	Spooner,
Burrows,	Gear,	McMillan,	Thurston,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Mitchell,	Warren,
Carter,	Hale,	Morrill,	Wellington,
Chandler,	Hanna,	Murphy,	Westmore,
Clark,	Hansbrough,	Nelson,	Wilson,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Wolcott,
Davis,	Hoar,	Platt, Conn.
Deboe,	Jones, Nev.	Platt, N. Y.
Elkins,	Kyle,	Pritchard,

NOT VOTING—10.

Faulkner,	Mallory,	Morgan,	Smith,
Gallinger,	Martin,	Penrose,	Sullivan,
Gray,	Mason,	Proctor,	Turner,
Kenney,	Mills,	Quay,	Vest,

So Mr. TURPIE'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. TURPIE. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 27, line 5, on page 75, before the word "expenditures," it is proposed to strike out "public;" and after the word "expenditures" to insert "on account of the existing war with Spain."

Mr. TURPIE. I appeal to the Senator from Iowa that this amendment ought to be made. The title of the bill is: "A bill to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures." Section 27 provides for the issue of $100,000,000 of certificates, and enacts that the Secretary of the Treasury may pay them out "to meet public expenditures." All war expenditures are public expenditures, but all public expenditures are not war expenditures.

Mr. ALLISON. It was for the purpose of meeting that distinction that those words were inserted. The one hundred millions provided is an emergency loan for general purposes of public expenditure whenever there is a deficiency, and it was the intent and purpose that that distinction should be made.

I thank the Senator for making the suggestion he has, and I think the title of the bill ought to be amended by adding the words "and for other purposes."

Mr. TURPIE. Perhaps the Senate may, however, agree to amend the section in the way I have proposed, and then the title need not be changed. I think it is wrong at this time to enact a deficiency bill, and that is the effect of the language in section 27. It provides for $100,000,000 to be paid out "to meet public expenditures." It is too early to enact a deficiency bill or to alter the regular method of establishing a deficiency bill by providing for expenditures. We on this side are perfectly willing to allow the issue of $100,000,000 of certificates for war expenditures. My purpose is to make the appropriation plain and carry out the title of the bill, which I hope will not be changed. The certificate section should be confined, as the bond section is, to the payment of expenditures in the existing war against Spain. I call for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. I propose that we exchange pairs.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. MALLORY. I vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who is absent from the Chamber.

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] to the Senator from West Virginia, and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 31, nays 44; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Allen,	Cockrell,	Mallory,	Rosch,
Bacon,	Daniel,	Mantle,	Stewart,
Bate,	Harris,	Martin,	Sullivan,
Berry,	Heitfeld,	Money,	Tillman,
Butler,	Jones, Ark.	Pasco,	Turley,
Cannon,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,	Turpie,
Chilton,	McEnery,	Pettus,	White,
Clay,	McLaurin,	Rawlins,

NAYS—44.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Lindsay,	Platt, N. Y.
Allison,	Foraker,	Lodge,	Pritchard,
Baker,	Frye,	McBride,	Sewell,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Caffery,	Gear,	Mason,	Spooner,
Carter,	Gorman,	Mitchell,	Thurston,
Chandler,	Hale,	Morrill,	Warren,
Clark,	Hanna,	Murphy,	Wellington,
Davis,	Hansbrough,	Nelson,	Wetmore,
Deboe,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Wilson,
Elkins,	Kyle,	Platt, Conn.	Wolcott.

NOT VOTING—14.

Cullom,	Kennedy,	Proctor,	Turner,
Faulkner,	Mills,	Quay,	Vest.
Gray,	Morgan,	Smith,
Hoar,	Penrose,	Teller,

So Mr. TURPIE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. I desire now, in accordance with the notice I gave, to offer an amendment to the amendment which was adopted by the Senate, offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON], in reference to taxes on proprietary preparations. The amendment which I propose is after the word "except," in line 3 of the amendment, to insert the words "commercial fertilizers."

Mr. CHILTON. I accept that.

Mr. ALDRICH. There will be a great many others that will have to be accepted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I simply desire to correct a mistake of one word in the bill. On page 48, line 20, the word "employees," where it should read "employees' relief associations," has been printed "employers."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that in the original bill it is all right now.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to strike out the word "three," on page 75, in line 4 of section 27, and insert "two," so as to read "2 per cent per annum;" on the same page, in line 7, to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty," so as to read "in denominations of $20 or some multiple of that sum;" page 76, line 1, to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty," so as to read "$50,000,000" instead of "$100,000,000;" in the same line, after the word "that," to strike out "at least fifty millions" and insert "all," so as to read "that all of said certificates herein authorized shall be issued before any bonds," etc.; in section 28, on the same page, line 13, after the word "of," to strike out "three" and insert "two," so as to read "$200,000,000" instead of "$300,000,000;" after the word "in," on the same page, line 18, to insert "equal parts of gold and silver;" in line 31, same page, to strike out the word "quarterly," and before the word "coin," on the same page, line 21, to insert "equal parts of gold and silver;" in the same line to strike out the word "three" and insert "two," so as to read "2 per cent per annum."

Mr. President, this amendment accomplishes just three things, and submitted in this way it will not be understood without a brief word of explanation. It reduces the interest on the bonds and certificates of indebtedness to 2 per cent; it cuts down the certificates of indebtedness to fifty millions instead of one hundred million dollars, the bonds to $200,000,000 instead of $300,000,000, and it makes the bonds and certificates redeemable in gold and silver both.

Mr. STEWART. I do not see but that the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska involves interest. I thought he would not vote for anything that involves interest.

Mr. ALLEN. I will not.

Mr. STEWART. You will not?

Mr. ALLEN. I will not.

Mr. STEWART. The proposition offered by the Senator from Indiana, which is precisely—

Mr. ALLEN. I voted to substitute an amendment providing for $150,000,000 of 2 per cent greenbacks or Treasury notes for $400,000,000 of 3 per cent interest-bearing bonds. Now, if the distinguished Senator who offered an amendment carrying 5 per cent—

Mr. STEWART. No; I did not.

Mr. ALLEN. You did yesterday.

Mr. STEWART. Well.

Mr. ALLEN. On $300,000,000 of Treasury notes can find any consolation in that, I am willing he should.

Mr. STEWART. I do not want any consolation. I do not require consolation, but I undertake to say that the proposition of the Senator from Indiana was the same in character as mine. Mine was 3 per cent and his was 2 per cent, and that is the only difference.

Mr. ALLEN. Yours was $350,000,000 more than his.

Mr. STEWART. But I thought it was the question of interest which bothered the Senator. I move to lay the amendment on the table, on the ground that it has interest in it.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable. The Senator from Nevada moves to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. I want to make a request of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. I will stick to my motion.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well; I will get back at you some other time.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. I suggest to the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], who is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], that we exchange pairs.

Mr. MALLORY. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. I vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 47, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—47.

Aldrich,	Foraker,	Lindsay,	Platt, N. Y.
Allison,	Frye,	Lodge,	Pritchard,
Baker,	Gallinger,	McBride,	Sewell,
Burrows,	Gear,	McEnery,	Shoup,
Caffery,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Carter,	Hale,	Mantle,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Hanna,	Mitchell,	Thurston,
Clark,	Hansbrough,	Morrill,	Warren,
Davis,	Hawley,	Murphy,	Wellington,
Deboe,	Hoar,	Nelson,	Wetmore,
Elkins,	Jones, Nev.	Perkins,	Wilson,
Fairbanks,	Kyle,	Platt, Conn.	Wolcott.

NAYS—20.

Allen,	Cannon,	McLaurin,	Rosch,
Bacon,	Chilton,	Mallory,	Tillman,
Bate,	Clay,	Martin,	Turley,
Berry,	Cockrell,	Money,	Turpie,
Butler,	Daniel,	Rawlins,	White.

NOT VOTING—22.

Cullom,	Kennedy,	Pettigrew,	Teller,
Faulkner,	Mason,	Pettus,	Turner,
Gray,	Mills,	Proctor,	Vest,
Harris,	Morgan,	Quay,	Warren.
Heitfeld,	Pasco,	Smith,
Jones, Ark.	Penrose,	Sullivan,

So Mr. ALLEN's amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. DANIEL. I have an amendment to offer. It is the amendment that was offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr.

GALLINGER]. I will state briefly that it is for the purpose of reducing the tax on proprietary articles one-half. There is no necessity to accumulate so heavy a tax upon one set of people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read. The Secretary read as follows:

In line 9, page 54, strike out "one-fourth" and substitute "one-eighth."
In line 13, page 54, strike out "one-half" and substitute "one-fourth."
In line 17, page 54, strike out "one" and substitute "one-half."
In line 21, page 54, strike out "two" and substitute "one."
In line 25, page 54, strike out "three" and substitute "one and one-half."
In line 4, page 55, strike out "four" and substitute "two."
In line 9, page 55, strike out "two" and substitute "one."
In line 24, page 55, strike out "one-fourth" and substitute "one-eighth."
In line 3, page 56, strike out "one-half" and substitute "one-fourth."
In line 7, page 56, strike out "one" and substitute "one-half."
In line 11, page 56, strike out "two" and substitute "one."
In line 15, page 56, strike out "three" and substitute "one and one-half."
In line 19, page 56, strike out "four" and substitute "two."
In line 24, page 56, strike out "two" and substitute "one."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORMAN (when Mr. FAULKNER's name was called). The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. If the Senator from West Virginia were present, he would vote "yea" on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I will again announce my pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], and will ask the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] that we may make the same exchange of our pairs, so that we can both vote.

Mr. MALLORY. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. I vote "yea."

Mr. GORMAN (when Mr. GRAY's name was called). The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If the Senator from Delaware were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON (when Mr. MILLS's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MILLS] requested me to state that if he were present, he would vote "nay." He is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. GALLINGER. And that pair has been transferred to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I am not aware how he would vote upon this question. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. Otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], but by special arrangement made with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], who wished to be recorded in favor of the bill, he will stand paired with the Senator from Washington and I will vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 48, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—48.

Aldrich,	Foraker,	Lodge,	Platt, N. Y.
Allison,	Frye,	McBride,	Pritchard,
Baker,	Gallinger,	McEnery,	Sowell,
Burrows,	Gear,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Mantle,	Spooner,
Carter,	Hale,	Mason,	Thurston,
Chandler,	Hanna,	Mitchell,	Turpie,
Clark,	Hansbrough,	Morrill,	Warren,
Davis,	Hawley,	Murphy,	Wellington,
Deboe,	Hear,	Nelson,	Wetmore,
Elkins,	Kyle,	Perkins,	Wilson,
Fairbanks,	Lindsay,	Platt, Conn.	Wolcott.

NAYS—28.

Allen,	Clay,	McLaurin,	Rawlins,
Bacon,	Cockrell,	Mallory,	Roach,
Bate,	Daniel,	Martin,	Stewart,
Berry,	Harris,	Money,	Sullivan,
Butler,	Heitfeld,	Pasco,	Tillman,
Cannon,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	Turley,
Chilton,	Jones, Nev.	Pettus,	White.

NOT VOTING—13.

Cullom,
Faulkner,
Gray,
Kenney,

Mills,
Morgan,
Penrose,
Proctor,

Quay,
Smith,
Teller,
Turner,

Vest.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend the title by inserting after the word "expenditures" the words "and for other purposes."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Would it not be more accurate to insert after the word "expenditures" the words "and to provide for the deficiencies under the Dingley bill?"

Mr. ALLISON. I think my amendment will cover the case.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It means the same thing.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes."

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the motion is agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Chair to appoint the conferees.

Mr. MASON. I understood that the suggestion by the Senator from Iowa was submitted for unanimous consent. I desire to object unless I am permitted to ask a question for information.

Mr. ALLISON. I made the motion. I did not ask unanimous consent.

Mr. MASON. Then before the motion is put, I desire to ask for information, if it is proper and in order—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MASON. Will the amendments that have been adopted by the Senate of the United States have an opportunity to be voted on in the House of Representatives?

Mr. ALLISON. That, I take it for granted, will depend wholly upon the House of Representatives itself. Undoubtedly the House will have an opportunity of first considering the amendments.

Mr. CHANDLER. Why not give them a chance to adopt the amendments. Here is a very complete, a very symmetrical bill. It was a fairly good bill when it came from the House of Representatives. It has been improved, strengthened, and made a complete bill in the Senate. The House of Representatives may take a notion to adopt all the amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope they will.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the Senator from Iowa will be relieved from the necessity of entering into one of those long and painful conferences that take place so often between the conferees on the part of the House and the Senate, and the House of Representatives will then act on its own ideas and in accordance with its own convictions of duty.

I understand this to be an extraordinary motion, a motion that it is not necessary to make, and one that it is not customary to make. We have amended the bill in accordance with our convictions of duty and in accordance with our conviction as to what is for the public good; and I think we ought to send the amendments back to the House of Representatives and let them adopt them if they see fit without huddling the bill into a conference prematurely. I therefore hope the Senator from Iowa will withdraw his motion and let the bill take the ordinary course.

Mr. ALLISON. The motion that I make will not interfere in the slightest degree with the independent action of the House. There have been numerous occasions where the Senate has asked for a conference and the House has taken the Senate amendments into consideration. I entirely share with the Senator from New Hampshire in his hope that the House will agree to the amendments, and that, therefore, a conference will not be necessary.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I ask the Senator from Iowa, why insist upon amendments that have been made in perfect good faith and ask a conference, assuming that there will be a difference between the House and Senate concerning the amendments, when there is no difference, so far as the Senator from Iowa knows?

Mr. ALLISON. It is the usual method when it is necessary to secure action upon a bill of this character.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is the usual method when legislation has reached the stage where it is to pass from the control of the two Houses of Congress into the hands of six Senators and Representatives. It is not a method that commends itself to the masses of the two Houses, in my judgment; it is not a method that commends itself to the people of the United States. I think that when the Senate has adopted all these amendments deliberately the House of Representatives ought to have an opportunity to adopt them if it sees fit, to reject such as it sees fit, and to ask for a conference as to the difference between the two Houses if it sees fit, without assuming that there must necessarily be a conference in which all these matters that have been discussed at such great length are to be finally settled by six men or a majority of that number.

Mr. ALLISON. The House can adopt every one of these amendments if it chooses.

Mr. ALLEN. I insist upon the observance of the rule here. The rule is that the bill must go to the House, and the request for a conference must come in a message from the House upon a disagreement to the amendments of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa that the Senate request a conference on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. ALDRICH, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas were appointed.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 6, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 4, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that 5,000 copies of the war revenue bill as it shall pass the Senate be printed for the use of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PAYNE. I wish the gentleman from Maine would allow me to call up a bill from the Speaker's table.

Mr. DINGLEY. Very well; I withdraw my motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Does the gentleman withdraw it for this side, too?

Mr. HOPKINS. This is for the entire country; we think it is for your side as well as this side.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR STEAMSHIP CHINA.

Mr. PAYNE. It is a bill to provide an American register for a steamship to transport troops to Manila.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We will support you.

Mr. PAYNE. This is Senate bill 4699, to provide an American register for the steamship China. The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries have reported a bill identical with this.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steamship China, owned by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, to be registered as a vessel of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman allow me two minutes on this bill?

Mr. PAYNE. I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama two minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, in favoring this bill, I want to call the attention of the House to one or two facts. I think the time has come when the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries ought not only to bring in a bill authorizing the American register to one of several vessels, but they ought to bring in a general law authorizing these ships, without special acts of Congress, to take an American register when the Government needs them. The situation of the Government is to-day in the Gulf of Mexico such that at Mobile, Ala., they are paying $2.40 a ton for coal over the ship's rail, and at Port Tampa they are paying $7.60 a ton for coal over the ship's rail, costing the difference to the United States Government of $5.20 a ton. Why? Because we can not get any American ships there to carry the coal from Mobile to Port Tampa, and the Plant system will not take the coal over their road without charging exorbitant rates.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is caused by the war insurance, and nothing else affects it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No, it is not. I know to-day a contractor in Mobile, Ala., who can make a contract with a British ship to carry coal from Mobile to Tampa and put it in American bottoms at $1 a ton, including the marine insurance and everything else, but under the laws of the United States we are not allowed to ship that coal in an English ship and sell it to the United States Government. I say the time has come to amend the law so as to protect the Government; not that I am complaining, but I wish to call attention to the fact that the United States Government is losing $5.20 a ton on more than 50,000 tons of coal to-day.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] will doubtless accept an amendment making this bill general. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I do not wish to interfere with the gentleman's bill, but merely to call attention to the condition of things.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to go into an extended discussion of the shipping laws of the United States. They have resulted in giving us ample tonnage to do all the coasting trade of the country, without any sort of question whatever. The only reason of the high freights which the gentleman from Alabama mentions is the high cost of marine insurance. If this same English tramp steamer could carry coal in the coastwise trade under our present laws, then, instead of charging $1 a ton, she would charge as much as the Plant system charges for carrying the same coal by rail.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the facts are the same in regard to the carriage of other commodities to the Gulf. I know the rates there, because I am acquainted with the shipping business carried on.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no doubt there are many persons who would be glad to have us extend a privilege which no other civilized nation extends—allowing vessels of other flags to come in and do our coastwise trade.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The question being taken, the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PROTECTION OF HOMESTEAD SETTLERS ENTERING UNITED STATES SERVICE.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the Senate bill which was brought to the attention of the House yesterday, Senate bill No. 4676, for the protection of homestead settlers who enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war.

The bill as heretofore published was again read.

Mr. DOCKERY. I presume the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is now ready to offer an amendment or substitute in compliance with the suggestion made yesterday.

Mr. LACEY. This is the same bill which we laid over yesterday in order to look up one feature connected with it; and if we enter upon the consideration of the bill, an amendment will be offered to meet the suggestion made yesterday by the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD].

Mr. MORRIS. I have prepared an amendment.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to offer one or two suggestions regarding this bill. I shall not object to its consideration; but I want to call the attention of the House to a condition that seems to exist. There is an insane desire apparently in the Departments and on the part of the great majority in Congress to enact special war legislation. Here is one of the instances: Yesterday a bill relating to homestead settlement was sought to be brought up by unanimous consent, without any investigation whatever upon the part of the Committee on Public Lands. Their attention was called to a defect in the bill; and now, after very casual investigation of the matter, they bring it up again.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that this bill, even with the amendment which is contemplated, will accomplish anything. If it can accomplish anything, it will only accomplish harm. A person who has entered upon a homestead does not by entering the Army to-day lose any rights which he might have under existing law, because a settler upon a homestead is still a settler so long as he maintains his residence upon that homestead. No person here can assume that any man loses a residence by reason of the fact of his going into the United States Army.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from California to the fact that the Land Office has already decided the question, and decided that a soldier in the existing war who leaves his homestead loses his residence and loses his homestead rights. The opinion of the Assistant Attorney-General for the Interior Department has been taken upon the question, and it has been affirmatively decided in the manner I have stated—decided on the 18th of last month.

Mr. LOUD. Permit me to say that if there has been any such decision it has been rendered upon a wholly hypothetical case, and I question whether the Attorney-General would render a decision upon the suggestion of any individual.

Mr. LACEY. I read the decision this morning.

Mr. LOUD. I do not care whether the Attorney-General has rendered such a decision or not, it can not stand before any court in this country. The mere assumption that a person loses his residence by reason of the fact that he has entered the United States service is too absurd for discussion before this body. If the Attorney-General has rendered such a decision upon some query of some gentleman, I should like to know what questions were involved.

Mr. MORRIS. Will the gentleman permit me a word?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. MORRIS. I introduced in this House a bill of similar import to the one now under consideration. I was prompted to do this by a letter from my home stating that men who were homestead settlers, and who had gone into the volunteer service, desired that this question should be settled. I gave some little examination to the existing law on the subject, and I was in some doubt whether or not the present law would cover the case. That law will be found in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes. But not being entirely satisfied upon the question, I waited upon the Assistant Attorney-General for the Interior Department and had an interview with him on the subject.

He took the letter which I brought him from one of my constituents and said he would look into the matter, and he asked me to call again. A day or two afterwards I did call, and he stated that he was satisfied the present law would not cover the case. He stated further that he thought the bill which I introduced would cover the case. Now, upon examination of the Senate bill I find it is practically and substantially the same as my own, with the exception that the Senate bill does not make any provision for men who may be wounded or disabled by reason of their service in the present war with Spain.

I think I can state positively to the gentleman from California that the law officers of the Interior Department are entirely satisfied that the legislation now proposed is necessary to cover the cases of homesteaders who go into the Army in the present war. Otherwise I should never have introduced the bill. I examined the matter carefully, not desiring to introduce any bill on the subject unless it was necessary.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, as I said when I first took the floor, there seems to be an insane desire on the part of all the Departments, as well as a great many members of Congress, to introduce special war legislation. A few days ago we had a bill presented here from the Post-Office Department proposing such legislation; and, as you well know, Mr. Speaker, that Department has been persistently importuning members of this House to pass special war legislation.

Finally they did present a bill in a modified form, that I do not believe can inflict any injury, and to satisfy the Department that bill was passed. Now, a bill came up here yesterday which has been demonstrated to be dangerous in its character. This bill in its present shape, with the amendment which you propose to put on it, I believe to be still dangerous, because whether it includes past wars I am unable to determine. If it does include past wars, then it is going to give a privilege to men who have in days gone by received large land warrants and large land bounties for their services to the United States Government, and I think a measure of this kind should go to the Committee on Public Lands and lie there a day or two, until the chairman and that committee have had ample opportunity to investigate the law in all its bearings, and let us know just what this bill does mean, particularly when there is no haste about it.

If there ever should be any necessity, the necessity can not arise for many months. Nobody can come to harm by waiting a month. I do not believe there is any necessity for the bill. It may possibly be dangerous in some of its provisions. One hole was discovered in it yesterday. I think if the chairman will wait another twenty-four or forty-eight hours he possibly could prepare a bill that would not be dangerous in any of its provisions.

Mr. MORRIS. Will the gentleman from California again permit an interruption?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. MORRIS. I would say to the gentleman from California that this House bill has been before the Committee on Public Lands of this House for about three weeks, I think, and has been carefully considered by that committee.

Mr. LOUD. Why do you not pass that, then?

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the bill before the House, if there is no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. Now, I will say to my friend from California, the bill being before the House, that even without the limitation which the gentleman suggested yesterday this bill could not be dangerous. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS] has, however, prepared an amendment embodying precisely the same limitation as the one which the gentleman from California had in his mind yesterday, but concerning which he was in some error as to the length of time.

The limitation is one year, not two, as stated by my friend yesterday. With that modification added to this bill it would provide that no man could get a homestead in less than one year's actual residence and cultivation, but he may have credit for the time that he serves in this war; or, if he shall be disabled by wounds, and his term of service thereby be cut short, that he shall have credit for his term of enlistment in this war, which is precisely the language of the act under which the soldiers of 1861 got the benefits of the homestead law.

Now, as to any "insane desire" to do something for the soldiers, so far as that is concerned, I think my friend is supersensitive. He thinks we had better wait until this war is over before we provide that these men shall not lose their homesteads. He thinks we should do that for fear that we might do something rash. This bill that was passed in the Senate was drawn in the Land Office. The bill which was reported and is upon the House Calendar, by the report of the Committee on Public Lands of the House, was drawn by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS]. I think it is a good bill. I think, however, that in some respects the Senate bill is preferable. On the other hand, the provision of the gentleman's bill as to giving credit for the full term of enlistment where soldiers are discharged on account of wounds, etc., is a feature of the Morris bill which is better than the Senate bill, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS] will offer an amendment to include that. I think it ought to be included.

Now, in regard to the necessity for this legislation, this morning I read the decision of the Land Office on this identical question. The question was submitted to the Assistant Attorney-General for the Interior Department, and he affirmatively decided that soldiers can not enter the war with Spain and leave their homesteads and at the same time retain the benefit of their settlements. Now, that being the case, it certainly is an emergency matter that should be promptly disposed of, and I think in bringing it up we ought to be free from the imputation of having done it in order to seem superserviceable and excessively anxious in the interest of the new soldier as well as the old soldier. I think my friend from California [Mr. LOUD] does not do us justice when he makes that imputation.

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman will yield to me right there, the gentleman seems to intimate that this bill is carefully guarded by investigation of a committee, and he states that this Senate bill was drawn in the Land Office and is much desired by that Department. Now, I ask, why do you not try to pass that bill through this House? It came here drawn, carefully guarded, as you say, by the Land Office. Why do you seek to modify it now?

Mr. LACEY. Well, for the reason that my friend is so much afraid that somebody serving two years in the Army might get credit for five years.

Mr. LOUD. Well, are not you afraid of it, too?

Mr. LACEY. I have been trying to accommodate my friend in the imaginary difficulties which confronted him yesterday. Theoretically, he is right, as a matter of law. Practically, nobody could get a homestead without living on it, when the law requires five years' residence and his enlistment is only for two years. But this war may last for five years. It may last for ten, and I am willing to yield to the suggestion made by the gentleman from California and put into this law the same provision that we have in the act in relation to the soldiers of 1861-1865. It is well enough to put it in. I do not see any objection to it, and I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS] to offer his amendment.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk the amendment which I wish to offer.

Mr. LOUD (to Mr. LACEY). I would not do it unless I thought it ought to be done.

The amendment of Mr. MORRIS was read, as follows:

Insert at the end of line 4, page 2, after the word "service," the following: "Provided, That if such settler shall be discharged on account of wounds received or disability incurred in the line of duty, then the term of his enlistment shall be deducted from the required length of residence without reference to the time of actual service: Provided further, That no patent shall issue to any homestead settler who has not resided upon, improved, and cultivated his homestead for a period of at least one year after he shall have commenced his improvements."

Mr. MORRIS. That amendment is in exact conformity—

Mr. SIMS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he is serious when he says the present war may last ten years?

Mr. LACEY. Oh, anything may happen. I do not think it will last that long. I hope it will not last three months.

Mr. SIMS. I think it would be very encouraging to Spain to let her know that we thought that.

Mr. LACEY. It may not encourage them if they understand that we are going to reach the right end of it if it takes ten years. I think perhaps that suggestion would be well for the Spanish to understand.

I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOVE].

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Speaker, I presented a case of this kind to the Secretary of the Interior, covering the very points that have been brought up by the gentlemen this morning, and I think from the experiences I had in that case that a bill of this kind is very essential and should pass. I received a letter from a constituent in Mississippi who had volunteered, and who had been living for a short time upon a homestead, had improved it, but had not resided there sufficiently long to prove his title to the property. He wrote to know what the result would be, for he had enlisted, and perhaps might stay in the Army and away from home until he would lose all claim to this little homestead upon which he had settled. I presented the letter to the Secretary of the Interior, and he said that at present there was no law that would cover a case of that kind, and he referred me to the bill that was then pending in the Senate and is now before the House.

He said that unless that bill or some similar measure passed Congress there was no relief or protection for a man in a situation of that kind. Now, I should like to say to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] that if there is any man in this country whom I should like to protect it is the poor man who is willing to leave his little homestead and family and go out and fight the battles of his country.

The gentleman states that there is no necessity for this law. The officials of the Land Office assert to the contrary. Now, the passage of such an act can certainly do no harm and may result in protecting the humble homesteads of many poor men who temporarily are absent in the Army and who can not afford to leave their unprotected families all alone on a tract of isolated woodland. Let us protect the homes of our soldiers during their absence.

In this particular instance the man said he could not leave his wife and one child on his little place; that he had to move them back to his mother's home, and it would be impossible for this little homestead to be occupied while he was in the war.

I submit to gentlemen on this floor if it is not altogether right and almost imperative that we should pass some legislation that will protect men in cases of this kind.

Mr. GAINES. I should like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question.

Mr. LACEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. GAINES. And then I should like to have the gentleman yield to me to enable me to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I believe that when this bill is understood, and the necessity for it is understood, there will be no real opposition to it.

The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] is laboring under a misapprehension in assuming that cases will not arise for months to come. Cases have arisen now. For instance, there are eighteen members of one company of soldiers who went from North Dakota who are homesteaders.

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman will permit me, I did not assume that cases would not arise; but, notwithstanding the decision of the Assistant Attorney-General, I hold that no man loses his residence by reason of going into the Army.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. You are putting up your opinion against the opinion of the members of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LOUD. Well, they are not very positive about it.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. And against the Attorney-General and others who have looked into the question. You may be right. If it were an open question, I should be inclined to hold with the gentleman from California, because his view looks reasonable; but here is doubt and uncertainty which we can remove. After all, the principal sufferings of any war are mental sufferings, uncertainty, distress, anguish as to distant friends and families.

It would be a great comfort to the homestead settlers now serving in the Army to know that Congress has by special act preserved their rights for them while they are absent in the service. The families of eighteen members of a company in my district are living on homesteads in this way. Now is the time when settlers are rushing into that country. Wherever there is a piece of unoccupied land they have a right under the laws to take it. Of course you gentlemen think of the law of residence as applied to your own cases, as you can leave home for three or six months and retain the right to vote; but the Land Department is much more strict than that in requiring actual residence on these lands. Absence from these lands, even for a day or a week, may forfeit the land.

Let me tell you the experience I had myself. I settled on a homestead on the 4th of April, 1884, and when I went there the snow was 8 feet deep. I shoveled out the snow, built a little board shanty, and lived there three weeks. When the snow melted, I found a lake around me covering nearly all my land. I could not live in a lake, so I moved my family onto the dry land in another township and stayed there for three weeks, until the water evaporated or ran away. As soon as it was dry enough to move my wife and babies back, I moved them back, and when I came to prove up, the United States Land Office deducted not only the three weeks I had actually resided there while the snow was melting, but also the three weeks I was absent on account of the flood, and made me go back in the dead of winter and live there six weeks longer before I could obtain title to my homestead.

The law requires that the residence shall be continuous, and from the fact that I was absent three weeks when I could not live there with my family in the water, they made me go back and suffer great hardships to make up the six weeks that they deducted.

Now, that is the way these laws are applied. If the family of one of these soldiers, by reason of flood, or fire, or sickness, should move into town, or move, as I did, just a few rods onto dry land, they would forfeit their rights. Now, we can remove from these soldiers the anxiety. We can remove from them the uncertainty by speaking positively and telling them that no man in the Army shall lose his homestead in this way.

It is not crazy to pass a bill of this kind and relieve the minds of these soldiers. The North Dakota troops have gone to Manila. They perhaps will not come home until the time is up that the law requires them to reside on their land. Let us send to them the cheering message that their wives and children need not necessarily live on their land; that they can move into town, or go to some of their neighbors, if necessary, and their homesteads will be safe. [Applause.]

Mr. LACEY. I now yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, on May 26 last I introduced in the House a bill (H. R. 10493) identical with the pending Senate bill. I was moved to do this because of letters received from homestead settlers in my district who had enlisted as volunteers in the war with Spain. At first I believed, and I am not certain that it is not the correct interpretation of the law, as does the gentleman from California, that a settler who enlists in the Army is not legally absent from his claim.

I submitted the question to the Department, and while the Commissioner and the Secretary were both inclined to take that view of it, the law officers for that Department held that in view of the fact that the words of section 2304 of the Revised Statutes limit it to the war between the States, the war of the rebellion, that the law as it now stands would only apply to that war, and that the settlers on public lands who may now enlist in this and in future wars would violate that provision of the homestead law which requires actual and continuous residence of five years on the land.

If that is the correct interpretation of the law, then we ought to lose no time in passing this bill, for if settlers are absent six months they become liable to a contest, and he it said to the shame of Congress it has refused to repeal section 2 of the act of May 14, 1880, which offers a premium to contestants and gives them a preferred right for thirty days against the world for the cancellation of homestead entries that may be abandoned for six months, gives them a vested right to enter it, as it were. I have earnestly endeavored to have that unjust act repealed, but I have failed so far. There is no security to the brave men who have volunteered and are willing to risk their lives in the defense of our common country that their homes will be protected from the land sharks who thrive on technicalities, unless you pass this bill. We must make them feel certain that they are in no danger of being troubled in the least.

It will not do to say that the residence of the family is sufficient. In many cases the family will not remain on the land if the war continues very long. In other cases the settler has no family. He may be a young man preparing to take care of a family who is a settler and a soldier. If the settler is over 21 years of age, he can enter land without being the head of a family. Take the case of a young man 21 years old whose homestead is temporarily abandoned that he may serve his country as a soldier. It is rented or there is no one upon it. Shall he lose it?

This bill is intended to protect the homes of just such men. And so far as I am concerned, I hope we will say that no man shall initiate a contest against a soldier settler because he is absent in the service of his country, whether the absence be six months or longer. Now, the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota, providing for an actual residence for at least one year in order to entitle any settler to secure a patent is perhaps unnecessary in this case, because it is not likely that war will continue beyond four years.

But there can be no objection to it. I do not believe any settler ought to acquire a title to homestead land without actually establishing a home upon it and showing his good faith and purpose to maintain it by at least one year's residence and cultivation whether he has been in the Army or not. This bill is intended to protect and cover the rights of settlers who enlist in this war—men who had homes and who, since establishing them, have enlisted in defense of their country. You can not very well adapt the act of June 8, 1872, to such cases, and gentlemen should not confuse the two classes of cases.

That act was an effort to give soldiers who had performed military services and who might homestead lands rights not accorded to other settlers. It was passed long after the war to which it applied had ceased. The homestead act itself was not passed until May 30, 1863, long after the war had been commenced. There is a vast difference between the two classes of soldiers. And the conditions which now confront us are not at all like those which existed in 1872, so far as settlers are concerned. I hope there will be no objection to the passage of the bill. It is necessary in order to let the brave, patriotic homesteaders who have enlisted in the Army understand that their homes shall be protected, so far as the title is concerned. To do less for them would be disgraceful and outrageous.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Did not the Committee on Public Lands prepare an amendatory act limiting this special homestead privilege to soldiers in active service; and will not that provision remain as law?

Mr. McRAE. I have no objection to the amendment proposed.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. And consequently the objection of the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] is obviated by that amendment.

Mr. McRAE. That, I think, is true. This bill simply provides that—

In every case in which a settler on the public land of the United States under the homestead laws enlists or is actually engaged in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States as private soldier, officer, seaman, or marine during the existing war with Spain, or during any other war in which the United States may be engaged, his services therein shall, in the administration of the homestead laws, be construed to be equivalent to all intents and purposes to residence and cultivation for the same length of time upon the tract entered or settled upon; and hereafter no contest shall be initiated on the ground of abandonment, nor allegation of abandonment sustained against any such settler, unless it shall be alleged in the preliminary affidavit or affidavits of contest, and proved at the hearing in cases hereafter initiated, that the settler's alleged absence from the land was not due to his employment in such service.

If a settler has entered land and afterwards enters the military service, the purpose of this bill is that the period of his military service is to be construed as residence upon the land, and any man who may contest his entry for absence shall be required to allege and prove affirmatively that the settler's alleged absence was not due to his employment in the Army or Navy. It will not help the speculator, but will protect the honest settler from him.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that this amendment was offered in part to remedy the objection made yesterday by the gentleman from California. It follows the exact language of the Revised Statutes as they now exist in regard to homesteaders who were soldiers in the last war.

The other part of the amendment is intended to meet cases where a man has enlisted in the Army, and while the war is going on is either wounded or disabled in the service. It provides that the soldier in such cases shall have the benefit of his whole term of enlistment, no matter whether he is in the Army one month or three months or six months.

As to the necessity for this legislation, I will say in answer to what the gentleman from California has said, that no matter whether it be the law now or not that a soldier has the right to leave his homestead and enter the Army, this legislation is at least necessary to put that question at rest, and to prevent the homesteader from being subjected to the trouble and expense of a contest, and, more than that, to put his mind at rest while he is serving his country.

Mr. LACEY. I now call for a vote on the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Pending the announcement of the vote on the motion to adjourn,

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10525. An act authorizing certain life-saving stations to be opened and manned during June and July, 1898.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 1703. An act granting an increase of pension to Nancy G. Allabach;

S. 1910. An act conferring on the supreme court of the District of Columbia jurisdiction to take proof of the execution of wills affecting real estate, and for other purposes;

S. 4100. An act granting an increase of pension to Simeon Stevens;

S. 4401. An act granting an increase of pension to Susan D. Yates;

S. 4554. An act to authorize the establishment of post-offices at military posts or camps; and

S. 4578. An act to remove the disability imposed by section 3 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SHOWALTER, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. STURTEVANT, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. FOWLER of North Carolina, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for improving Elk River, Tennessee and Alabama—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for improving West Fork River, West Virginia—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. WANGER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10281) authorizing the Light-House Board to provide a steam whistle at Michigan City, Ind., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1505); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10548) to provide an American register for the steamship China, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1506); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. FISCHER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4073) to ratify an agreement with the Indians of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation in Idaho, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1507); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SNOVER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4048) granting to the Kettle River Valley Railway Company a right of way through the north half of the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1508); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOOKER, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9308) for the survey of the harbor at Portwing, Wis., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1509); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 10584) regulating the appointment of justices of the peace within and for the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: A bill (H. R. 10585) designating Titusville, Crawford County, Pa., a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Erie, Pa.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. JOY: A bill (H. R. 10586) granting a pension to John Blattner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MIERS of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 10587) granting a pension to John Greer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBBINS: A bill (H. R. 10588) granting an increase of pension to Henry Bullen—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10530) granting a pension to John McElheney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHATTUC: A bill (H. R. 10590) granting pension to Harry S. Doss, late pilot of the United States ram Lancaster—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAMS: Resolution of Irish-American Societies in Philadelphia, Pa., in opposition to the so-called "Anglo-Saxon alliance"—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petitions of Miller Brothers, A. B. Cunningham & Co., and Munkenberg Brothers, all business firms of Philadelphia, Pa., tobacco and snuff manufacturers, protesting against additional tax on snuff, tobacco, etc., in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: Petition of Typographical Union No. 80, of Kansas City, Mo., in favor of postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of the Swedish Congregational Church of St. Louis, Mo., favoring legislation providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FITZPATRICK: Affidavits of J. M. Hall, Isaac Short, and Jemima Gretton, in support of the claim of B. L. Davis, of Johnson County, Ky., for pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOY: Petition and affidavit of John Blattner, of St. Louis, Mo., to accompany House bill for his relief—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LITTLE: Petition of L. & E. Wertheimer and 6 other tobacco dealers, of Pine Bluff, Ark., protesting against the war-revenue tax on snuff and tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MAXWELL: Affidavit of Spencer S. Peake, to accompany House bill No. 8952, granting a pension to John C. Knapp—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MCALEER: Petition of Samson Lodge, No. 67, Knights of Pythias, of Philadelphia, Pa., indorsing House bill 6468, granting a lease of public land from the Government for the establishment of a national Pythian sanitarium at Hot Springs, Ark.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, protest of Irish-American citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., against any entangling alliance with England—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. STARK: Petition of William Crosby & Son and 7 other business firms, of Ulysses, Nebr., protesting against additional tax on tobacco in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Franklin, Nebr., asking for the passage of the bill to raise the age of protection for girls—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Epworth League of Indianola, Nebr., for the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petitions of the Epworth League of Indianola, Nebr., favoring the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws and to forbid the interstate transmission of lottery messages by telegraph—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 6, 1898.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. HALE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was dispensed with.

MILITARY AND NAVAL DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. HALE. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back with amendments the bill (H. R. 10565) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading be dispensed with and that the committee amendments be considered as they are reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that course will be pursued.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 1, line 18, after the word "commanding," to strike out "general" and insert "officer;" and in the same line, after the word "of," to insert "the United States military forces at;" so as to make the clause read:

CONTINGENCIES OF THE ARMY.

For contingent expenses of the Army, incident to the expedition to the Philippine Islands, to be expended under the direction of the commanding officer of the United States military forces at the Philippine Islands, in his discretion, for such purposes as he may deem best in the execution of his duties under the orders of the President, and for such objects as are not now appropriated for, to be available until expended, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 6, after the word "dollars," to insert:

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

For printing and binding for the War Department and its bureaus, to be executed under the direction of the Public Printer and to remain available until expended, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Navy Department emergency fund," on page 5, to strike out lines 9, 10, and 11, in the following words:

For emergency fund to meet contingencies that can not possibly be foreseen, but which constantly arise under existing conditions, $10,000,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For special necessities of the various naval squadrons; for the charter or purchase of suitable vessels; for the increase of small craft attached to the various squadrons, and for replacing such as may be lost or destroyed; for maintaining and destroying communication, and for obtaining information, $10,000,000, of which sum not more than $500,000 may be used to meet contingencies that can not be foreseen, but which constantly arise under existing conditions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Quartermaster-General of the Army, together with a draft of a bill providing for the better organization of the Quartermaster's Department, with a view to the proper transaction of the large volume of additional work placed upon the Department by the sudden increase of the regular and volunteer forces of the Army; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LUCRETIA C. WARING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 104) to increase the pension of Lucretia C. Waring, which was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. SHOUP, and Mr. MITCHELL were appointed.

MARY E. CHAMBERLAIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1118) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Chamberlain.

The amendments were, in line 8, after the word "pension," to insert the words "at the rate;" and in the same line, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

ADONIA HUARD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1131) granting a pension to Adonia Huard, of New Orleans, La., widow of Hypolite Huard, deceased, which was, in line 9, to strike out all after the word "her" to and including the word "thereto," in the same line, and to insert "a pension at the rate of $8 per month."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

BETTIE HORD BROWN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1479) granting an increase of pension to Bettie Hord Brown, which was, in line 7, to strike out the word "allow" and insert the word "pay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

HALBERT E. PAINE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1481) granting an increase of pension to Gen. Halbert E. Paine.

The amendments were, in line 6, after the word "of," to strike out "General;" in line 7, after the word "pension," to insert "at the rate;" and to amend the title so as to read: "An act granting an increase of pension to Halbert E. Paine."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move concurrence in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AMOS WEBSTER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3553) granting a pension to Bvt. Lieut. Col. Amos Webster.

The amendments were, in line 8, after the word "Army," to insert "and pay him a pension;" and to amend the title so as to read: "An act granting a pension to Amos Webster."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS EDSALL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3660) granting a pension to Thomas Edsall, which was, in line 7, to strike out the words "that he be paid" and insert "pay him."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move concurrence in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 360) for the relief of Robert McFarland;

A bill (H. R. 3190) granting an honorable discharge to John H. Smith;

A bill (H. R. 4607) granting an honorable discharge to Charles Miller;

A bill (H. R. 5707) for the removal of the charge of desertion against William Mellicott, alias William Reed, late of Company G, Eighth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry Volunteers, and legalizing his service in Company E, Eleventh Regiment Tennessee Cavalry Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 6317) to remove charge of desertion against Alexander McKee;

A bill (H. R. 6718) for the relief of Samuel Racey; and

A bill (H. R. 8854) to correct the military record of William Hazelbeck, of Portsmouth, Ohio.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 727) granting a pension to Olive H. South;

A bill (H. R. 795) granting an increase of pension to William Henry Smith;

A bill (H. R. 909) granting an increase of pension to Lucy D. Heady;

A bill (H. R. 1529) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Nevitt;

A bill (H. R. 1712) granting an increase of pension to Joel H. Hallowell;

A bill (H. R. 3081) granting an increase of pension to Michael J. Fogarty;

A bill (H. R. 3164) granting a pension to Alden B. Thompson, of Farmvale, Hamilton County, Nebr.;

A bill (H. R. 3565) to grant a pension to Theresa Bonnavau;

A bill (H. R. 3612) to increase the pension of Thomas D. Porter;

A bill (H. R. 4251) granting a pension to Margaret Thomas;

A bill (H. R. 4274) granting an increase of pension to James S. Chapman;

A bill (H. R. 4484) granting a pension to Miriam V. Kenny;

A bill (H. R. 4811) granting a pension to Jane E. Zink;

A bill (H. R. 4916) granting a pension to Virginia C. Fleanor;

A bill (H. R. 5054) granting a pension to Rachel J. Comer;

A bill (H. R. 5089) to pension Jacob N. Atherton;

A bill (H. R. 6064) granting a pension to Mary A. Watts;

A bill (H. R. 6482) granting a pension to Herbert W. Leach;

A bill (H. R. 6526) granting a pension to Mary Ann Sullivan;

A bill (H. R. 6841) granting an increase of pension to James O. Hervey;

A bill (H. R. 7306) granting an increase of pension to Samuel H. Beckwith;

A bill (H. R. 7506) granting a pension to Susan E. Fielder;

A bill (H. R. 7696) granting an increase of pension to William Christenberry;

A bill (H. R. 7841) granting an increase of pension to George S. Walton;

A bill (H. R. 7844) to increase the pension of Mary Brogan;

A bill (H. R. 7989) granting an increase of pension to Annie J. Bassett;

A bill (H. R. 8296) granting an increase of pension to Alphonzo O. Drake;

A bill (H. R. 8670) granting a pension to Pryor Perkins;

A bill (H. R. 8724) granting a pension to Addie L. Ballou;

A bill (H. R. 9822) granting a pension to Mary C. Gardheffner;

A bill (H. R. 9755) granting a pension to Matilda Waedel; and

A bill (H. R. 9765) to increase the pension of John N. Wiley.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of Web Pressmen's Union No. 3, of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of New York, praying for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MALLORY presented a petition of the National Fishery Congress held at Tampa, Fla., praying for the establishment of a national fish hatchery and laboratory at some central point on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

Mr. McMILLAN presented the memorial of O. E. Kewley, of Badaxe, Mich., and the memorial of Robert B. Honey, of Dexter, Mich., remonstrating against the adoption of Schedule B in the war-revenue bill, placing a tax on proprietary medicines; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry seamen of the Pacific Coast, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 95, providing for the amelioration of existing conditions in the merchant marine; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAVIS presented a memorial of the Minnesota Homeopathic Association, remonstrating against any discretion being made in the appointment of surgeons in the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the passage of the so-called convict-labor bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of Local Union No. 98, Cigar Makers' International Union, of St. Paul, Minn., remonstrating against the proposed increase of the tax on cigars; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented a petition of the Indiana Society, Sons of the American Revolution, praying for the purchase and preservation by the Government of old Fort Ticonderoga; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of the Indiana Society, Sons of the American Revolution, praying for the purchase and maintenance of Fort Ticonderoga; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the memorial of the Ferrin National Bank Company of Lafayette, Ind., remonstrating against the proposed tax on national-bank stock; which was ordered to lie on the table.

LIST OF DOCUMENTS ON SILVER QUESTION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I present a list of papers bearing upon the silver question printed by order of the Senate since 1893, which I ask may be printed as a document for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The order is made.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PASCO. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4690) for the relief of certain homestead settlers in Florida, to report it without amendment. I ask leave of the Senate to file a written report a little later. It is not yet quite prepared.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, and leave granted to file a written report hereafter.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 165) to amend the joint resolution permitting Anson Mills, colonel of Third Regiment United States Cavalry, to accept and exercise the functions of boundary commissioner on the part of the United States, approved December 12, 1893, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PETTUS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4326) to regulate the sitting of the United States courts within the district of South Carolina, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MONEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10420) for the relief of Miss M. O. Chapman, of Paulding, Jasper County, Miss., reported it without amendment.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I present the report of the committee of conference on House bill 8428, and I ask that it be read. I shall be glad if the conference report can be considered now. There are a good many details in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks for the present consideration of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANDLER. I object until it is read.

Mr. ALLISON. Oh, certainly; I only ask that it may be considered after it is read.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Chair is sometimes quick and Senators are precluded by unanimous-consent agreements which they do not intend to make.

Mr. ALLISON. I am requested by Senators around me to allow the report to be laid aside for a few moments until some further morning business is disposed of. I have no objection to that course.

COUNSEL IN PRIZE CASES.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4707) to provide for the compensation and expenses of special counsel for the Government in prize cases, to report it without amendment. I desire to have the bill immediately considered.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Attorney-General to stipulate with and fix the compensation of any special counsel engaged by him on the part of the Government in any prize cause to which the United States may be a party or otherwise interested, and also to allow to such special counsel proper traveling and other expenses and disbursements incident to such employment; and the amount of such compensation and expenses, when so fixed and determined, shall be certified by the Attorney-General to the court in which such cause shall be pending, and be allowed and paid out of the proceeds of such prize.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Mr. CARTER. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back favorably with an amendment the joint resolution (S. R. 172) for the relief of Richard J. Steedman, United States Army. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That during the existing war the President may, in his discretion, waive the one year suspension from promotion and forthwith order the reexamination provided in certain cases by the third proviso of section 8 of the act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army, and to regulate promotions therein."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CARTER, the title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing the President in his discretion to waive the one-year suspension from promotion, and to order reexamination of officers of the Army in certain cases."

HISTORY OF RED CROSS.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed of the History of the Red Cross, authorized to be prepared and printed under joint resolution of Congress, approved August 3, 1883, and thereafter printed under the direction of the Secretary of State, together with the report on America's relief expedition to Asia Minor, under the Red Cross, 65,000 copies, of which number 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 10,000 for the House of Representatives, and 50,000 for the American National Red Cross, to be distributed by Miss Clara Barton, president. The copies herein provided for to be distributed by the president of the American National Red Cross shall be transmitted through the mails free of postage when contained in a wrapper bearing the following inscription: "Public Document. History of the Red Cross. Free."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (S. 4713) relative to the Corps of Engineers of the Army;

A bill (S. 4714) to protect the harbor defenses and fortifications constructed or used by the United States from malicious injury, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 4715) in reference to photographing any guns which would give the strength of any fortification of the United States.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 4716) to incorporate the National Congress of Mothers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. QUAY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4717) authorizing the use of typewriting machines for the recording of deeds and other instruments of writing in the office of the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MASON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4718) to provide pensions for freedmen, and so forth; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4719) to give the franking privilege to the soldiers and sailors of the United States during the war with Spain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 4720) for the relief of Benjamin S. Barnes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment relative to the claims of the William Cramp & Sons Ship and Engine Building Company, for damages and losses sustained by it by reason of the failure of the United States to promptly furnish the armor, armament, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WAR REVENUE BILL.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was Ordered, That 600 additional copies of H. R. 10100, as passed by the Senate, with Senate amendments numbered, be printed for the use of the Senate, to be sent to the Senate document room.

PAY OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. SHOUP submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed by the Committee on Territories to report testimony in relation to the necessity of a better government for Alaska be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

HUGO O. LOEWI.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to the Senate, if not in his opinion incompatible with the interests of the public service, all the papers relating to the claim of Hugo O. Loewi for his expulsion from Hayti, including the correspondence with the Haytian Government, the communications made by the said Loewi or his attorney to the Department of State, and also the papers printed in Document No. 186, Senate, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, in chronological order.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. PASCO, on his own motion, was excused from further service upon the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHILTON was, on his own motion, excused from further service on the Committee on Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am requested by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] to ask that he be relieved from further service on the Committee on Immigration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, Mr. SULLIVAN was appointed a member of the following-named committees:

On Civil Service and Retrenchment, on Immigration, on Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries, on Public Lands, to Establish the University of the United States, and on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress (Select).

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed with an amendment the bill (S. 4676) for the protection of homestead settlers who enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DINGLEY, Mr. PAYNE, and Mr. BAILEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

EDWARD STARR.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5006) to increase the pension of Edward Starr, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment in line 7, relating to the amount named therein.

And that the House of Representatives recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the words "at the rate" proposed to be inserted therein, and agree to the same.

J. H. GALLINGER,
JAMES H. KYLE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
GEO. W. RAY,
V. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

PETER CASTLE.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 438) granting an increase of pension to Peter Castle, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment in line 7, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to a new amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "twenty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

And that the House of Representatives recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate in line 8, and agree to the same.

J. H. GALLINGER,
GEORGE L. SHOUP,
RICHARD R. KENNEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
GEO. W. RAY,
V. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

LOWELL H. HOPKINSON.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 378) granting a pension to Lowell H. Hopkinson, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment in line 8.
That the House of Representatives recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate relating to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

J. H. GALLINGER,
FRANK J. CANNON,
LUCIEN BAKER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
GEO. W. RAY,
V. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

CATHERINE CLIFFORD.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1801) granting an increase of pension to Catherine Clifford, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment in line 7, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to a new amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "twenty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

And that the House of Representatives recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the words "at the rate," in lines 6 and 7, and agree to the same.

J. H. GALLINGER,
H. C. HANSBROUGH,
W. N. ROACH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
GEO. W. RAY,
V. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 4th instant approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. 1883) for the appointment of a commission to make allotments of lands in severalty to Indians upon the Uintah Indian Reservation in Utah, and to obtain the cession to the United States of all lands within said reservation not so allotted;

An act (S. 4108) granting to the Washington Improvement and Development Company a right of way through the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 148) providing for the printing of House Document No. 396, relating to the beet-sugar industry in the United States.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill may be now read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8428) "making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 12, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 31, 32, 33, 35, 37, 39, 46, 47, 48, 54, 55, 56, 57, 59, 60, 62, 63, 68, 69, 93, 94, 105, 106, 107, 108, 129, 132, 143, 147, 148, 152, 156, 161, 163, 168, 170, 181, 215, 236, 238, 240, 249, and 251.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 19, 28, 29, 30, 34, 36, 38, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 58, 61, 70, 72, 77, 78, 79, 80, 82, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 95, 96, 100, 102, 103, 104, 110, 111, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 123, 131, 133, 139, 140, 141, 144, 151, 154, 155, 157, 158, 159, 160, 162, 167, 169, 170, 171, 172, 177, 191, 192, 193, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 201, 202, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 216, 217, 220, 223, 225, 226, 227, 229, 230, 231, 232, 234, 237, 241, 242, 243, 245, 246, 248, 252, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, and 270, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "Michigan," in lines 7 and 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the matter inserted by said amendment insert as a separate paragraph the following:

"That not exceeding $100,000 of the foregoing sums for immigrant station, Ellis Island, New York, shall be paid from the immigrant fund."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For quarantine station, San Francisco, Cal.: For steam disinfecting boiler and baths for quarantine hulk Omaha, $1,000; additions to disinfecting apparatus, $2,500; bichloride tank and pipes, $500; in all, $3,700."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$425,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$600,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of said amendment, after the word "and," insert the word "at;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 81, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, further, That hereafter all bonds, notes, and checks shall be printed from hand-roller presses;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$165,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,500;" and on page 42 of the bill, in line 12, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "one," and after line 13, insert as a separate paragraph the following:

"For one general inspector, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $3,000, and for actual necessary expenses, not exceeding $1,000; in all, $4,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "As additional compensation;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 53 of the bill, at the end of line 15, insert the word "first;" and in line 1 of said amendment, after the word "and," insert the words "second, to surveying under;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 134, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That where, prior to January 1, 1898, the whole or any part of an odd-numbered section, in either the granted or the indemnity limits of the land grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, to which the right of the grantee or its lawful successor is claimed to have attached by definite location or selection, has been purchased directly from the United States or settled upon or claimed in good faith by any qualified settler under color of title or claim of right under any law of the United States or any ruling of the Interior Department, and where purchaser, settler, or claimant refuses to transfer his entry as hereinafter provided, the railroad grantee or its successor in interest, upon a proper relinquishment thereof, shall be entitled to select in lieu of the land relinquished an equal quantity of public lands, surveyed or unsurveyed, not mineral or reserved, and not valuable for stone, iron, or coal, and free from valid adverse claim, or not occupied by settlers at the time of such selection, situated within any State or Territory into which such railroad grant extends, and patents shall issue for the land so selected as though it had been originally granted; but all selections of unsurveyed lands shall be of odd-numbered sections, to be identified by the survey when made, and patent therefor shall issue to and in the name of the corporation surrendering the lands before mentioned, and such patents shall not issue until after the survey: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior shall from time to time ascertain and, as soon as conveniently may be done, cause to be prepared and delivered to the said railroad grantee or its successor in interest a list or lists of the several tracts which have been purchased or settled upon or occupied as aforesaid, and are now claimed by said purchasers or occupants, their heirs or assigns, according to the smallest Government subdivisions. And all right, title, and interest of the said railroad grantee or its successor in interest in and to any of such tracts which the said railroad grantee or its successor in interest may relinquish hereunder shall revert to the United States, and such tracts shall be treated, under the laws thereof, in the same manner as if no rights thereto had ever vested in the said railroad grantee, and all qualified persons who have occupied and may be on said lands as herein provided, or who have purchased said lands in good faith as aforesaid, their heirs and assigns, shall be permitted to prove their title to said lands according to law, as if said grant had never been made; and upon such relinquishment said Northern Pacific Railroad Company or its lawful successor in interest may proceed to select, in the manner hereinbefore provided, lands in lieu of those relinquished, and patents shall issue therefor: Provided further, That the railroad grantee or its successor in interest shall accept the said list or lists so to be made by the Secretary of the Interior as conclusive with respect to the particular lands to be relinquished by it, but it shall not be bound to relinquish lands sold or contracted by it or lands which it uses or needs for railroad purposes, or lands valuable for stone, iron, or coal: And provided further, That whenever any qualified settler shall in good faith make settlement in pursuance of existing law upon any odd-numbered sections of unsurveyed public lands within the said railroad grant to which the right of such railroad grantee or its successor in interest has attached, then upon proof thereof satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, and a due relinquishment of the prior railroad right, other lands may be selected in lieu thereof by said railroad grantee or its successor in interest, as hereinbefore provided, and patents shall issue therefor: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as intended or having the effect to recognize the Northern Pacific Railway Company as the lawful successor of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in the ownership of the lands granted by the United States to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, under and by virtue of foreclosure proceedings against said Northern Pacific Railroad Company in the courts of the United States, but the legal question whether the said Northern Pacific Railway Company is such lawful successor of the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, should the question be raised, shall be determined wholly without reference to the provisions of this act, and nothing in this act shall be construed as enlarging the quantity of land which the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company is entitled to under laws heretofore enacted: And provided further, That all qualified settlers, their heirs or assigns, who, prior to January 1, 1893, purchased or settled upon or claimed in good faith, under color of title or claim of right under any law of the United States or any ruling of the Interior Department, any part of an odd-numbered section in either the granted or indemnity limits of the land grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to which the right of such grantee or its lawful successor is claimed to have attached by definite location or selection, may in lieu thereof transfer their claims to an equal quantity of public lands surveyed or unsurveyed, not mineral or reserved, and not valuable for stone, iron, or coal, and free from valid adverse claim, or not occupied by a settler at the time of such entry, situated in any State or Territory into which such railroad grant extends, and make proof therefor, as in other cases provided; and in making such proof credit shall be given for the period of their bona fide residence and amount of their improvements upon their respective claims in the said granted or indemnity limits of the land grant to the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company the same as if made upon the tract to which the transfer is made; and before the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be prepared and delivered to said railroad grantee or its successor in interest any list or lists of the several tracts which have been purchased or settled upon or occupied, as hereinbefore provided, he shall notify the purchaser, settler, or claimant, his heirs or assigns, claiming against said railroad company, of his right to transfer his entry or claim, as herein provided, and shall give him or them option to take lieu lands for those claimed by him or them, or hold his claim and allow the said railroad company to do so under the terms of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 135, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$180,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 136, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$110,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$14,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 138, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$957,100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 143, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 145, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$33,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 148, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment, after the word "For," insert the words "protection of the Yosemite National Park, and the;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 150, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "years," insert the words "unless sooner evicted;" at the end of line 13, after the word "years," insert the words "unless sooner evicted;" and in line 17, after the word "Department," insert the words "and did not abandon said lands or procure title to other public lands under any law of the United States;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 153, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment insert the words "to be immediately available;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 164, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 60 of the bill, in line 8, strike out the word "seven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 165, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said Senate amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 168, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$600,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 173, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For construction and repairs of buildings at the military post at Fort Meade, S. Dak., $90,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 174, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For construction and repairs of buildings at the military post at Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., $30,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 175, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment strike out the word "permanent;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 178, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$40,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 183, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of line 3 of said amendment insert the words "leave and;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 200, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the matter inserted by said amendment insert as a separate paragraph the following:

"That the provision in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1898 making an appropriation of $30,000 for two isolating buildings to be constructed in the discretion of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia on the grounds of two hospitals, and to be operated as a part of such hospitals, is hereby repealed."

And the Senate to agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 203, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 13 of said amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and said board shall make a report of the progress of the work to the Secretary of War for transmission by him to Congress at the commencement of its next session, and submit in their report the probable and relative cost of various depths for said waterway, respectively, as follows: twenty-one and 30 feet, with a statement of the relative advantages thereof;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 218, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$257,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 219, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of said amendment strike out the word "extended" and insert in lieu thereof the word "expanded;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 223, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 225, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "10,000 of which may be expended in the discretion of the Attorney-General;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 244, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of said amendment strike out the words "to be held;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 250, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of said amendment strike out the words "Weather Bureau;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 253, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of said amendment strike out the words "legal representatives" and insert in lieu thereof the words "heirs at law;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 254, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of said amendment strike out the words "legal representatives" and insert in lieu thereof the words "heirs at law;" and the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 22, 64, 65, 73, 74, 75, 76, 97, 98, 99, 101, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 140, 173, 180, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 189, 190, 194, 221, 222, 224, 225, 239, 247, 271, and 272 the committee of conference has been unable to agree.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,

A. P. GORMAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. G. CANNON,

JOSEPH D. SAYERS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PASCO. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he desires to have the conference report acted upon to-day? There were nearly 300 amendments made to the bill by the Senate; a great many Senators were interested in different amendments, and from a hasty reading of the report it is impossible for some of us to tell what has been the fate of the amendments in which we are especially interested. If the Senator deems it important to go on with the bill to-day, I should like to ask him in reference to a few amendments in which my colleague and I are interested in behalf of our State; but it seems to me better to have the report printed and go over until to-morrow morning, which course, I think, would facilitate the adoption of the report. It was impossible to follow the hasty reading of the amendments at the desk.

Mr. ALLISON. It is important that the conference report should be considered to-day and passed upon at the earliest possible moment. There are a great many disagreements between the conferees, and it is important to have another conference. I think I can explain briefly the situation of the bill or any item in it about which the Senator may desire information.

Mr. PASCO. I will ask the Senator, then, with reference to amendment No. 10, being the appropriation for a post-office building at Jacksonville, Fla.

Mr. ALLISON. I believe the House conferees receded from their disagreement to amendment No. 10; so that that is agreed to.

Mr. PASCO. How about amendment No. 37, in regard to Hillsboro Inlet light station?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate conferees agreed to recede from that amendment. I will say to the Senator that in reference to light house buildings and stations the conferees called before them the two secretaries of the Light-House Board. The House disagreed, practically, to all our amendments on that subject, and there were a great number of them. The conferees finally agreed to call before them the two secretaries and to ask them to state which stations were the most important, and from the statement we would make up our report respecting the amendments inserted by the Senate. Whilst those two secretaries said that this light-house was important, and very important, yet it was not so important as some others.

Mr. PASCO. That light station has been recommended year after year in the Book of Estimates by the Light-House Board.

Mr. ALLISON. It has been, and it is undoubtedly a very important light. I think there was substantial assent on the part of the House conferees that next winter they would provide for that light. The Senator will see that the House conferees receded from all the important lights which the Light-House Board said were of the most urgent importance now.

Mr. PASCO. It should be remembered that this light is on the southeastern coast of Florida, and at the present time, while the War Department is very much interested there, it seems to me to be of very great importance that that light should be provided for.

Mr. ALLISON. That argument was used with the House conferees; but on account of the large amount involved for light-houses, that was one of the few that were stricken out.

Mr. PASCO. May I ask the Senator about amendment No. 70, relating to lights on the Indian River?

Mr. ALLISON. Amendment No. 70, relating to lights on the Indian River, is included.

Mr. PASCO. That is very satisfactory. I am glad to hear that.

Now, I will ask about one other amendment, and then I shall not burden the Senator with any more questions. I wish to inquire as to what has been done with the amendment providing revenue steamers for service in the Gulf of Mexico—amendment No. 75.

Mr. ALLISON. The House refused to agree to the Senate amendment as to the two light-house tenders and the two revenue steamers. Those two items have been carried into disagreement and will go into another conference.

Mr. PASCO. I thank the Senator for his information.

Mr. WILSON. I desire, if the Senator from Iowa will permit me, to ask one or two questions, in order that I may have information concerning certain amendments. On page 18 three amendments were adopted by the Senate for light stations at Point No Point, at Point Brown, and at Battery Point, in the State of Washington. I should like to inquire of the Senator what disposition was made of those amendments? I could not understand from the reading of the conference report.

Mr. ALLISON. The answer that I have to make to the Senator from Washington is substantially the one I made to the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. Respecting the three lights to which the Senator has referred, we called the two secretaries of the Light-House Board before us and asked them to state which of those was most important, and they said that amendment No. 58, relating to Point No Point light station, was the most important of the three, and the House receded from their disagreement to that amendment and the Senate receded from the other two amendments.

Mr. WILSON. With all respect to the information which those gentlemen have—and of course they have considerable—I am inclined to the opinion that Battery Point is a great deal the most dangerous place, and that a light there should have been provided for. But, as it seems that one of the three has been agreed to, I hope that next winter an appropriation will be made for the other two.

In regard to amendment No. 99, on page 50, my colleague [Mr. TURNER], who happens to be away from the Senate at this time, offered that amendment for the establishment of a fish-hatchery station in the State of Washington.

Mr. ALLISON. I would say to the Senator from Washington that the House conferees were very conservative on the matter of fish hatcheries and would agree to none of the new hatcheries which were proposed; but we have carried them all into disagreement, so that that matter has not been finally disposed of.

Mr. WILSON. There is one other item about which I have no doubt the Senator will be able to furnish some information. I inquire what is the situation in regard to the forest-reservation amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I am sorry to give the Senator the information that that amendment is also in disagreement, the House conferees not consenting to our provision; but we, of course, would not give it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the conference committee.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments which are in disagreement between the two Houses, and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives upon them.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8581) for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the consideration of Calendar No. 1072.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think I shall decline to yield at this time. I wish to go on with the bill to which I have referred a little while and see what progress we can make with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota declines to yield. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota to take up the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with and that the amendments of the Committee on Indian Affairs be acted upon as they are reached in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 2, after line 2, to strike out sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, as follows:

SEC. 3. That said courts are hereby given jurisdiction in their respective districts to try cases against those who may unlawfully and forcibly enter upon lands and tenements and detain the same, and also those who, having originally made a lawful and peaceable entry upon lands and tenements, unlawfully and by force hold the same beyond the legal period, and also those who claim to hold as members of a tribe and whose membership is denied by the tribe, but who continue to hold said lands and tenements notwithstanding the objection of the tribe; and if it be found upon trial that an unlawful and forcible entry has been made or that the said lands and tenements are held by force, or that the same, after lawful or peaceable entry, are held unlawfully, or that the same are held unlawfully against the tribe by those claiming to be members thereof, and the membership and right are disallowed by the court, then said court shall cause the parties charged with unlawfully holding said possessions to be removed from the same and cause the lands and tenements to be restored to the person or persons or nation or tribe of Indians entitled to the possession of the same: Provided always, That a person in possession of agricultural lands, holding the possession thereof under an agreement, lease, or improvement contract, with either of said nations or tribes, or any citizen thereof, executed prior to January 1, 1898, may, in defense of said action, show that he is and has been in peaceable possession of such lands, and that he has while in such possession made lasting and valuable improvements thereon, and that he has not enjoyed the possession thereof a sufficient length of time to compensate him for such improvements. Thereupon the court or jury trying said cause shall determine the fair and reasonable value of such improvements and the fair and reasonable rental value of such lands for the time the same shall have been occupied by such person, and if the improvements exceed in value the amount of rents with which such person should be charged the court, in its judgment, shall specify such time as will, in the opinion of the court, compensate such person for the balance due, and award him possession for such time unless the amount be paid by claimant within such reasonable time as the court shall specify. If the finding be that the amount of rents exceed the value of the improvements, judgment shall be rendered against the defendant for such sum, for which execution may issue, and such judgment shall become a lien upon the improvements situated thereon.

SEC. 4. That all persons who have heretofore made improvements on lands belonging to any one of the said tribes of Indians, claiming rights of citizenship, whose claims have been decided adversely under the act of Congress approved June 10, 1893, shall have possession thereof until and including December 31, 1898; and may, prior to that time, sell or dispose of the same to any member of the tribe owning the land who desires to take the same in his allotment: Provided, That this section shall not apply to improvements which have been appraised and paid for, or payment tendered by the Cherokee Nation under the agreement with the United States approved by Congress March 3, 1893.

SEC. 5. That before any action by any tribe or person shall be commenced under section 3 of this act it shall be the duty of the party bringing the same to notify the adverse party to leave the premises for the possession of which the action is about to be brought, which notice shall be served at least thirty days before commencing the action by leaving a written copy with the defendant, or, if he can not be found, by leaving the same at his last known place of residence or business with any person occupying the premises over the age of 12 years, or, if his residence or business address can not be ascertained, by leaving the same with any person over the age of 12 years upon the premises sought to be recovered and described in said notice; and if there be no person with whom said notice can be left, then by posting same on the premises.

SEC. 6. That the summons shall not issue in such action until the chief or governor of the tribe, or person or persons bringing suit in his own behalf, shall have filed a sworn complaint, on behalf of the tribe or himself, with the court, which shall, as near as practicable, describe the premises so entered upon or detained, and shall set forth either an unlawful and forcible entry and detention or an unlawful and forcible detention after a peaceful entry, or a detention without the consent of the person bringing said suit or the tribe, by one whose membership is denied by it: Provided, That if the chief or governor refuse or fail to bring suit in behalf of the tribe then any member of the tribe may make complaint and bring said suit.

SEC. 7. That the court in granting a continuance of any case, particularly under section 3, may, in its discretion, require the party applying therefor to give an undertaking to the adverse party, with good and sufficient securities, to be approved by the judge of the court, conditioned for the payment of all damages and costs and defraying the rent which may accrue if judgment be rendered against him.

SEC. 8. That when a judgment for restitution shall be entered by the court the clerk shall, at the request of the plaintiff or his attorney, issue a writ of execution thereon, which shall command the proper officer of the court to cause the defendant or defendants to be forthwith removed and ejected from the premises and the plaintiff given complete and undisturbed possession of the same. The writ shall also command the said officer to levy upon the property of the defendant or defendants subject to execution, and also collect therefrom the costs of the action and all accruing costs in the service of the writ. Said writ shall be executed within thirty days.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 17, after the word "ordinances," to insert "for the preservation of the peace and health;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That the jurisdiction of the court and municipal authority of the city of Fort Smith for police purposes in the State of Arkansas is hereby extended over all that strip of land in the Indian Territory lying and being situate between the corporate limits of the said city of Fort Smith and the Arkansas and Poteau rivers, and extending up the said Poteau River to the mouth of Mill Creek; and all the laws and ordinances for the preservation of the peace and health of said city, as far as the same are applicable, are hereby put in force therein: Provided, That no charge or tax shall ever be made or levied by said city against said land or the tribe or nation to whom it belongs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 21, to strike out section 10, as follows:

Sec. 10. That all actions for restitution, ejectment, and possession of real property under this act must be commenced by the service of a summons within two years after the passage of this act, where the wrongful entry, detention, and possession began prior to the date of its passage; and all actions which shall be commenced hereafter, based upon wrongful entry, detention, and possession committed since the passage of this act must be commenced within two years after the cause of action accrued. And nothing in this act shall take away the right to maintain an action for unlawful and forcible entry and detainer given by the act of Congress passed May 2, 1890 (26 U. S. Stats., page 85).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, section 11, line 20, before the word "oil," to strike out the word "valuable;" so as to read:

But all oil, coal, asphalt, and mineral deposits in the lands of any tribe are reserved to such tribe, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, section 11, line 10, after the word "approval," to strike out the following:

Provided, That allotments herein provided for shall not impair any vested legal rights heretofore granted by Congress. But parties asserting rights under this proviso may bring their suits in the United States courts in the Indian Territory to hear and determine their legal rights, if any; and parties to said suits shall have the right of appeal as in other cases: Provided further, That said suit shall be instituted within six months after the allotment of any lands affecting alleged grants, and not operate to delay or hinder the execution of this act or the making of allotments herein provided for; nor shall any court have or exercise jurisdiction thereunder, by injunction or otherwise, to so suspend or delay the execution of this act or the making of allotments thereunder; nor shall this act be deemed or construed as a recognition of any claims made or asserted by any railway company to any land grant whatever.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 3, after the word "Provided," to strike out "further;" so as to read:

Provided, That whenever it shall appear that any member of a tribe is in possession of lands, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, section 11, line 1, after the word "cities," to insert "heretofore incorporated or;" so as to read:

Provided further, That all towns and cities heretofore incorporated or incorporated under the provisions of this act are hereby authorized to secure, by condemnation or otherwise, all the lands actually necessary for public improvements, regardless of tribal lines; and when the same can not be secured otherwise than by condemnation, then the same may be acquired as provided in sections 907 and 912, inclusive, of Mansfield's Digest of the Statutes of Arkansas.

Mr. PETTIGREW. On page 9, section 11, line 23, after the word "nontransferable," I move to insert "until after full title is acquired." I wish to say that this amendment and other amendments to be proposed by me are offered on behalf of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN. It occurs to me that that amendment would come in better after the word "nontaxable," in line 24.

Mr. PETTIGREW. There are two other amendments to lines 23 and 24.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. On page 9, section 11, line 24, after the word "contracted," I move to insert "prior thereto."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. On page 9, section 11, after the word "nontaxable," I move to insert "while so held."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the proviso as it has been amended.

The SECRETARY. As amended the proviso reads:

Provided further, That the lands allotted shall be nontransferable until after full title is acquired, and shall be liable for no obligations contracted prior thereto by the allottee, and shall be nontaxable while so held.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee what sort of corporation this language in the amendment refers to—"towns and cities heretofore incorporated." Does that language relate to incorporations granted by the United States Government or by the Indian tribes?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say that there are quite a number of cities in the Indian Territory which have been incorporated under the provisions of the laws of Arkansas, and it is for the purpose of providing for those that the language to which the Senator refers is inserted in the provision.

Mr. MORGAN. They are, therefore, incorporated under the laws of the United States, inasmuch as we have adopted the laws of Arkansas to control those people in that Territory.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 13, on page 11, line 1, before the word "mineral," to insert "other;" so as to read:

Lessees shall pay on each oil, coal, asphalt, or other mineral claim at the rate of $100 per annum, in advance, for the first and second years; $300 per annum, in advance, for the third and fourth years, and $500, in advance, for each succeeding year thereafter, as advanced royalty on the mine or claim on which they are made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next Amendment was, on page 11, line 1, before the word "mineral," to insert the word "other;" so as to read:

Lessees shall pay on each oil, coal, asphalt, or other mineral claim at the rate of $100 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 23, after the word "begin," to strike out the proviso, as follows:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall impair the rights of any holder or owner of a leasehold interest in any oil, coal rights, asphalt, or mineral which have been acquired with the consent or authority of Congress, but all such interest shall continue unimpaired hereby, and shall be assured to such holders or owners by leases from the Secretary of the Interior for the term not exceeding fifteen years, but subject to the rate of royalty and the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and preference shall be given to such parties in renewals of such leases.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 23, after the word "improvements," to insert "and in renewing any lease the rights of lessees who have made subleases shall be protected;" so as to make the proviso read:

And provided further, That when, under the customs and laws heretofore existing and prevailing in the Indian Territory, leases have been made of different groups or parcels of oil, coal, asphalt, or other mineral deposits, and possession has been taken thereunder and improvements made for the development of such oil, coal, asphalt, or other mineral deposits, by lessees or their assigns, which have resulted in the production of oil, coal, asphalt, or other mineral in commercial quantities by such lessees or their assigns, then such parties in possession shall be given preference in the making of new leases, in compliance with the directions of the Secretary of the Interior; and in making new leases due consideration shall be made for the improvement of such leases, and in all cases of the leasing or renewal of leases of oil, coal, asphalt, and other mineral deposits preference shall be given to parties in possession who have made improvements, and in renewing any lease the rights of lessees who have made subleases shall be protected.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the last part of the section which has just been read, including the amendment proposed by the committee, presents for the attention and consideration of the Senate a very serious constitutional question. Persons who have acquired leasehold rights to coal, and I suspect also in regard to oil, in these nations, particularly in the Choctaw Nation, have been operating these mines for a number of years. They have opened up the mines and they have shipped out vast amounts of coal to Texas and other places, very excellent coal, I am informed; in fact, I have seen it. The contracts to which I especially refer were made with the Choctaw Nation. The Choctaw Nation was regarded and has all the time been regarded by the United States as a political entity, not as a State, not as a Territory, but as an Indian tribe with rightful powers of local self-government. Those tribes have gone on and they have made contracts with various persons, very large and important contracts, for the leasing of these coal mines.

As I understand this bill, although it does not expressly so state, the necessary effect of it is to destroy those contracts. No provision is made in the bill for their running until the end of the lease or to protect them in any way at all. That brings up the question whether or not within the United States of America, in any part of it, whether in a Territory organized under the laws and Constitution of the country or a tribal government organized by statute or under permission of statutes and by treaties, the Constitution of the United States does not stand in all such places in its full vigor for the protection of all the rights of every person who is an inhabitant of the United States, or even if he is a foreigner and is denizen here?

I am perfectly prepared to vote for the distribution of the lands amongst the native Indians in these various tribes, but in doing that I am voting to execute a trust which grows out of the patents to lands which have been made to these different tribes, which grows out of the treaties they have made with us upon which the patents were issued, and also out of the statutes under which we have conveyed the right, title, and interest of every kind and character of the United States as a Government in those lands to these Indian tribes. But it follows, as I have heretofore tried to explain to the Senate at a previous session of this body, that the title thus granted to these Indian tribes has been granted to them as tribes and by their name, and granted in fee simple for the benefit of the tribe of Indians. It is not for the benefit of any tribal government that might be organized there, evidently, but for the benefit of the Indians who belong to the tribe, who have the rightful political relation with the tribes which entitles them to participate in the advantages that arise under the laws in their favor.

The title being conveyed to the Indian tribes and those tribes not being recognized by the Government of the United States as being a political sovereignty, such as a State is, for instance, but as being a subordinate political establishment authorized by law, without any sovereign power, the supreme title to this land did not pass by these deeds to that tribe, that government, but they were made trustees by being named in the patent and in the statutes and in the treaties to hold the legal title of these lands subject to such uses and trusts as would grow naturally out of this conveyance in favor of the real beneficiaries thereunder. Now, that I understand to be the real legal situation here.

This being so, it follows that some sovereign power must have the disposal of these uses, trusts, advantages, and benefits in favor of these individual Indians, and it is also true that nothing less than that sort of sovereignty which can hold these lands in absolute right and in every right can have the power to execute this trust; that is to say, the Indian tribes have not the power to execute this trust, because they are in no sense a sovereign power. The Government of the United States, therefore, must have the power to execute this trust, because it is a sovereign, and it is the only sovereign whose laws and Constitution extend over that territory.

I can very well understand that the Congress of the United States has the right to execute that trust, and that that right was necessarily reserved over these lands in the conveyances which were made, although they purport to be conveyances in absolute fee simple. The point is, Mr. President, that the grantee in these conveyances, in order to execute the trust, must be a sovereign (I mean if the grantee can execute the trust according to his own will and pleasure), and the Indian tribes not being sovereign, they can not execute this trust according to their own will and pleasure, but they must execute it in subordination to the supreme sovereign rights of the Government of the United States.

Therefore, the Government of the United States is the proper authority for the disposal of these lands, the rightful owner of the lands in trust for the purpose of distributing them among the cestui que trust; and it makes no difference what disposition may have been made of these lands by any private conveyances among the Indians, or by prescription, or in any other way under any Indian statute or the constitution—for they have constitutions—by either of those tribes, the trust remains still unexecuted and within the grasp of the sovereign power of the United States. That is the situation in regard to the lands, and as far as this bill goes in that direction I approve it. I do not know that I approve all of its provisions, but I approve the power that is being exerted here as being a lawful power in the distribution of these lands among the tribes.

But we see that a question of contract, for instance, between a white man, a citizen of the United States, and one of these Indian tribes which had the right to the temporary occupancy of these lands is quite a different matter. That contract is valid in law. It was never a nullity, and no court would ever hold that it was a nullity. I do not know what decisions have been made about it; I have not looked that up at all; but as to a lease made by the Choctaw tribe of Indians to a railroad company or to certain persons of a coal mine, with the right to work it, under which lease various improvements have been made, which has stood for many years, no court I think has held or would hold that such a lease was void, that it was a nullity, that we can disregard it in our legislation.

It is a valid contract between that Indian tribe and the leasees, whoever they may be. I suppose they are not vendees, for I think no sale has ever been made. The mining of coal, etc., has been carried on, as I understand it, entirely under leases, but those contracts between the white people of this country, citizens of the United States, and these tribes for the occupancy and working of such mines are valid in law. If that is true, the Congress has no right to tear them up, no right to destroy them.

But as I understand the pending bill it does destroy them entirely and in fact proceeds to the extent of attempting to prohibit the courts from giving any recognition to the validity of these contracts. I understand that to be the necessary effect of the legislation which we are now considering, and I should like to hear this subject explained by the chairman of the committee or by any member of the committee who will be able to set me right about it if I am in error.

If the bill does go to that extent, then we are entering upon ground here that looks to me to be very dangerous, and we have probably violated one of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States which above others is said to be sacred, that valid contracts of every kind shall be inviolable by act of Congress or by judicial decision or in any other way.

It seems to me that the committee ought to put in here some provision that all the leases which exist, granted by the Indian tribes, shall continue to exist until they expire according to their terms; or, say, all leases that existed on a certain day, for instance the 1st day of January, 1898, so as to prevent any fraudulent combinations to get leases just now or while the bill is under consideration. Say, "All the leases that existed on the 1st day of January, 1898, shall continue to operate according to their legal effect and terms until they have expired." I make these remarks in order to obtain from the committee a statement of what they intend to do about the matter.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I wish it would be agreeable for Senators who have the bill in charge to postpone its consideration until to-morrow. All last week you know we were engaged day and night. This is a bill of very great importance, especially to the Indian tribes. There are one or two or three delegations here, one or two of whom have had interviews with me and have called my attention to the bill. I asked them not to disturb me about it until after the war revenue bill, with which we got through Saturday night, was disposed of, and here this morning, Monday morning, even probably without a vote, while I was out of the Chamber, this bill was called up.

I have just been notified and came in. There are some amendments which I wish to offer. I wish to examine the bill. I hope I am not asking too much. Let it come up to-morrow or next day or any day we may set, so that I may have time to confer with the delegations of Indians who have been to see me touching this matter. I want to see justice done them. If it is all right, I will have nothing to say, but I have not had an opportunity to examine the bill as I wish to examine it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I could not hear what was said by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BATE. I said I hoped it would be agreeable to the Senator having the bill in charge to allow it to go over until to-morrow, that we may look further into it. There are some delegations of Indians here, and I, in part at least, caused them to take no steps in the matter until after we got through with the bill which was under consideration last week, which occupied the entire time of the Senate during the day and partly at night; and I was surprised this morning myself when I learned that the bill had been taken up. I had no notice of any such movement. I was not entitled to any special notice, and I am not complaining of the Senator in that respect. There are a great many things which I think ought to be corrected. It is a House bill which has been here for some time, it is true, but that is no reason why we should not give it due consideration. We should consider it fairly and justly, in order to see that proper legislation takes place touching these Indians and their tribes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, the Committee on Indian Affairs are unanimous, I think, in regard to this bill as reported; they have considered it for a long time, and I think we had better go along to-day and see how far we may progress with it. I do not think I shall press it to a final vote to-day.

I will say, in regard to the matter mentioned by the Senator from Alabama, that we aimed in the bill to allot the use, not the title of the land belonging to these tribes. I think, under the treaty and all arrangements made with these Indians, we have not only the right, but that it is the duty on the part of the Congress to see that the use of these lands is enjoyed by the members of the tribes.

We do not undertake to give title. There are some agreements which have been made by three of the tribes which we submit for ratification. If they accept those agreements, then the title is allotted under the agreements made by our commissioners and the tribes. But the bill itself as it came from the House, as we report it, only undertakes to allot the use to the tribes.

As to leases, I have this to say: We have aimed to make void these leases, for the reason that vast areas, in some instances a hundred thousand acres—a hundred and fifty thousand acres—have been fenced in and occupied and sublet by members of the tribes to individuals, and the real Indian whom we undertake to protect by this legislation is deprived of the enjoyment of his property, and the lease money goes to enriching men who are really white men and not Indians.

Further than that, we understand that since January great numbers of leases have been made, and during the last year after these agreements were made great numbers of leases embracing vast areas of lands were made to individuals and for unlimited lengths of time for the very purpose of defeating the object of this legislation and depriving the Indians of all benefits and all use of their property. What we undertake to accomplish is to divide the land among the individual Indians per capita, to divide the use of it among the people who are entitled to it. We aim to disturb no vested right that the Indian may have, but we are trying to oust the people who have gained possession of those lands and are depriving the Indians of their property. It is well known that those tribal governments are corrupt; it is well known that nearly all the property of the tribes heretofore has been absorbed by a few, and it is for the purpose of remedying those evils that we have undertaken this legislation.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the Senate will consider the pending bill at this time. In December last the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Indian Affairs on the part of the House appointed a subcommittee to take up the question of undertaking to put the so-called Curtis bill in a shape satisfactory to both bodies. We have absolutely devoted weeks to the discussion of the different sections of the bill, to consultations with representatives of all the tribes and of representatives of the white people who are settled in that country. We have heard every argument that could be made on the part of any interest and on every side. We have given days and nights to the consideration of the bill. We have gone carefully through it. We have weighed everything as carefully as we could.

The Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate have been constantly looking into every detail of this business, and if the Committee on Indian Affairs are capable of doing anything in connection with the bill at all; if they are capable of understanding what ought to be done, they understood when they made this report what should be done. This bill has been here for some time; it has been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I believe that, as reported by the committee, it is as near just what it ought to be as it is possible to make it.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, all that may be true, but I think those who desire it ought to have an opportunity to look into the bill more carefully and agree with the committee, if it is proper that we should. We already hear objection made to it by the Senator from Alabama, even involving a constitutional question, if I understand him. Notwithstanding the great labor which has been given to it by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and notwithstanding the report they have made here, it seems to me the measure involves so much and has come up so suddenly, without premonition, so far as I heard, that it should go over for a day or so. It was not set for to-day; it was not called regularly on the Calendar to-day; it was not reached, but was just taken up by application upon the part, I suppose, of one of the Senators who wish to see it brought up and action taken upon it. So it has been brought up without any objection. Had I been in the Chamber at the time I should have objected for the present at least. That is all I have to say. I can not help myself.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the remarks which I submitted to the Senate a moment ago relate not to the lease of lands amongst the Indians between themselves, but to leases of coal mines to railroad companies and to other persons who are not members or citizens of the Indian tribe, but are citizens of the United States. What I suggested was that we should inquire whether or not in our legislation we are violating a contract which a citizen of the United States has a right to insist upon. There must be a difference between the rights of citizens of the United States and the rights of the citizens of the respective nations in respect to these lands, because the United States, which, as I have insisted, and I believe nobody is going to dispute it, has the sovereignty to execute this trust, has the right at any time at all, of course, to cut off any arrangement which is at all embarrassing in the way of the execution of the trust, unless we are confronted by the protection that is given in the Constitution to contracts between these Indian tribes and persons who are not members of the Indian tribes.

I wish also to suggest the question, and it is a very important one, whether or not the making of leases of coal mines and leases of lands has not been against the public policy of the United States, or perhaps even against the prohibition of statutes of the United States, in dealing with these tribal reservations? It seems to me that any arrangement by the tribe with its own citizens or with persons residing within the territory which would embarrass at all the execution of the powers of the Government in executing the trust must necessarily fall under the ban of disapproval, because it violates the public policy of the United States. We have not heretofore taken hold of this subject in virtue of the powers we now claim to exercise. We have permitted the Indian tribes to go on and exercise a jurisdiction over these lands, both by legislation and in every way, just as if they were the full, absolute owners, and as if the titles or rights they might confer by lease or otherwise would be entitled to full respect under the Constitution of the United States. That is what we have done.

For the first time we are taking hold of this question now in virtue of the sovereign and supreme right of the United States to control it, and I grant that whatever we find in the way of that full and complete control in the execution of this trust we have a right to cut off, we have a right to disregard. But I am not satisfied that when an American citizen—a railroad company, for instance—has made a contract with one of these tribes for the lease of a coal mine the contract is not protected by the Constitution of the United States; I am not satisfied that that contract falls within the category of the arrangements which I say we have tolerated heretofore, and which we have a right to cut off in the exercise of our sovereign power of disposing of these lands and making allotments and other dispositions of the lands.

It was my apprehension upon that question which caused me to take the floor on this subject, because I do not want to put in this act a provision which will draw in question its constitutionality.

I suggested to the committee that some language might be used in this statute which would prevent any such result, such as I have indicated; that in the leases which may be existing in regard to coal mines and asphalt mines and oil wells and the like of that, contracts of leases should be permitted to continue in operation until they had expired. It is very plain that by doing this you get rid of a series of very important and embarrassing, if not dangerous, questions to the bill itself.

Now, as for lands that have been leased there, I know from the history which has been brought to my attention as a member of the committee, and also from personal observation, that there have been very great outrages committed by the tribal governments in suffering the extension of leases of pasturage lands and other lands in the hands of private individuals to cover an enormous area, and thereby destroying the value of the whole inheritance, if I may call it such, that comes to the Indians through the title the Government of the United States has granted to the tribes. As between the Indians and their government and as between the persons claiming under that government the agricultural lands of these tribes, I am satisfied we have the right and that it is our duty to interfere now and to execute this trust without reference to the large holdings people have upon those lands.

We are compelled, Mr. President, to take hold of this matter in apparently a very severe way in order to execute justice in behalf of the different individuals of the Indian tribes and to do for every man, as far as may be, justly and equitably what a guardian with the discretionary power for the administration of an estate in the hands of several minor children would do, in the spirit of justice and equity to all concerned. It is a very troublesome task. I know the Dawes Commission and a great number of persons, including the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives, have had this broad, difficult question to consider, and I am in favor of any fair adjustment of it that can be devised; but in making the adjustment of it I think we ought to be very cautious not to violate the Constitution of our country by condemning by an act of legislation contracts that are really valid under the law.

I will take occasion to say about this matter now while I am upon the floor that I think it is a very high duty incumbent upon the Congress of the United States that any question we may decide by this vigorous legislation, if I may not call it harsh legislation, ought to be open to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. I want these Indian tribes satisfied when we get through with this matter that they have had the benefit of the judicial power of the United States, exercised in its highest function, in the disposal of these lands and all of the matters that are couched in this lengthy and very important bill.

I would not turn an Indian, or, in fact, any person who was interested in those lands, away from his resort to the Supreme Court of the United States to settle any question that arises under this act and under our laws and our treaties heretofore made with the Indians. The necessary predicate of all this distribution of lands, for instance, includes the question of tribal citizenship. Tribal citizenship has been regulated, necessarily and properly, by the laws of the tribes themselves, rather than by the laws of the United States. When we ascertain the persons who are to be entitled, for instance, under the distribution of these lands, we must resort to the laws of the Five Civilized Tribes and to their treaties to ascertain who are the persons who are entitled to participate in the distribution of this great area of land, a very important and a very valuable body of land.

Now, upon questions of citizenship, which include the right to these lands, there ought to be an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. I doubt very much the constitutionality of any law that cuts off a man from the right of appeal to the Constitution of the United States when that right of appeal includes the proper construction of the Constitution and laws of the United States and the treaties, as we call them, with these civilized tribes.

Upon the subject of the treaties and the effect they might have in deciding the question of the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States there arises another embarrassing difficulty. Until 1871 from the foundation of the Government, although the different Indian tribes were included within our borders and were subject to the supreme jurisdiction of the Government of the United States, we made treaties with them pro forma, and those treaties were made by their selected negotiators with our men who were appointed for that purpose, and they were brought under the treaty-making power before the Senate of the United States and were here confirmed. A great number of them were confirmed without reference to any statute of the United States at all.

Now, all of those treaties are treaties with the United States, and were so regarded by the Government of the United States, because they were in the form of treaties; and they were matured and ratified, and ratifications were exchanged under the treaty powers conferred upon the President and the Senate under the Constitution of the United States. But in 1871 we changed that.

We then declared by statute that thereafter no treaty with an Indian tribe should be referred to the Senate of the United States, as it would be in the case of a treaty with a foreign power.

In the passage of that act we disestablished every Indian tribal government in the United States in respect of its having the slightest power to enter into a negotiation with the United States, and we treated them as subject powers, tenants at will really, of the country that they might occupy at the time. We have traveled them about over the country under different contract arrangements, having adopted, as we did after we had destroyed the right of making treaties, the policy of making contracts to which the majority of the male members of any tribe should give their assent; and if they did not give their assent, the contract was not considered as being subject to the ratification of the United States. But where they did give their consent, then we stand in the attitude, since 1871, of dealing with these people upon the basis of a simple contract, not upon the treaty basis.

So far as the Cherokees and all of the other Five Civilized Tribes are concerned, the treaties under which they acquired title to the land were treaties that were ratified by the Senate of the United States in due form prior to 1871, and they are just as obligatory upon the Government of the United States as if they were treaties with foreign powers, for we accepted those powers of the Constitution as being the criterion and the foundation of the right of those Indians to make the treaties.

Now, that being so, and all of the rights they held under these treaties or in respect of them being treaty rights, it occurs to me that we have here no power or authority to deprive those people of taking up to the Supreme Court of the United States any question for its final adjudication, any more than we have the right to cut off a citizen of the United States or any other person from taking such an appeal under a treaty made with a foreign power.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not wish to do anything discourteous, but I feel that the remarks of the Senator ought to be listened to by a quorum of the Senate, in order that they may be intelligently comprehended.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the Senator will forbear. My discussion of this matter to-day is intended to be with the committee really.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator knows a speech does not make so great an impression when there are a few Senators here as when the seats of Senators are full.

Mr. MORGAN. I am very much obliged to the Senator for his desire to have my remarks heard by more Senators than are present at this moment, but the questions I am discussing are intended really for the consideration of the committee more than the Senate at large, thinking, of course, naturally and properly, that the Senate will be very much inclined to follow the recommendations of the committee, for it is an able committee and they have given a great deal of attention to the subject. What I am trying to do is only to ascertain whether we are not in this bill doing some things that perhaps we have no right to do, and as a member of the committee I feel great interest and concern about it.

I was arguing the question whether a right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States ought to be given in this bill upon every question; for instance, I will say, a question of the citizenship of the person who is entitled to distribution of these lands under our law as we are about to enact it, and then the question of the nature of the title that the Indians hold in this property, whether it is, as I suppose, a title held by the tribe but in the name of the tribe in trust for the benefit of the membership of the tribe, and the question how far by the action of the tribe through its constitution, for they have constitutions, and legislation, for they have printed laws, these rights have been affected by their constitution and their legislation.

That is an important question, which ought to come to the Supreme Court of the United States; but the fundamental question concerned in the distribution of the property is, of course, the question of citizenship in the tribe, and upon all questions relating to the citizenship of a person in the tribe, where the decision is adverse to his citizenship, or even, perhaps, in some cases where it affirms his right, an appeal ought to be allowed to the Supreme Court of the United States.

This subject is not new with me, Mr. President. On various occasions in the last seven or eight years, whenever this matter came up, I have always advocated that our legislation should include the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. I am satisfied now that unless we do include it we shall give great dissatisfaction, and perhaps we shall have our laws broken up by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States made in some collateral case that will go up there.

The point upon which I am trying to fasten the attention of the committee at this moment of time is this: The Supreme Court of the United States have the constitutional power and jurisdiction to hear appeals on all matters that concern the construction of the Constitution and laws of the United States and treaties made in pursuance thereof.

Then, of course, we know that, historically speaking, if not legally also, these five tribes hold their land under treaties which expressly convey to them the title, and they were so careful about having the title perfect in their own way of understanding what a perfect title was that they put in some of the early treaties the provision that the title should stand while grass grew and water ran, so that it should be permanent. At the same time they coupled with that title a condition that if the Indian tribes should ever abandon the country, then the title should revert to the United States, and there is an ultimate reversion in fee to the United States upon that condition subsequent.

But the point I am discussing and trying to impress upon the minds of such Senators as are present is that, having treated with these Indians in the exercise of the treaty power and in the form prescribed by the Constitution, laws, and rules governing the making and ratification of treaties and the exchange of ratification, these Indians hold their title under those treaties. They also hold them under express statutes of the United States. They also hold them under letters patent which have been issued to the tribes and delivered into their hands.

Now, here we find that the laws of the United States and the treaties of the United States are concerned in these questions, and that we can not possibly avoid these questions being raised in some collateral way in cases that will go the Supreme Court of the United States. Inasmuch as we can not avoid having those questions decided, inasmuch as any man having a cause of action that he is concerned in which relates to any of those lands or rights or privileges can have it decided, we ought to provide in the bill, in some systematic, general way, for the hearing of appeals, defining as far as we can the subject-matter upon which the appeal shall operate. In that way we shall give satisfaction to the Indians, and certainly greater satisfaction to ourselves, for I for one feel that in dealing with a subject of such delicacy it is necessary to my own personal satisfaction in legislating upon these questions that I should know the Supreme Court of the United States can come along and rectify any errors we may make in a judicial determination of the rights of these people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair.) The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4545) to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

Mr. CARTER and Mr. PETTIGREW addressed the Chair.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Frye,	McMillan,	Platt, Conn.
Bacon,	Gallinger,	Mallory,	Rawlins,
Bate,	Gorman,	Mantle,	Roch,
Berry,	Hanna,	Mills,	Shoup,
Burrows,	Hansbrough,	Money,	Stewart,
Caflery,	Harris,	Morgan,	Sullivan,
Cannon,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Thurston,
Carter,	Heitfeld,	Murphy,	Tillman,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Nelson,	Turpie,
Clay,	Jones, Ark.	Pasco,	Wetmore,
Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Perkins,	Wilson,
Deboe,	McEnery,	Pettigrew,
Fairbanks,	McLaurin,	Pettus,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It appears from the roll call that there are fifty Senators present. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4168) for revising and perfecting the classification of letters patent and printed publications in the Patent Office.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 4699) to provide an American register for the steamship China; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4676) for the protection of homestead settlers to enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war.

The amendment of the House was, on page 2, line 4, after the word "service," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That if such settler shall be discharged on account of wounds received or disability incurred in the line of duty, then the term of his enlistment shall be deducted from the required length of residence without reference to the time of actual service: Provided further, That no patent shall issue to any homestead settler who has not resided upon, improved, and cultivated his homestead for a period of at least one year after he shall have commenced his improvements.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.
The motion was agreed to.

THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed with House bill 8581, which has been under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, it will be borne in mind that the census bill has been deferred from time to time on account of pressing legislation of general public importance. The session of Congress is now drawing to a close, and the Committee on Census, together with all persons taking a direct interest in the proposed census legislation, feel constrained, through a sense of duty, to procure consideration for the bill without further delay.

I think it would be as well to proceed with the consideration of the unfinished business to-day and allow the bill which has been considered during the morning hour to be taken up immediately after the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow. If the consideration given to that bill at that time is such as to indicate that it can be concluded within a reasonable time after the close of the morning hour to-morrow, I shall feel inclined to yield for that purpose. But to have the census bill, which is of general and pressing importance, set aside now for the consideration of any bill of which I have any knowledge that is of a local character, is something to which I can not consent.

Mr. CHANDLER. Has the census bill, the pending bill, been read through?

Mr. CARTER. It has not yet been read. The pending bill was reported from the committee on the 9th of May, and takes the place of the bill formerly considered.

Mr. PETTIGREW. With the understanding, then, that House bill 8581 shall be taken up immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow and that we shall proceed with it to its conclusion, I will not press the request for to-day.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to the bill being taken up and proceeded with until 2 o'clock, but that an agreement shall now be made to consider the Senator's bill until it is finished I should not be willing to consent to. I have had occasion almost to criticize the Senator from Montana, the chairman of the Census Committee, for the indulgence which he has extended to Senators in connection with other bills, allowing the census bill to be crowded off from day to day and from week to week, until now, at last, it has its day in court again. I feel constrained to object to any arrangement which will supersede the census bill by any other bill. I have no objection, if the Senator from South Dakota can get his bill through before 2 o'clock to-morrow, but I do not consent to the request as he made it.

Mr. CARTER. I think the Senator from South Dakota understands the arrangement suggested, that if it shall be quite apparent that a short extension of time after 2 o'clock will result in the conclusion of the consideration of the bill he has in charge, the committee will yield for that purpose.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then I ask unanimous consent that House bill 8581 be taken up immediately after the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that House bill 8581, which the Senate has been considering this morning, may be taken up to-morrow morning immediately after the conclusion of the morning business. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TWELFTH AND SUBSEQUENT CENSUSES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4545) to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses; which was read.

Mr. CHILTON. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of section 2 of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that the committee have a few amendments to offer.

Mr. CHILTON. Then I withhold my amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some explanation of the bill before it is passed upon.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Can not we have the amendment read which has been submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON], so that we may know what is coming?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 2, it is proposed to insert:

That nothing herein contained shall be construed to establish a Census Bureau permanent beyond the Twelfth Census.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in March, 1897, Senate bill No. 94, entitled "A bill to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses," was introduced. That bill contemplated the organization of a census bureau, to be charged, as a first duty, with the preparation of a general plan for the enlightenment, if not the guidance, of Congress in the enactment of necessary laws for future census work.

Through the means provided by that bill it was confidently believed by many that the thoughtful consideration by experienced statisticians and students of census history of all the questions involved would prove of great practical value to Congress in illuminating with the light of experience and aiding with technical skill the legislative mind in the discharge of an important constitutional obligation. In due season the bill was reported and taken up for consideration, but all efforts to confine debate to the legitimate scope of the bill proved futile. The Senate was obviously determined to proceed directly to the consideration of the provisions requisite for the perfection of a complete census law, without employing any such preliminary or tentative measure as that proposed.

Admonished by the temper of the Senate and the expressed views of Senators, the committee addressed itself to the task of preparing a general bill, and the result of the effort is embodied in Senate bill No. 4545, to which I now invite the attention of the Senate. Before referring to the details of the bill I feel it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to the supreme importance of enacting the law for taking the Twelfth Census at this session of Congress. I the more gravely fear delay and dread its consequences because in the past one hundred and ten years Congress has invariably put off needful census legislation until the eleventh hour, thereby admitting only of meager, but always costly, preparation for an exacting task, in the prompt and accurate performance whereof the present and all future generations must be deeply concerned.

I am at a loss to account for the procrastinating disposition shown by Congress at all times in the past in dealing with this important matter. Tardy legislation can not but result in hasty and imperfect preparation by the director and the supervisors prior to the commencement of the actual work of enumeration. Imperfect organization not only hinders and delays the work, but it increases the cost, and at the same time diminishes the value of the reports.

I would rather harbor the belief that the reluctance Congress has always shown to passing timely laws for census taking has arisen from some other cause than indifference to the subject. Slight reflection will suffice to arouse us to a realization of the overwhelming importance of this question.

A census is as old as our civilization. The collation of data and the weighing of ascertained facts must always constitute an essential prerequisite to legislative enactments designed to justly influence or properly control the destinies of a free people. When by divine right the king was the state, and the state existed for the king, details relating to the humble life of the individual subject were of trifling moment beyond the requirements of military service and taxpaying power. From the dawn of history to the middle of the last century each succeeding dynasty sought an understanding of the condition of the people as a basis of war levies and tax collections, with the distribution of political favors as an incident.

From a religious custom the census developed into a military factor, and finally, as the individual man emerged from the mass of mankind to assert his inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, the demand for specific information concerning the subjects or citizens and their affairs became indispensable to the intelligent conduct of government. From the mere inspection of fighting forces attention was directed to the sources from whence they sprung—the body of the people.

Our Government was the first of all the nations to provide in its fundamental law for an enumeration of the people as the basis of representation and consequently as an elementary principle of the Government itself. Knowledge which a census alone can reveal is indispensable to intelligent legislation for a free people. Where the people are the source of power, ignorance of their numbers and condition is equivalent to ignorance of the very foundation of the Government.

The census gives to the legislator the facts and figures which enable him to pass over the domain of speculation and to base laws upon ascertained data with approximate scientific precision. Our territory is so extensive, our population so mixed, and our interests so diversified that the decennial census assumes greater importance with each succeeding decade, not only as disclosing the proper basis of representation, but as a guide for legislation and a safeguard against the injustice and favoritism which invariably spring from ignorance and provincialism. The scope of the census has been increased in response to a just demand.

In the beginning enumeration of the population seemed sufficient, but as the country expanded and our social, industrial, and commercial life became more complex, additional statistical data became more and more necessary to a correct understanding of the forces and conditions to be controlled and dealt with by the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the Government organized under the Constitution.

In conformity with sound logic and clearly disclosed necessity a liberal and scientific construction was in due time given to the decennial-enumeration clause of the Constitution, so that as early as 1810 results other than a mere enumeration of the population were sought.

However, the law of 1790 continued substantially in force until 1850. By the law enacted that year a census board was established, consisting of the Secretary of State, the Attorney-General, and the Postmaster-General, but the original, crude, and unsatisfactory system of making the inquiries through the United States marshals and their deputies was continued. The machinery provided by that and all laws preceding it was so ill-suited to the purpose that efforts to secure even an accurate enumeration of the population were not fruitful of felicitous results.

Statistical matter relating to other topics only reached the dignity of fair approximations, and of course deductions drawn from such data could but be regarded as generalities. Gradually the temper of the country and the spirit of the age demanded not only wider scope but more accurate figures. In obedience to that demand the law of March 3, 1870, was passed to provide for taking the Tenth and subsequent censuses. That law established a Census Office in the Department of the Interior, under the direction of the head of the Department, and provided for the appointment of a Superintendent of Census. The act to provide for taking the Eleventh and subsequent censuses, approved March 1, 1880, did not differ materially from the act of 1870.

Under the last two acts the census was extended far beyond the limits prescribed or contemplated by any previous law of Congress. The measure of the extension can be most readily discerned by reference to the fact that in 1870 there were only four volumes of census reports, whereas in 1880 twenty-two volumes were published, and the reports of the census of 1890 will be found in twenty-five bound volumes. All reports of the nine censuses up to and including 1870 had been issued in twenty-three volumes. Zeal for elaboration pressed beyond the bounds of wisdom. The circumscribed limits from which escape was sought yielded to a scheme theoretically commendable, but so extensive in scope as to deprive it of much practical value because of the long and apparently unavoidable delay in the publication of the complete reports.

The last of the reports of the census of 1880 was published in 1888, and the present year has brought forth the last volume of the census of 1890.

That the laws of 1870 and of 1880 marked a most pronounced advance in census legislation is conceded by everyone.

The census of 1880, indeed, may be said to have been the beginning of census statistics, designed to meet the growing demand for statistics affording information relative to economic and sociological questions, as distinguished from the purely political purposes of the population enumeration. This census devoted a large proportion of space to historical and descriptive records of the growth and development of national industries, as a starting point and basis for future statistics and, in this direction, has not been excelled by any similar work of any government.

The Eleventh Census covered much the same lines of investigation and required about the same number of volumes for the presentation of the results, but was far more statistical in character, with greater wealth of detail in the matter presented and more comprehensive analysis of the results.

The reputation of the administrative officers of these two censuses, at home and abroad, well illustrates the assertion of the evangelist that "A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country," for foreign governments and statisticians have expressed nothing but commendation for the scope and statistical treatment of the subjects of investigation in both.

While the value of the census results in a statistical sense is undoubted, the rapid increase in population, expansion of industrial development, and changing conditions in this country are so great and diverse that the delay in presentation of the final results of previous censuses has been such as to deprive them of much of their usefulness. This delay can not be charged to the administration of the Census Office so much as to defects in or lack of legislation under which the census has been taken.

Experience has, however, cast just criticism upon both laws. The main objection in each case was to the intolerable and apparently unavoidable delay in publishing the reports. Then again it has been said the reports were too voluminous; that the words and figures were so expanded that simple facts were measurably concealed from ordinary view, but while many criticisms have been offered to the Tenth and Eleventh censuses, I think it may be fairly assumed that both would have given satisfaction to the country had the reports been more promptly issued.

One of the chief causes of the deplorable delay of which complaint has been made must be ascribed to the uniform tardiness of Congress in making proper legislative provision for each census in due season to allow reasonable time for necessary preparatory work. By reference to the legislation for the Eleventh Census, we become informed of the trend of our legislative history on this subject from the beginning. The act providing for that herculean undertaking was not approved until March 1, 1880. This allowed but fifteen months for the appointment of a Superintendent and the organization of the Bureau, together with the appointment of an army of supervisors, special agents, and enumerators, fully equipped and prepared to execute the purpose of the law with accuracy and dispatch.

It is conceded by all persons who had any experience with the Eleventh Census that the time allowed for this preparatory work was insufficient. To make the matter worse, on the 23d of February, 1890, that is, about one hundred days before the work of enumeration commenced, an act of Congress was approved making it the duty of the Superintendent of the Census, in addition to duties assigned to him by law, to ascertain the number of persons cultivating their own farms, the number living in their own homes, the number hiring farms and hiring homes, the number of farms and homes that were mortgaged, the amount of the mortgage debt, the value of the property mortgaged, whether the mortgage was in whole or in part for purchase money or for other purpose, and the rates of interest paid upon mortgage loans.

This act involved a change in schedules that had been prepared and printed ready for distribution to the enumerators. The cost of paper and the printing thus became a total loss and the Superintendent found himself, within about one hundred days of the time for the enumeration, confronted with the task of preparing 25,000,000 new schedules and having them printed and properly distributed.

On the 19th of March, 1890, an act was passed authorizing the Superintendent of the Census to pay special agents in Alaska a necessary per diem allowance for expenses, subsistence, and transportation.

On the 23d of the same month an act was passed finally settling the amount to be paid the supervisors. Another act was passed relative to compensation on the 3d of April. On the 21st of May an act was passed extending mail facilities to the Census Bureau. On August 14, two and a half months after the time fixed for the enumeration, an act was approved amending section 17 of the census law so as to require the Superintendent to obtain from the owners, proprietors, or managers of every unincorporated express company the same class of facts which by said section he was obligated to require and obtain from the owners, proprietors, or managers of every incorporated express company.

Again, as late as July 6, 1892, Congress amended sections 15 and 17 of the census law, so that the Superintendent was thereby required to obtain from every incorporated and unincorporated company, firm, association, or person engaged in any productive industry the information called for and specified in the general and special schedules approved by the Secretary of the Interior, thus contemplating the acquisition of information from certain corporations, firms, and persons as late as July, 1892.

It is therefore obvious that the work of tabulating certain schedules could not have been commenced until more than two years after the day fixed for the enumeration, by which time the tabulations should have been entirely finished. It rests with Congress to avoid the expensive and in every way unfortunate consequences experienced with the census of 1890 through the insufficient time allowed for the organization of the Bureau, with its army of clerks, supervisors, and enumerators.

This much-desired end can only be facilitated by the passage of the census bill at the present session of Congress.

The improvement sought can, however, be only partially effected by legislation affording greater time for the work preceding the enumeration. If the general line of statistics collected at the Tenth and Eleventh Censuses is to be preserved—and it is not thought probable that Congress will be willing to abandon the valuable statistics in which the basis for comparisons and measures of progress has already been laid, except in certain minor details—some essentially different plan or system of dealing with the matter must be adopted which will avoid the difficulties attending their preparation in the past. These difficulties arose largely from the fact that the whole of the investigations related to the same period, were prosecuted simultaneously, and the amount of material collected was too vast to be expeditiously disposed of by any organization possible under the laws as then existing.

When it is considered that the time required for the preparation of the reports of the Tenth Census from the date of organization of the office to the transmittal of the final proof of the last volume to the Public Printer was nine years and two months, and the corresponding time for the work of the Eleventh Census was eight years and three months, it will be seen that the work was practically continuous, although nominally temporary and with all the disadvantages of a temporary organization. It therefore seemed advisable to adopt the alternative feature of continuous work and to separate the statistics into two classes, one to contain the inquiries inseparable from the census enumeration and to classify and define these as constituting the "census," concentrating the work of the office and the most capable of the force upon these subjects, which are those specified in section 24 of the bill.

In their simplified form and with no other work on hand to complicate or retard their prosecution, these subjects may be concluded in a space of time impossible under previous conditions.

Under the plan of operation contemplated by the bill the miscellaneous statistics provided for in section 25 will be taken up after the disposition of the census proper, or at such a time as will in no wise delay the publication of the same, which will again permit the employment of the most efficient force in their preparation, with the additional advantage of allowing such statistics to be brought up to a later date, thereby giving them a greatly increased value.

This separation of the statistics provided for into the two classes described is absolutely essential to any plan which has the necessary improvement in statistical work in view, and the benefits arising therefrom will be even much greater in the future.

The pending bill seeks to reduce the number of census reports and to secure their prompt publication, without eliminating from the inquiries any subject of general interest on which necessary information can only be gained by a house to house canvass of the whole country.

The committee hopes to expedite the publication of the reports, first, by the passage of the bill at the present session of Congress, so as to allow much-needed time for the proper organization of the Bureau and due preparation for the work; second, by limiting the scope of the census proper to four topics, namely, population, mortality and vital statistics, agriculture, and manufacturing; third, by providing for the payment of enumerators' accounts on certificates signed by the supervisors, instead of holding up the schedules in the Census Office from two to six months while computing amounts due the enumerators; fourth, by increasing the force of supervisors; fifth, by omitting certain branches of investigation upon which statistics are published in other departments.

The general subjects reported upon at the Eleventh Census which are not contemplated by this bill, together with their estimated cost (exclusive of printing and binding), are the following:

Real estate and farm and home mortgages	$1,500,000
Indians	125,000
Transportation	175,000
Surviving soldiers, sailors, and widows	100,000
Insurance	60,000
Mineral industries	210,000
Fish and fisheries	150,000
Education	25,000
Irrigation	20,000
Total	2,985,000

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I inquire whether that is merely the cost for printing, or does it include the gathering of statistics and printing both?

Mr. CARTER. This estimate is exclusive of the cost of printing and binding and relates wholly to the cost of collating the statistics.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And there is another large cost for the printing?

Mr. CARTER. The printing and binding and distribution will probably add at least 25 per cent, making the total amount three and a half million to four million dollars.

The elimination of these inquiries disposes largely of the possible duplication of work by the Census and other offices or departments by relegating to them the whole field of investigation in such cases.

It has been argued that all statistical matter relating to the various Departments of the Government and those subjects coming within the special jurisdiction of each could be most advantageously acquired through the agency of a separate bureau. Slight investigation, however, will disclose the fact that the statistics published by the various Departments are in most cases merely incidental, the work of collating and tabulating the statistics being necessary to the determination of questions growing out of or constantly arising from the conduct of the business of such Departments. This work would continue in the Departments irrespective of any independent statistical bureau, the only expense attending the conveyance of the information contained in the tabulated statements to the public being the cost of printing and publication.

For instance, the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department publishes monthly and annual reports of a statistical nature and of great value, relative to exports and imports, immigration, coinage, currency, national banks, clearing-house transactions, etc., but the data are obtained wholly from the reports of officials of the Treasury Department. The Bureau of Statistics may be said to be the "bookkeeping" branch of the Treasury Department, and essentially necessary thereto, but there is no collection of original data as in the census work, and not a point of similarity in their methods.

Other bureaus and Departments publish reports containing statistics secured in prosecuting the work for which they are maintained, some of which have been partly included in the census investigations, and in order to avoid the possible charge of duplicating work, and thereby duplicating expenditures, the subjects mentioned above have been omitted from the inquiries imposed on the Census Office by this bill. For this reason the subject of transportation may well be left to the Commissioner of Railroads and the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The Geological Survey collects statistics and facts concerning our mineral resources as a part of its general work, and the results of the investigations and computations made are published annually by that Bureau. The Fish Commissioner is constantly engaged in collecting facts and figures relating to fish and fisheries. The Bureau of Education is the efficient agency for the collection of all needful information on the subject of general education, information concerning school attendance and illiteracy only being dependent upon the house-to-house canvass conducted by the census, and these are retained in the population schedule.

All facts and figures relating to irrigation should be collected jointly perhaps by the Department of Agriculture and the Geological Survey.

The decennial census should not be burdened with the acquisition of information concerning insurance, as all facts relating to that subject may be obtained from State reports and private publications, which are published from year to year. The Bureau of Indian Affairs publishes annual bulletins, without any particular expense to the Government, showing the number and condition of the Indians. The population schedule will furnish all necessary information as to the number and distribution of the Indians, with the sociological data required for the population in general.

If the Census Office is established as contemplated by this bill, and its operations meet with the success anticipated, it is possible that in the future some consolidation of the statistical work now done by other Departments may prove practicable and wise; but the working of the office under the system proposed should have a practical test, without any complications that can be avoided.

This bill retains the basic inquiry concerning ownership of farms and homes, but eliminates certain details relating to indebtedness and the motives of men in creating incumbrance upon their property. This last-named feature, with the amounts and rates of interest, is said to have cost over $500,000 in 1890, besides retarding the publication of the census reports. The real-estate mortgage investigation and report of 1890 cost about $1,000,000.

Before passing from that subject, I wish to illustrate the practical difficulties encountered under the law of 1890, covering so vast a field and calling for information on so many details. In the case, for instance, of the subdivision of manufactures, take the electrical industry. I have made and have here a partial showing of the schedules directed to that one particular subject. The first schedule relating to electricity which the enumerator was expected to carry about with him, or the special agent, as the case might be, was entitled "preliminary schedule," and comprised five pages, with questions appearing in the text on each page.

Mr. CHANDLER. Are we to understand the Senator from Montana as saying that all the schedules which he now has in his hand contain only inquiries which the enumerators who took the population of the census were bound to make?

Mr. CARTER. In a general way the manufacturing statistics were gathered by special agents. However, in rural districts, where persons were found conducting operations with electrical power, as electric lighting, street railways, the moving of mill machinery by electricity, the enumerator was the person who would have to carry this bundle of special schedules and seek to find the information.

Mr. CHANDLER. The point I want to get at is whether an enumerator at his first visit to a village house or a farmhouse was expected to go through all those inquiries at one time, on his first and only visit, or could he make inquiries at other times and on other visits? How many inquiries under the last census did the enumerators make when they first appeared at the homes of the people and how many will they make under the bill as it is proposed by the committee?

Mr. CARTER. Under the law of 1890 the enumerator carried, when traveling through the rural districts where every form of industrial life was in some measure represented and where no record was kept of mortality or vital statistics, the thirteen schedules here presented. Under the pending bill the enumerator will carry in such a section of country but four schedules, the first relating to population and social statistics, the second relating to mortality and vital statistics, the third relating to agriculture, and the fourth statistics of manufactures.

In 1890 the enumerator had, in addition to the schedules which will be required to be carried and filled out under the pending bill, a special schedule relating to surviving soldiers, sailors, marines, and widows, etc.; a supplemental schedule, statistics of insanity; supplemental schedule No. 2, statistics of feeble-mindedness and idiocy; supplemental schedule No. 3, statistics of the deaf; supplemental schedule No. 4, statistics of the blind; supplemental schedule No. 5, statistics of persons diseased or physically defective. In passing, it may be said of all the schedules relating to defects and delinquencies in the individuals or the misfortunes of the families the enumerators were not, as a rule, successful in securing any reliable information. Supplemental schedule No. 6 related to statistics of benevolence; supplemental schedule No. 7, to statistics of crime; supplemental schedule No. 8, to statistics of pauperism.

Now the enumerator in the rural district was required to carry these thirteen schedules. In addition, where there was any electrical work to be inquired into, he would carry this bunch of schedules I have in my hand and which I was proceeding to recapitulate when the Senator from New Hampshire propounded his inquiry. This is not a complete exhibition of the schedules relating to electricity. Let me say here that of the hundreds of special schedules that were issued no one has been able to get a complete collection. None seems now available.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me ask the Senator what has become of them.

Mr. CARTER. That is one of the misfortunes connected with the temporary census office. The force was largely discharged; these blanks were filed away, boxed up, scattered from one place to another throughout the city where Congress provides storage for all papers and documents, and I am informed by the clerk in charge of what is left of that census that he has been industriously working for some time to get a complete set of the general and special schedules of the Eleventh Census, and hopes to succeed ultimately, but that he has been unsuccessful thus far.

Now, the second schedule relating to electricity was known as Special Schedule No. 15. The enumerator carried in that special schedule a pamphlet of 43 pages in addition to the first one of 5 pages; Special Schedule No. 15 A, a pamphlet of 10 pages; Special Schedule No. 15 B, a pamphlet of 5 pages.

Mr. CULLOM. In the last census?

Mr. CARTER. I am speaking of the inquiries propounded on the one question of electricity.

Mr. CULLOM. In what census?

Mr. CARTER. In the census of 1890, Special schedule No. 15 C, a pamphlet of 23 pages; another, No. 15 C, special schedule on electricity, 4 pages; another, special schedule on the same subject, 3 pages. Thus I might go on to enumerate until we would ascertain that of the large pages of these schedules we would reach probably 250 pages propounding interrogatories to individuals and companies relating to the subject of electricity.

The special agent who prepared the interrogatories is a thoroughly skillful man; he is a competent man; he probably had too much information on the subject of electricity; he knew how to ask too many questions.

However, it must be borne in mind that the entire work of the preparation of all these schedules and of the entire machinery of the census was completed within the period of fifteen months. Therefore it was that the Superintendent of the Census was compelled to employ the most competent man he could find and let him prepare these schedules and have them printed without the possibility of having a supervision by a board of experts for the purpose of cutting down this class of schedules, prepared by a thoroughly skilled person, but an entirely impracticable person upon census work.

It is hoped that if this bill passes at the present session of Congress there will be sufficient time allowed for the preparation of each schedule by an expert and the submission of that schedule to a board of experts, to the end that the schedules may be reduced to simple form and the work thus concentrated in the hands of an agent brought into an intelligible and workmanlike shape.

The schedule of population and social statistics under the pending bill will be reduced to 15 questions instead of 25 under the act of 1890 as applied to each individual, and as applied to families only 4 interrogatories will be required as against 5 propounded in connection with the last census.

The schedule relating to mortality will be much more simple, and the questions will in general be reduced from 18 to 13.

The agricultural schedule may be reduced more than one-half without omitting any of the data compiled in 1890. Of 256 inquiries embraced in the agricultural schedule of 1890, 130 were not utilized in compilation.

I have here what is known as the agricultural schedule, prepared by very competent people, but in the preparation of the schedule the expert went into infinite detail for the purpose of getting information on questions not of general importance, and in attempting to get such minute details of information he in some measure defeated the very purpose of the general inquiries on the subject.

For instance, we take barley. The first question was the area and the bushels. Then the enumerator was required to get the number of bushels sold and the dollars received for the bushels.

Take buckwheat. Get the acreage and the bushels, and then proceed to inquire into what was done with the buckwheat.

Take indian corn. The first proposition was to find the acreage, the number of bushels, and then the purpose was to get the average price that corn brought in that neighborhood, a line of statistics better obtainable from the general market reports issued in the various localities at different dates; but still the census enumerator was required to remain around the house and have the farmer figure this out. Most farmers, it was found, had not kept books. They found it difficult to tell just how many bushels of corn they had sold, just when they had sold it, and what price they had obtained.

Then we start in again upon the question of market gardens and small fruits. First we have the acreage of potatoes, the number of bushels sold. Sweet potatoes; the number of bushels sold, the number of bushels consumed at home. The enumerator was expected to remain around the farmhouse until he could ascertain the acreage of all vegetables. That would require a computation upon the size of the lettuce bed, the radish bed, the asparagus bed. Some of the enumerators undertook to figure up these details and got badly confused in their reports by getting down to the minor fractions. They got into the cranberry business, blackberries, strawberries, and other small fruits, total products of, in 1890. Now, the aggregate on these topics is the only inquiry we propose to have in this census. It is the last or final summing up of the questions, the total value of the products during the census year, or rather the year preceding it.

Vegetables and fruits for canning. This is another purpose for which vegetables and fruits must be considered, and we have in the schedules of 1890 a line of inquiries concerning beans, peas, green corn, tomatoes, and other vegetables, fruits, etc., used for canning purposes exclusively.

These infinite details encumbered the census of 1890 without adding to the general information; and let me say that these facts were never compiled. The enumerator was burdened with the making of the inquiries, the farmer was held up in the prosecution of his work long enough to attempt to figure them out, but when they reached the Census Office and the work was submitted to the practical test of compilation, it was found that the Census Bureau had sought too much information, and they were compelled to exclude the superfluous data from their compilations and tabulations for the purpose of general publication and utility.

This, Mr. President, is not stated in the way of criticism of the census management, because I believe, from personal observation of the work as conducted at the time and from an inspection of the census reports as published, that the census of 1890 was conducted under Superintendent Porter, considering all the circumstances, in a most masterful way. That is the judgment, I believe, of disinterested persons who have an interest in statistical matters the world over.

But Mr. Porter was not to blame for the elaborateness of detail in many of the schedules. The work cast upon him to be performed in a very brief period of time was beyond the possibility of performance by a single individual.

Now, Mr. President, we propose or hope that we shall attain through the early passage of this bill an ample time for the careful, judicious preparation of these schedules. The importance of it must be quite apparent when it is suggested that each one of these inquiries propounded uselessly cost the Government a considerable amount of money in the aggregate. It is desired to reduce the cost of the census work. One of the ways of reducing it is to ask only pertinent questions essential to elicit the desired information and by stopping there.

I presume that a competent man appointed as director would set about at once under the law to prepare the schedules. After a thoroughly competent expert had submitted his views in the form of a blank filled out with the requisite inquiries according to his conception, each schedule would then be submitted to a board of supervision; so that by this careful work of scrutinizing the compass of the schedules would be materially reduced without in any sense impairing the usefulness of the work when finally completed.

Now, under the pending bill, where the enumerator is operating in cities, where an accurate record is kept of mortality and vital statistics, and where the manufacturing statistics are to be collected by a special agent appointed for that purpose, the enumerator will have but the population schedule to carry, and in the rural districts throughout States where records are kept relating to mortality and vital statistics the enumerator will have at most but three schedules.

Mr. COCKRELL. What will they do? Under this bill, take an enumerator in an interior town where there are, say, a thousand inhabitants, and that will take in part of a country area; what will the enumerator have to do?

Mr. CARTER. The enumerator in a town enumerating for a district not embracing any farming country would have but three schedules, that is, the population schedule, the mortality and vital statistics schedule, and the schedule relating to manufactures. If in that town a record is kept by the authorities relating to mortality and vital statistics, then the enumerator would have but two schedules, to wit, that relating to population and that relating to manufactures. At most, in a rural district where the enumerator would encounter the agriculture interest, the manufacturing interest, the population question, of course, and likewise the mortality and vital statistics, he would have but four schedules to carry.

Mr. COCKRELL. Suppose there was mining in the district, how would those statistics be obtained?

Mr. CARTER. That is left to the Geological Survey. It is not included, nor is it intended to be included, in this bill or in the Twelfth Census. The Senator is well aware that there is published by the Geological Survey annually a most valuable publication entitled the Mineral Resources of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; that work has been published for years.

Mr. CARTER. That publication has been under the charge of a very efficient man, Dr. Day, for many years, and I do not think any combination of enumerators over the country can add aught to the value of Dr. Day's inquiries, made through the regular channels heretofore used.

Under the pending bill, where the enumerator is operating in cities where an accurate record is kept of mortality and vital statistics, and where the manufacturing statistics are to be collected by a special agent appointed for that purpose, the enumerator will have but the population schedule to carry; and in the rural districts, throughout States where records are kept relating to mortality and vital statistics, the enumerator will have at most but three schedules.

By comparing section 24 of the bill and section 17 of the act of 1890, the manner in which the work is sought to be simplified and improved by the pending measure will become apparent. Section 25 of the bill contemplates the collection of certain statistics through the Census Bureau after the completion and return of the enumeration work upon the schedules provided for in section 24.

This supplemental collection of miscellaneous statistics is intended to include the insane, feeble-minded, deaf, dumb, and blind (constituting what is called the "special classes"); facts relating to crime, pauperism, and benevolence, including prisoners, paupers, juvenile delinquents, and inmates of benevolent and reformatory institutions; to deaths and births in registration areas; social statistics of cities; to public indebtedness, valuation, taxation, and expenditures; to religious bodies; to electric light and power, telephone and telegraph business, and transportation, including transportation by water, express business, and street railways. The collection of statistics authorized by section 25 shall be made at such time or times and in such manner as will not interfere with nor delay the rapid completion of the census reports provided for in section 24, and all reports issued in pursuance of the provisions of section 25 shall be designated "special reports of the Census Office."

It is believed that all necessary facts relating to the topics referred to may be collected from city, municipal, and other records including the records of private institutions, or through special agents employed for the purpose, independent of and without interfering with the regular decennial census, which contemplates the collection and publication of information concerning the subjects specified in section 24.

Section 25 contemplates continuous census work, subject of course to the direction and will of Congress. Inasmuch as the subjects specified in that section present matters of public interest on which the country demands information as accurate as possible, it is quite clear that the provision looking to a continuous census work must either be preserved in the bill or if the section contemplating such continuous work is eliminated, then extensive amendments must be made to section 24, thereby burdening the regular decennial census in the same manner the work of the decennial census was overloaded in 1880 and 1890.

The committee was unanimously of the opinion that the wiser and better plan would be to confine the decennial census to the narrow limits contemplated by section 24, and to leave as provided in section 25 to supplementary effort the collation of statistics on all subjects not dependent upon the house-to-house canvass for the acquisition of necessary data.

As I have attempted to point out, the actual difference in the time employed in the work of the Tenth and Eleventh Censuses under a temporary organization and that outlined for the next census as a permanent office is but very small, and this is entirely overbalanced by the superior advantages of the latter. The subjects of inquiry provided for in section 25 will require but a small force, which may be selected from the most efficient, and the continuous work thus afforded will permit the maintenance of a thoroughly experienced and skillful staff, which in itself will insure economy and expedition.

Another feature of the bill merits attention in passing, because of some comments heretofore evoked on that subject, and that is the manner of appointing the census employees under the provisions of this bill. The work of the regular census corps—

Mr. COCKRELL. Before the Senator goes to that question I should like to ask him when the enumeration is to begin? I see on page 17, in lines 18 and 19, the language is:

The information collected shall relate exclusively to the fiscal year ending nearest the date set for the enumeration of the population.

On page 16, beginning in line 22, I find another reference to the date:

All questions as to quantity and value of crops shall relate to the year ending December 31 next preceding the enumeration.

The enumeration of the population will begin, I suppose, at some particular date. Heretofore, I believe in 1880 and 1890, it was on the 1st of June. I do not remember how it was in 1870. I do not see any provision in this bill fixing that.

Mr. CARTER. There is a provision fixing the date at which the enumeration shall begin, similar to the census of 1890, on the 1st of June. A difference is made with reference to manufactures and agriculture because it is believed, and was so believed by those who framed the bill in 1880 and likewise the bill of 1890, that a more accurate determination could be reached of the value of agricultural crops on the 1st of January, that being the close of the season for the farmers and they then having marketed their entire crop for the year.

It seems better to name the 1st of January and to confine inquiries to the preceding calendar year than to attempt to glean such data as of the 1st of June or the first of the fiscal year. The contrary is true with reference to manufacturing industries, for, as a rule, manufacturers close up accounts with the regular fiscal year.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is in section 13.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; that is as to the enumeration of the population.

Mr. CHANDLER. On page 9, line 8, the bill reads, "June 1 of the year in which the enumeration shall be made."

Mr. CARTER. June 1 is the date.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, this bill provides that the persons to be employed for the purpose of executing its provisions shall be appointed by the President as to the director and assistant director and supervisors of the census, and by the Secretary of the Interior, except as to certain laborers and others employed in the office under the director himself, after such examination as the director of the census may prescribe with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

It will be remembered that this identical proposition was presented as an amendment to the preliminary bill heretofore considered in the Senate, and it was at that time debated at some length. The committee have adhered to the position taken in the report of the amendment to the former bill; and, among other reasons, for the following: In the very nature of things the selection of the five experts, who are to constitute strong agencies in the hands of the director for the accomplishment of this work, should be made not only with reference to a high order of technical skill from the point of view of the skilled statistician, but likewise with reference to breadth of intelligence and general capacity to comprehend the machinery essential to carry on a work of this kind. I can conceive of a person of rare mathematical skill and capacity who would have little or no usefulness in connection with a machine of this kind, where organization and the saving of time constitute an essential feature of the case.

Then, Mr. President, as to the clerical force, it must be remembered that this work is one that will rapidly increase and again very rapidly decrease in so far as the clerical force is concerned. The director of the census, selected to supervise the entire work, will be primarily held responsible for its accomplishment in a manner satisfactory to the country and to the students of statistics the world over. Being so charged with responsibility, who can better prescribe or more intelligently supervise or provide the machinery for the supervision and the examination of the instruments he is to employ in the prosecution of the work with which he is to be intrusted? We never have attempted to secure the census force from civil-service certification. If we had I imagine that we would have to cite here to-day a most colossal failure upon the part of that organization to meet the requirements of the situation.

In the first place, after an individual living in California is certified and accepted by the director of the census as a proper person, such person will want some assurance of the continuance of the work. The director can not give such assurance. The individual selected for a thousand-dollar clerkship feels disinclined to pay out the railroad fare necessary to come from California to Washington, and so we will have a correspondence going on for the purpose of giving assurance or the refusal to give assurance of continuous employment if the man will report at Washington for duty. In the meantime this work, in which time is of the very essence of the matter, must of necessity be neglected.

Again, Mr. President, the Civil Service Commission certifies three names to an executive officer, and the executive officer must select one of the three; or, I believe, in the first instance, he may return all and require another bunch of names; but the second time, I think, he is compelled to select one of the persons sent forward. How long a time will be required in this way of proceeding to select the census force that is to operate at most with its full vigor and in entire numerical strength for but a few months' time?

The committee believe that the director, charged with the responsibility of knowing the class of service to be performed and having all the facts before him, can prescribe an examination destined to be fully as accurate in ascertaining the qualifications of the individual and as efficient in every particular as the Civil Service Commission could prescribe for like purposes. We think this ought to be left with the director, subject, of course, as in this bill provided, to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

Another feature of the bill, to which some attention has been called, seems to merit mention at this time. It has been charged—and, I have no doubt, with more or less justice—that the census work of the country has been at different times tainted by the interjection of political considerations into its management. Any person who would realize for a moment that the results to be obtained by a census are destined to effect for good or for ill the history of our country after all the existing parties shall have passed away would scarcely for the purpose of securing a job or distorting a figure undertake to make political considerations a controlling force in connection with this census work.

I believe that it is unwise for the Congress of the country primarily to believe or anticipate or indicate that political motives are to control in the taking of the census by prescribing in the law that they shall not control. The census law of 1890 made provision that political considerations should be of no weight.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I make an inquiry right there?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. How long does the Senator suppose that the full complement of clerks will be required in the office of the director of the census?

Mr. CARTER. It is quite probable that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] or the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] could give more accurate information on that point. My own information is that the full force would not be required any longer than from three to six months. I believe the force in 1890 was depleted at the expiration of six months.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. When taken under the civil-service rules, they would have to be discharged commencing at six months and running up to two years, perhaps.

Mr. CARTER. An indefinite time, running for two years. So the work, in so far as the great body of clerks is concerned, will be but temporary work, even if the bureau be made permanent. The number of employees will be limited after the decennial census work shall have been completed.

I desire in that behalf to suggest some figures which are quite instructive and cast some light upon the provisions of the pending bill. The regular office force, such as this bill provides for, over and above clerks of $1,000 a year, consisted in 1890 of one Superintendent and a number of clerks, the total or aggregate being ninety-two, at an annual cost to the Government of $163,865.

The force contemplated in this bill as the regular force of the office in normal times, during the work of preparation for the census, would be but 63 persons, or rather 61 persons, in view of an amendment I contemplate offering—61 persons, including the director, assistant director, the chief statistician, etc., at an annual cost of $114,000, making a saving on the regular office force under the pending bill, while getting, I believe, a more efficient organization than that heretofore existing, of about $50,000 per year.

By omitting in the law any reference to political considerations in the census work, it seems to me that the correct tone will be given to the legislation from the inception. I would prefer to put an Administration, Democratic, Republican, or Populist, upon its honor to prove true to the great essential and fundamental purpose of taking the census, rather than to attempt to hedge it about with little phrases in a law intended to prevent the interjection of partisanship into the work.

If we can not procure the services of a census director so devoted to the great statistical work which he is about to accomplish as to be insensible to any consideration which would in and of itself materially deteriorate the value of his work, we shall fail to procure the services of the proper man for that purpose.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I believe that by and through the pending bill the census work will be reduced in cost, presented in published form and in bound volumes more promptly, and yet each and every essential feature of the decennial census of 1890, and likewise that of 1890, be preserved in the future census reports.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the question of the date of the appointments. In the first place the bill provides that—

The director of the census shall be appointed, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Then it goes on to provide for an assistant director, a force of statisticians, etc. Under the bill as it stands these officers would be appointed in June, 1898, and the actual work in the field will not begin for two years. I see no earthly reason why any of these officials should be appointed before the 1st day of January, 1899. I can not see that there is any reason why they shall be appointed seventeen months before the actual work begins. The amendment I am about to propose will certainly give ample time to enable them to do everything that is to be done, to make all the plans, all the schedules, and prepare all the blanks which have to be used, and get them into the hands of the supervisors and enumerators.

I move, in line 15, of section 2, on page 1, after the word "appointed," to strike out "as soon as practicable after the passage of this act," and after the word "shall," in line 2, on page 3, to insert "enter upon his duties January 1, 1899, and thereafter." I also move, after the word "shall," in line 6, on page 2, to insert "and enter upon his duties January 1, 1899, and thereafter;" so that that part of the bill would then read:

The director of the census shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall enter upon his duties January 1, 1899, and thereafter shall receive an annual salary of $5,000; and there shall also be an assistant director of the census, to be appointed in like manner, who shall be an experienced, practical statistician, and shall enter upon his duties January 1, 1899, and shall thereafter receive an annual salary of $4,000.

Then, in the provision for the appointment of a chief clerk, statistician, disbursing clerk, experts, chiefs of divisions, etc., after the word "appointed," in line 19, I move to insert "on and after January 1, 1899, and thereafter," so that it will read that these officers are "to be appointed on and after January 1, 1899, and thereafter from time to time, as may be found necessary for the proper and prompt performance of the duties herein required to be undertaken."

Then, in line 31, after the words "and the," I move to strike out the words "director of the census" and insert "Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of the Interior may appoint in the manner herein specified one captain of the watch, at a salary of $840 per annum, two messengers, etc.

That will make the appointments begin on and after January 1, 1899. I think these amendments ought to be accepted. I believe the time named will be ample and that there is no occasion for having an organization prior to that date. That will give seventeen months from the 1st day of January until the actual work in the field.

Mr. HALE. That substitutes the Secretary of the Interior for the director of the census in all these small appointments?

Mr. COCKRELL. It makes that provision for all of them.

Mr. HALE. For all the small appointments under the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Practically for all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). The Chair understood the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, in line 23, to be that "the Secretary of the Interior may appoint."

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; "on and after January 1, 1899."

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, with reference to the last amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, I call attention to the fact that the director of the census is to "appoint in the manner hereinafter specified," and section 4 provides:

That the chief clerk, disbursing clerk, and the chief statisticians provided for in section 2 of this act, and all other employees authorized by this act below the assistant director of the census, shall, except as hereinbefore provided, be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior upon the recommendation of the Director of the Census.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have an amendment to offer at that point, but I have not come to that yet.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose the effect of the present provision is in accordance with the last motion of the Senator to amend the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; I will tell the Senator very frankly why I want to secure the adoption of these amendments. I shall move to strike out, on page 4, line 1, the words "subject to such examination as said director may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, prescribe" and to insert "after an examination and certification by the United States Civil Service Commission."

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood that that was the purpose of the Senator from Missouri—that was his second plan; but I want to say a few words in reference to the limitation of time to January 1, 1899.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, before he proceeds to that point I should like the Senator from Missouri to state what is the precise object of the amendments which he has proposed?

Mr. COCKRELL. The last one?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes, and of all these numerous amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendments I have proposed are, first, to have these appointments made on and after January 1, 1899, not immediately. There is no occasion now for these officials; and if they were appointed now, it would be an unnecessary expense and an actual waste of money.

The amendments which I have offered limit the time of the appointments to begin on and after that date. The other amendment, to which the Senator from New Hampshire refers, is to place this force subject to civil-service examination. I have not that amendment prepared, for I had no idea the bill was going to come up to-day. My amendment will, when it is completed, make one change in the existing civil-service law requirements, and that is to change the present civil-service law so that the appointments shall not be required to be made from the various States in proportion to population. I am not certain that that provision of the law would be a wise one to apply in this case. If, when I examine the question a little more closely, I find that it is necessary, I will present a provision that the clerks can be taken and certified from an eligible list regardless of the States from which they come.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. How does the Senator propose to have the enumerators appointed?

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall hope that the supervisors and enumerators may be fairly distributed between the political parties. I shall certainly hope for that. I believe that has always been done. It was done in the census of 1880. I do not remember whether there was such a requirement in the law at that time or not, but I remember that we had in Missouri, I believe it was, seven supervisors of districts, and they were divided, the Republicans taking four and three were given to the Democrats, and I think the same policy was pursued in almost every other State; but whether that was by actual requirement of law or not I do not know. I do not remember whether there was any specific provision to that effect or whether there was any general rule; but I know that was the case so far as Missouri was concerned.

Mr. GEAR. That provision was not in the law.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then it was not by law, but simply by a regulation of the Interior Department.

Mr. GEAR. A regulation of the Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. At any rate, I know that no complaint was made in Missouri on that account as to the census of 1880.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Missouri will not insist upon his first amendment, providing that the director of the census and the assistant director of the census shall not be appointed until January 1 next. If the provision as to the whole force as it now stands in the bill is unsatisfactory to the Senator, of course the Senator from Montana in charge of the bill will use his own discretion as to agreeing to a limitation of time as to some portion of this working force.

The clause as it stands, which is sufficient for me, Mr. President, is in lines 19, 20, and 21, on page 2:

To be appointed from time to time as may be found necessary for the proper and prompt performance of the duties herein required to be undertaken.

Now, there is an injunction upon the President and the director and the assistant director of the census and the Secretary of the Interior not to appoint this force of statisticians and clerks except as fast as they may be necessary. I submit to the Senator from Missouri that this discretion ought to be intrusted to the Secretary of the Interior and the director of the census. At any rate, I think it is desirable that the director and assistant director shall be appointed at the earliest practicable moment. The Senator from Montana has shown to the Senate the disadvantages of having too little preliminary preparation for the census, the disadvantage of having too little time in which to prepare the schedules, to outline the plan, and to get ready for the census; and I think the Senator from Montana convinced us that the census of 1890 was more bulky and more faulty because of the want of time for planning and preparing to take the census—

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me?

Mr. CHANDLER. At any rate, it is my opinion, based upon what little knowledge I have of the census, that if the director of the last census had had more time to prepare the census would have been better, more concise, and less expensive.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not understand that the point was made by the distinguished Senator from Montana that the requirements in these schedules which were read were there by reason of want of time to prepare them. I understood that it was because of defects in the law.

Mr. CHANDLER. No; I understood the Senator plainly to exhibit a vast plan, faulty in some respects, caused, as he stated, by want of time for preparation.

Mr. CARTER rose.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Montana can state it.

Mr. CARTER. Undoubtedly, if the Senator from Missouri will take the pains to look over the work—I have no doubt he has given it such time as he could—he will reach the conclusion at once that in each instance the man who prepared the schedules, whether the special agent or chief of division, or what not, was a person thoroughly conversant with the subject with which he was dealing. But the time for the preparation of all this work was so limited, being only fifteen months between the appointment of the director and the day of enumeration, that the director found it impossible to convene a board such as ought to have been convened under his personal supervision, not to add to, but to exclude from all of these proposed schedules superfluous matter. On account of the absence of time to take up each question separately and discuss it with sufficient care and to acquire the judgment of trained statisticians and persons of experience on the question, the director was compelled to accept the handiwork of the very best men he could find, with very trifling supervision, and to send the schedules forth to do their work.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President—

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me? He is a candid and fair man. If the Senator will look on page 16 he will see that the farm statistics as to the quantity and value of crops are to relate to the year ending December 31 next preceding the enumeration. That is to say, the farm statistics, unless I have my chronology wrong, are to begin next January.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no.

Mr. CARTER. They are to be for the year beginning next January.

Mr. CHANDLER. They are to be for the year beginning next January. We want the statistics of farm products to begin the very day the Senator proposes to have the director of the census appointed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand that the Senator from New Hampshire, who must be a farmer, coming from a farming State, wants the office to commence taking the census of agricultural products for the calendar year 1899 on the 1st day of January, 1899, in midwinter, before a solitary thing has been done? How can you take the census of the products of that year until after the year has closed?

Mr. CHANDLER. There is the provision. The Senator from Montana will defend it. We are to get the farming statistics for the year ending December 31, 1899.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly, after the year has ended.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state the point. We are, according to page 17, to get the special statistics there provided for the fiscal year which ends June 30, 1900. I think I am correct about that. The point is this: The statistics are not to be collected until the year has expired, but the preparation of the schedules, the notice to the farmers and the manufacturers of this country as to what statistics they are to be prepared to furnish to the enumerators and to the special agents, it is very desirable shall be issued at the earliest possible moment.

While personally I am entirely willing, if the Senator thinks he can not trust the executive officers to decide how much of this clerical force shall be appointed immediately, can not trust them to decide whether it is necessary or not, to have some amendment on that point, I am exceedingly anxious that the Senator from Missouri shall not oppose the immediate appointment of the director of the census, the assistant director of the census, the chief clerk, and the five chief statisticians, so that immediately, this very summer and fall, and prior to the 1st of January next, they may make progress in defining the points of inquiry which are to be made by the enumerators and statisticians in the field when they are appointed. I certainly hope, if the Senator wants to move any limitations at all, that he will move it only as to this general power to appoint clerks unlimitedly, and not delay the preparation for the census by preventing, if this bill shall become a law before we adjourn, for six long months the selection of the director of the census, the assistant director, and the five chief statisticians.

Mr. President, I have no practical knowledge on this subject; I only have what knowledge has come to me from investigation as once a member and chairman of the Committee on Census; but I am convinced that nothing is so important to a judicious and complete and economical census as that the director, the assistant director, and the five chief statisticians shall be appointed and begin their work at the earliest possible day. I have no sympathy with any desire on the part of anybody to get a vast clerical force under appointment and under pay prematurely. If the Senator from Missouri can prevent that by any reasonable amendment, I hope he will do it; but I think it would be very injurious to pass this bill and then prevent the appointment of the director and assistant director and statisticians until the 1st day of next January; and I entreat the Senator from Missouri not to endeavor to delay this preliminary work which has been too long delayed already.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator having charge of the bill has no objection, I should like to move an executive session.

Mr. CARTER. I wish the Senator from California would withhold the motion for a few moments to enable us to dispose of the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. There is some executive business to be transacted, and I understand the census bill can not be disposed of to-night. We have been here a good deal lately, and I think it would not be amiss probably at this time, twenty minutes after 4 o'clock, to move an executive session. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 7, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 6, 1898.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE VOLUNTEER ARMY.

To be additional paymaster.

James B. Kenner, of Indiana.

The nomination of James B. McKenna, of Indiana, which was delivered to the Senate June 3, 1898, is hereby withdrawn.

To be commissary of subsistence with the rank of captain.

Warren C. Fairbanks, of Indiana.

The nomination of Warren Fairbanks, of Indiana, to the above-named office, which was delivered to the Senate June 3, 1898, is hereby withdrawn.

To be chief surgeons of divisions with the rank of major.

Capt. William H. Arthur, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. George E. Bushnell, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Donald Maclean, of Michigan.

George B. Fowler, of New York.

To be brigade surgeons with the rank of major.

Capt. William C. Gorgas, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Henry P. Birmingham, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Marlborough C. Wyeth, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Richard W. Johnson, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Edward C. Carter, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. William O. Owen, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Peter R. Egan, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. William J. Wakeman, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. William Stephenson, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Adrian S. Polhemus, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. John L. Phillips, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. William C. Borden, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Edgar A. Mearns, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Guy L. Edie, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. William D. Crosby, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. William L. Kneeder, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Charles M. Gandy, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. James E. Pilcher, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Charles B. Ewing, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Walter D. McCaw, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Jefferson R. Kean, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Henry I. Raymond, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Francis J. Ives, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. William P. Kendall, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Edward R. Morris, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Henry S. T. Harris, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. William B. Danister, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Paul Clendonin, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Charles E. Woodruff, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Eugene L. Swift, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Paul Shillock, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Ogden Rafferty, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Charles F. Mason, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. James D. Glennan, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Alfred E. Bradley, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Capt. Philip G. Wales, assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Willis G. MacDonald, of New York.

Charles M. Drake, of Georgia.

Joseph K. Weaver, of Pennsylvania.

John Guiteras, of Pennsylvania.

Charles E. Ruth, of Iowa.

John W. Bayne, of the District of Columbia.

Milo B. Ward, of Missouri.

Schuyler C. Graves, of Michigan.

George T. Vaughan, of the Marine-Hospital Service.

Nathan S. Jarvis, of New York.

William Devine, of Massachusetts.

John C. Martin, of Ohio.

Peter D. MacNaughton, of Michigan.

Samuel T. Armstrong, acting assistant surgeon, United States Army.

John Patterson Dodge, of Ohio.

John R. McDill, of Wisconsin.

Samuel O. L. Potter, of California.

George A. Smith, of Iowa.

Arthur Snowden, of Virginia.

R. Stansbury Sutton, of Pennsylvania.

Frank Bruso, of New York.

To be commissary of subsistence with the rank of captain.

John P. Teagarden, of Pennsylvania.

To be chief quartermaster with the rank of major.

Morris E. Hutchins, of Kentucky.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Fred A. Field, of Vermont, to be marshal of the United States for the district of Vermont, vice Emory S. Harris, whose term will expire June 24, 1898.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Charles S. Bundy, of the District of Columbia, to be justice of the peace in the District of Columbia (assigned to the city of Washington), his present term expiring June 13, 1898.

SUPERINTENDENT OF INDIAN SCHOOLS.

Miss Estelle Reel, of Cheyenne, Wyo., to be superintendent of Indian schools, vice William N. Hailmann, removed.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Lucien E. Kellogg, of Chelan Falls, Wash., to be receiver of public moneys at Waterville, Wash., vice Albert G. Neal, removed.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Robert Smalls, of South Carolina, to be collector of customs for the district of Beaufort, in the State of South Carolina, to succeed Marion M. Hutson, whose term of office has expired by limitation.

John R. Tolbert, of South Carolina, to be collector of customs for the district of Charleston, in the State of South Carolina, to succeed George D. Bryan, whose term of office has expired by limitation.

POSTMASTERS.

R. A. Edmonds, to be postmaster at Bakersfield, in the county of Kern and State of California, in the place of J. O. Miller, whose commission expired May 3, 1898.

John W. Jolls, to be postmaster at Middletown, in the county of Newcastle and State of Delaware, in the place of W. H. Moore, whose commission expired May 9, 1898.

Robert C. Boehm, to be postmaster at White Hall, in the county of Greene and State of Illinois, in the place of B. W. Greer, whose commission expires July 10, 1898.

Gus Michaelis, to be postmaster at Mound City, in the county of Pulaski and State of Illinois, in the place of H. G. Carter, resigned.

Charles S. Neeld, to be postmaster at Normal, in the county of McLean and State of Illinois, in the place of M. D. Brown, whose commission expired March 6, 1898.

William D. Smith, to be postmaster at Collinsville, in the county of Madison and State of Illinois, in the place of J. W. Edmonson, whose commission expires July 10, 1898.

William Stickler, to be postmaster at Lexington, in the county of McLean and State of Illinois, in the place of C. P. Popejoy, whose commission expires July 19, 1898.

Cassius M. C. Weedman, to be postmaster at Farmer City, in the county of Dewitt and State of Illinois, in the place of J. H. Davidson, whose commission expired May 5, 1898.

John Q. Saint, to be postmaster at Marshalltown, in the county of Marshall and State of Iowa, in the place of H. L. Getz, whose commission expires July 18, 1898.

Richard Waring, to be postmaster at Abilene, in the county of Dickinson and State of Kansas, in the place of B. L. Strother, whose commission expired February 27, 1898.

James A. Tomlinson, to be postmaster at Harrodsburg, in the county of Mercer and State of Kentucky, in the place of T. R. Phelps, whose commission expires June 16, 1898.

Charles F. Maxwell, to be postmaster at North Brookfield, in the county of Worcester and State of Massachusetts, in the place of Timothy Howard, removed.

Winthrop A. Hayes, to be postmaster at Rochester, in the county of Oakland and State of Michigan, in the place of C. A. Burr, whose commission expires July 10, 1898.

Elisha H. Carr, to be postmaster at Newport, in the county of Sullivan and State of New Hampshire, in the place of E. C. Converse, whose commission expired May 4, 1898.

Eugene Lane, to be postmaster at Suncook, in the county of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire, in the place of J. F. Bartlett, whose commission expired April 5, 1898.

Oscar Jeffery, to be postmaster at Washington, in the county of Warren and State of New Jersey, in the place of T. B. Dawes, whose commission expired March 15, 1898.

Warren F. Clock, to be postmaster at Islip, in the county of Suffolk and State of New York, in the place of C. T. Smith, whose commission expired May 15, 1898.

Robert Murray, to be postmaster at Warrensburg, in the county of Warren and State of New York, in the place of E. S. Crandall, whose commission expired May 9, 1898.

James T. Pickering, to be postmaster at Lancaster, in the county of Fairfield and State of Ohio, in the place of W. E. Newman, whose commission expires July 9, 1898.

Charles T. Raymer, to be postmaster at Collinwood, in the county of Cuyahoga and State of Ohio, in the place of C. L. Gilbreath, whose commission expires July 10, 1898.

Robert W. Bannatyne, to be postmaster at Tunkhannock, in the county of Wyoming and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of Charles M. Lee, whose commission expired March 19, 1898.

William B. Stoddard, to be postmaster at Montrose, in the county of Susquehanna and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of E. S. Warner, whose commission expired February 16, 1898.

Arthur W. Stedman, to be postmaster at Wakefield, in the county of Washington and State of Rhode Island, in the place of D. R. Southwick, jr., whose commission expired June 5, 1898.

William B. Brush, to be postmaster at Austin, in the county of Travis and State of Texas, in the place of G. B. Zimpelman, whose commission expired December 19, 1897.

S. H. Flanagan, to be postmaster at Longview, in the county of Gregg and State of Texas, in the place of T. E. Kennard, removed.

Alexander McCormick, to be postmaster at Berryville, in the county of Clarke and State of Virginia, in the place of J. O. Crown, whose commission expired October 28, 1897.

Bennie Johnson, to be postmaster at Cumberland, in the county of Barron and State of Wisconsin, in the place of W. C. Pease, whose commission expired June 1, 1898.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 6, 1898.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Capt. Frank Wildes, to be advanced five numbers, from No. 24 to No. 19, on the list of captains.

Capt. Joseph B. Coghlan, to be advanced six numbers, from No. 34 to No. 28, on the list of captains.

Capt. Charles V. Gridley, to be advanced six numbers, from No. 85 to No. 29, on the list of captains.

Capt. Nehemiah M. Dyer, to be advanced seven numbers, from No. 39 to 32, on the list of captains.

Capt. Benjamin P. Lamberton, to be advanced seven numbers, from No. 45 to No. 38, on the list of captains.

Commander Asa Walker, to be advanced nine numbers, from No. 87 to No. 28, on the list of commanders.

Commander Edward P. Wood, to be advanced ten numbers, from No. 71 to 61, on the list of commanders.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 29, 1898.

SIR: On the 15th instant the Department received from Rear-Admiral George Dewey, United States Navy, commander in chief of the United States naval force on the Asiatic station, the following telegram:

"I thank the President for my promotion. Forcibly recommend that Commander Lamberton, chief of staff; Captain Wildes, the commander of the Boston; Coghlan, the commander of the Raleigh; Gridley, the commander of the Olympia; Dyer, the commander of the Baltimore; Commander Walker, the commander of the Concord; Wood, the commander of the Petrel, without whose aid I could have done nothing, each to be advanced ten numbers."

In this connection your attention is invited to the following provision of law contained in section 1506 of the Revised Statutes:

"Any officer of the Navy may, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be advanced, not exceeding thirty numbers in rank, for eminent and conspicuous conduct in battle or extraordinary heroism."

Careful consideration has been given to the foregoing recommendation of Rear Admiral Dewey, who thus generously shares with the principal officers under his command, including Captain Lamberton, his chief of staff, the well-earned credit for the glorious victory over the Spanish military and naval forces achieved by our fleet at Manila on the 1st instant; and I am of opinion that the exceptional character of this victory fully entitles these officers, in view of Rear Admiral Dewey's recommendation, to substantial recognition under the provision of law cited "for eminent and conspicuous conduct in battle."

In view, however, of the fact that the higher the rank of the officer advanced on the list the greater is the value of each number gained by him, I am of opinion that the files by which the officers named should be raised in rank may very properly be controlled by the places which they now occupy relatively on the Navy list, and that such number of files should be inverse to the present rank of those concerned. Moreover, it is to be remembered that Rear-Admiral Dewey, by his advancement to his present grade, gained but two numbers.

I have the honor, therefore, to recommend that the officers referred to in the dispatch herein set forth be nominated to the Senate for advancement in rank as follows: Capt. Frank Wildes, 5 numbers; Capt. Joseph H. Coghlan, 6 numbers; Capt. Charles V. Gridley, 6 numbers; Capt. Nehemiah M. Dyer, 7 numbers; Capt. Benjamin P. Lamberton, 7 numbers; Commander Asa Walker, 9 numbers, and Commander Edward P. Wood, 10 numbers.

If you concur with me in these recommendations, I will cause to be prepared and forwarded to you, for transmission to the Senate, the necessary nominations in the premises.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

THE PRESIDENT.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE VOLUNTEER ARMY.

To be brigadier-generals.

Col. John N. Andrews, Twelfth United States Infantry.

Leonard W. Colby, of Nebraska.

Roy Stone, of New York.

Col. Robert P. Hughes, Inspector-General United States Army.

Lieut. Col. John B. Babcock, assistant adjutant-general, United States Army.

Henry T. Douglas, of Maryland.

Harrison Gray Otis, of California.

To be additional paymasters.

Charles Albert Smylie, of New York.

William Monnaghan, of Ohio.

Manley B. Curry, of Georgia.

Joseph Stuart Wilkins, of the District of Columbia.

Michael F. Sheary, of New York.

Second Lieut. George W. Moses, Third United States Cavalry.

Frederick Bostwick, of New York.

James Canby, of Colorado.

Fred M. Rix, of Arkansas.

To be assistant adjutant-general with the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

Capt. William V. Richards, Sixteenth United States Infantry.

To be assistant adjutants-general with the rank of major.

Capt. Hunter Liggett, Fifth United States Infantry.

First Lieut. Henry T. Allen, Second United States Cavalry.

To be assistant adjutants-general with the rank of captain.

First Lieut. Charles D. Rhodes, Sixth United States Cavalry.

William Graves Bates, of New York.

Frederick M. Page, of Virginia.

Davis Elkins, of West Virginia, now first lieutenant First West Virginia Volunteer Infantry.

To be inspector-general with the rank of major.

David Vickers, of Idaho.

FIRST REGIMENT OF UNITED STATES VOLUNTEER ENGINEERS.

To be lieutenant-colonel.

Capt. George W. Goethals, Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

To be majors.

First Lieut. John S. Sewell, Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

Louis Duncan, of Maryland.

James Dubose Ferguson, of the District of Columbia.

SECOND REGIMENT OF UNITED STATES VOLUNTEER ENGINEERS.

To be colonel.

Willard Young, of Utah, late captain Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

To be majors.

Richard H. Savage, of New York.

Edward L. Pinckard, of Alabama.

To be division engineer officers with the rank of major.

Capt. Joseph E. Kuhn, Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

First Lieut. Eugene W. Van C. Lucas, Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

To be commissaries of subsistence with the rank of major.

Robert Lee Longstreet, of Georgia.
Evelyn S. Garnett, of Arkansas.

FOURTH REGIMENT UNITED STATES VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

To be lieutenant-colonel.

George Cole, of Connecticut.

To be surgeon with the rank of major.

Joseph M. Henry, of Pennsylvania.

To be assistant surgeons with the rank of first lieutenant.

Patrick J. McGrath, of the District of Columbia.
Clyde S. Ford, of West Virginia.

To be first lieutenants.

John Van Nees Philip, of the District of Columbia.

Benjamin Stark, jr., of Connecticut.

To be captain.

Osman Latrobe, of Maryland.

FIFTH REGIMENT UNITED STATES VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

To be surgeon with the rank of major.

Sprague Winchester, of Mississippi.

To be first lieutenants.

Christian Briand, quartermaster-sergeant, Second United States Cavalry.

John W. Wright, of Tennessee.

SIXTH REGIMENT UNITED STATES VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

To be lieutenant-colonel.

First Lieut. Andrew S. Rowan, Nineteenth United States Infantry.

To be first lieutenants.

Horace Vandeventer, of Tennessee.

Cary F. Spence, of Tennessee.

EIGHTH REGIMENT UNITED STATES VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

To be surgeon with the rank of major.

George T. Vaughan, of the Marine-Hospital Service.

NINTH REGIMENT UNITED STATES VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

To be colonel.

Capt. Charles J. Crane, Twenty-fourth United States Infantry.

TENTH REGIMENT UNITED STATES VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

To be colonel.

Capt. Jesse M. Leo, Ninth United States Infantry.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE VOLUNTEER ARMY.

To be chief commissaries of subsistence with the rank of major.

First Lieut. George T. Bartlett, Third United States Artillery.

John D. Black, of North Dakota.

Robert H. Fitzhugh, of Pennsylvania.

William M. Grinnell, of New York.

To be commissaries of subsistence with the rank of captain.

William Larrabee, jr., of Iowa.

Joseph B. Handy, of Delaware.

To be chief quartermasters with the rank of major.

Capt. George Ruhlen, assistant quartermaster, United States Army.

Capt. Edgar B. Robertson, Ninth United States Infantry.

To be assistant quartermasters with the rank of captain.

Charles M. Forrest, of the District of Columbia.

Second Lieut. Charles G. Sawtelle, jr., Second United States Cavalry.

Clyde D. V. Hunt, of Vermont.

First Lieut. John A. Perry, Eighth United States Infantry.

First Lieut. Alexander W. Perry, Ninth United States Cavalry.

James H. McMillan, of Michigan.

FOR APPOINTMENT IN THE SIGNAL CORPS.

To be captains.

Alexander D. B. Smead, of Pennsylvania.

Charles B. Hopburn, of the District of Columbia.

First Lieut. Charles C. Clark, Fifth United States Infantry.

Elmore A. McKenna, of Idaho.

Asbery W. Yancey, of Tennessee.

To be first lieutenants.

Henry G. Opdycke, of New Jersey.

Hugh Haddow, jr., of New Jersey.

To be second lieutenants.

Williamson S. Wright, of Indiana.

McKee Dunn McKee, of New York.

Frederick M. Jones, first-class sergeant, United States Signal Corps.

Max Wagner, of Massachusetts.

Henry W. Stamford, sergeant, United States Signal Corps.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Mayer Hahn, of North Carolina, to be collector of customs for the district of Pamlico, in the State of North Carolina.

Charles F. Leach, of Ohio, to be collector of customs for the district of Cuyahoga, in the State of Ohio.

MARSHAL.

Dewey C. Bailey, of Colorado, to be marshal of the United States for the district of Colorado.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Henry Terrell, of Texas, to be attorney of the United States for the western district of Texas.

POSTMASTERS.

George P. Dustan, to be postmaster at Peterboro, in the county of Hillsboro and State of New Hampshire.

Joseph A. Leggett, to be postmaster at Troy, in the county of Rensselaer and State of New York.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 6, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

VOTING BY SOLDIERS AT CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. LACEY. I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the reading of the Journal on Tuesday, June 7, 1898, it shall be in order to call up House bill No. 10550 and consider the same.

Several MEMBERS. What is the bill?

Mr. LACEY. This is a bill providing for holding Congressional elections—

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand a second, in order that we may have an explanation.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. [A pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LACEY. The title of the bill is as follows:

A bill to enable volunteer soldiers during the war with Spain to vote at Congressional elections.

The resolution I have submitted provides only that the bill be set down specially for to-morrow morning. I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing—

Mr. BAILEY. What is the proposition?

Mr. LACEY. It is merely to set this bill down for consideration to-morrow morning, without any limitation whatever. The resolution leaves it open for consideration and amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. The motion is not to pass it now?

Mr. LACEY. No, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no objection.

Mr. LACEY. We regard the bill as too important to be voted upon without giving opportunity for discussion and amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. This is simply a request for the assignment of the bill for consideration to-morrow.

Mr. LACEY. For consideration to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The question being taken, the motion of Mr. LACEY to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, had insisted upon its amendments, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the said bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. ALDRICH, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

- On June 1, 1898:
H. R. 4372. An act concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees.
- On June 2, 1898:
H. R. 9604. An act to grant a right of way to the village of Flan-dreau, S. Dak.
- On June 3, 1898:
H. R. 4456. An act for the relief of Joseph R. Findley.
- On June 4, 1898:
H. Res. 150. Joint resolution directing the Secretary of War to submit plans and estimates for the improvement of Tampa Bay, Florida, from Port Tampa to its mouth, in the Gulf of Mexico;
H. R. 8949. An act granting additional powers to railroad companies operating lines in the Indian Territory;
H. R. 9815. An act appointing commissioners to revise the statutes relating to trade and other marks and trade and commercial names;
H. R. 3663. An act granting a pension to George Barnes;
H. R. 864. An act granting a pension to Maria E. Hess;
H. R. 5245. An act granting a pension to Florence N. Waldron;
H. R. 8636. An act granting an increase of pension to John X. Griffith;
H. R. 164. An act granting an increase of pension to John P. Thomas;
H. R. 9210. An act granting an increase of pension to George H. Baldwin;
H. R. 3953. An act granting an increase of pension to Calvin P. Lynn; and
H. R. 8834. An act granting a pension to John B. Hays.

CLASSIFICATION OF LETTERS PATENT, ETC.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4168) for revising and perfecting the classification of letters patent and printed publications in the Patent Office.

The bill was read.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second on this bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to withdraw that, to allow a report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a privileged report.

Mr. HICKS. I trust the gentleman will not take me off my feet. This is an important matter.

Mr. DALZELL. I trust my colleague will allow this matter to come up.

Mr. DINGLEY. The other matter can be reached in a short time.

Mr. CANNON. This matter that the gentleman is moving in will take at least an hour and a half before it can be disposed of.

Mr. DOCKERY. Undoubtedly; forty minutes and a roll call.

Mr. DALZELL. We desire to have this matter presented so that the revenue bill can go to conference.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have no objection.

Mr. HICKS. Will this take any time?

Mr. DALZELL. I hope not. It will not take more than forty minutes, anyway.

Mr. CANNON. It does not make any difference whether it takes time or not. I suppose that the bill which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HICKS] has in his charge probably could wait on the revenue bill.

Mr. DALZELL. The purpose of this report is to send the war revenue bill to conference immediately.

Mr. HICKS. I will give way, then.

THE WAR REVENUE BILL.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I present the following report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution of the House, No. 810, have had the same under consideration and report the same with the recommendation that it be agreed to:

"Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move to nonconcur in gross in the Senate amendments to House bill No. 10100, entitled 'An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures,' and agree to a committee of conference, asked for by the Senate, on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses; and the House shall, without further delay, proceed to vote upon said motion; and if the said motion prevail a committee of conference shall be appointed, without instructions."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report, and on that I ask for the previous question.

Mr. BAILEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. If the motion for the previous question prevails, there will then be twenty minutes on a side?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. There will then be twenty minutes on a side. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes are allotted to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] and twenty to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me hardly necessary that I should occupy any of the time of the House in explaining this rule. It is identical in terms with the rule under which the tariff bill at the last session was sent to conference. The evident purpose of the rule is to save time. Instead of sending this House bill with the Senate amendments to the Committee on Ways and Means and having them report it back again and having it discussed, the purpose of the rule is to send it at once to conference. It seems to me I am safe in saying that I voice the sentiments of both sides of the House when I say that the utmost expedition ought to be used in getting this war measure disposed of. Millions are being paid out of the Treasury every day, and millions more are being called for, and it seems to me that it is the desire of all parties, both in Congress and out of Congress, and of the executive department as well, that whatever revenues are to be provided for shall be provided for quickly.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BARTLETT. If this rule is adopted and the bill, with the amendments put upon it by the Senate, is sent to conference, then there will be no opportunity on the part of those who desire to vote for particular amendments separately to do so, but they will have to be voted on as a whole on the report of the conference committee. That is the rule, as I understand it.

Mr. DALZELL. That is true.

Mr. BARTLETT. So if this rule is adopted there will be no opportunity afforded to the House to vote upon any one of the Senate amendments separately.

Mr. DALZELL. No opportunity at this particular time. Of course it is within the discretion of the House to adopt or reject any conference report.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that; but when will there be an opportunity to vote upon any one amendment that the House may desire to vote upon?

Mr. DALZELL. I can not assure my friend that there will be any opportunity at all. The House, of course, at a particular time can reject any conference report and can instruct its conferees. But I will say to my friend that there are very few amendments to this bill of any substantial character that the House has not already had an opportunity to discuss.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Will there be any opportunity to vote upon the seigniorage amendment?

Mr. DALZELL. The House has already discussed that amendment and voted upon it.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Will we be permitted, under your rules, to vote upon that amendment separately?

Mr. DALZELL. Not on that or any other separate amendment at this time.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. You include the seigniorage amendment in your statement.

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOPKINS. You can get a vote on any amendment by voting down this resolution.

Mr. BAILEY. The case to-day is not on all fours with the tariff bill to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] has referred. That bill, like all such, was strictly a party measure, and there is great force in the line of reasoning which contends that, inasmuch as a party must be held responsible for all tariff measures, they should be formulated by the party. I myself strongly sympathize with that view. I have even brought myself to doubt if the opposite party, perhaps, ought not to desire or attempt to divide the responsibility with the party in power for a strictly partisan tariff measure.

But conceding the full force of that view, still it does not apply to this particular case. This is not, or at least it ought not to be, in any sense a party measure. This is an effort to provide the Government with the money to meet a great emergency. That the emergency exists we all recognize; that it must be met we all concede, and we all desire to meet it in the best possible way. We differ only as to the means which ought to be employed in raising that money, and I believe it just and fair to afford the House and to afford every member of it the most ample opportunity to vote his own individual opinion. There is no need for this precipitous action.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], unwittingly no doubt, greatly overstates the case when he says that there is a daily demand for millions of dollars and that the demand is growing. The expenses of the war will not reach a million dollars a day; and there are now more than $90,000,000 in the Treasury, over and above the hundred million dollars reserved for the redemption of United States notes and Treasury notes. With this $197,000,000 in the Treasury, $97,000,000 of it available for ordinary and extraordinary expenditures, there can be no need for any great haste in this legislation.

Certainly there is no need that justifies the denial on the part of the majority of the opportunity and the right of the minority to vote upon these amendments in their order: To illustrate the hardship of the rule, there are many of those amendments which I desire to support and which, if submitted to the House as a House, or to the House in Committee of the Whole, I should cheerfully support; and yet, when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] proposes his motion to nonconcur in all of the amendments, although I do not believe that motion ought to prevail as to some of them, I shall not be in a position to vote my real convictions, because if I vote "no" on the motion to nonconcur and that motion is negatived, the effect of it is to concur, and the effect of a concurrence would be to pass the bill as it came from the Senate.

Now, I myself do not desire to pass the bill in that shape, and yet I would vote for very many of the amendments adopted by the Senate if, after having improved the bill by adopting those amendments, I could still vote against it if upon its final passage I did not think it sufficiently meritorious to command my vote. The House ought to be afforded an opportunity to vote for the amendments that it thinks good and to vote against the amendments that it thinks bad. After having adjusted the good and the bad, or rather after having separated them, voting some up and the others down, then the House ought to be permitted to express its final judgment on the final passage of the bill.

But under this rule, if it is adopted, the House is compelled either to vote for them all or against them all—compelled to take the bad in order to get the good, or else compelled to reject the good in order to escape the bad.

Mr. Speaker, this is all I desire to say. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen on this side of the House are opposed to this rule because they are satisfied that it deprives this House of an opportunity to express its sense and judgment on the 213 amendments added to this bill in the Senate.

Now, this is a proposition to raise from one hundred and fifty to two hundred million dollars. The Senate has added at least $80,000,000 of additional taxes to this bill since it left this House. If this rule passes, what is the effect of it? This bill then goes to a conference committee. That conference committee makes a report to this House, and then the members of this House must reject or adopt that report as a whole. There are 213 propositions here to raise additional taxes. Now, I take it to be but right and proper that the sense of this House should be tested on every one of those propositions. The gentleman says it will expedite the passage of this bill to pass this rule.

Now, I believe this bill can be passed much quicker if these gentlemen will give the House the right to vote and discuss these propositions. How are bills passed through here? You gave two days for the discussion of this bill when first introduced. This time was consumed in discussion and prevented an opportunity to vote on the various propositions. After it has passed it comes back here and you do not give the House an opportunity to vote on these various amendments. Now, if this rule is defeated, a motion can be made to concur or nonconcur in the 213 amendments added on by the Senate. It is more important to that side of the House than it is to this side of the House to have that privilege of having a separate vote on these important and far-reaching amendments. You have fifty-odd majority in this House. We have no power and no authority given us by the people to concur or nonconcur in any of these amendments, but that side of the House can vote on these amendments separately and pass or defeat them.

There are amendments in the bill in which I am interested. There is a Senate amendment that eliminates the retroactive feature of taxation as applied to tobacco and its products. I am anxious to test the sense of the House on that proposition. I believe if the House had an opportunity to vote on it it would concur in the Senate amendment eliminating that feature of the bill, but under this rule I would not have the opportunity to test the sense of the House. Why? Because if this rule passes, it goes to a conference committee, and that committee has had no opportunity to get the sense of the House as to whether they should concur or nonconcur with that provision, and so the conferees, having no opportunity to know what the sense of the House is, what the judgment of the House is, simply represent their own individual views, their own convictions, and their own ideas.

I say we should have a separate vote to test the sense of the House upon all of these important amendments, dispose of them, and then send the bill to conference only upon such amendments added in the Senate as the House does not see proper to concur in.

Now, I can see some excuse that a tariff bill requiring this method of procedure should be followed. If you destroy some features of a tariff bill it destroys the whole schedule, the whole scheme on which the bill has been built up. Possibly a tariff bill could not properly be passed without using such a rule. But this is simply a scheme of taxation, taxing thousands of separate articles, and the elimination of one would not injure any schedule or any features of the bill.

Take the feature of taxing the sugar trust and the Standard Oil Company, put on by the Senate. I say this House should have an opportunity to vote as to whether they concur in that amendment of the Senate. I say of the 213 amendments you have no opportunity to get the sense of the House unless you defeat this rule, and then a motion to concur or nonconcur in the Senate amendments will be in order, and the sense of the House can be taken. It would not take over a week or ten days to discuss it and vote upon it. I say the time would be well spent if the representatives of the people could have an opportunity to give their judgment, their convictions, their ideas upon a vast tax bill like this. I want to say to both sides of the House—

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman allow me a question right here?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. I want to ask the gentleman if he seriously believes that if the House should enter upon the discussion of this bill in the way he proposes he thinks it would get through by December?

Mr. SWANSON. I do. We could discuss these important amendments and test the sense of the House on them in three or four days. That time would give us an opportunity to discuss and vote upon the most important amendments that the sense of the House ought to be tested on.

There has grown up in this House, both on the Democratic side when it was in power and upon the Republican side, more upon the Republican side, a disposition to deprive the House of Representatives of the opportunity to test its sense and judgment upon important propositions separately. Now, I know whenever you have a tariff bill here and Senate amendments come over no opportunity, not even for two or three days, is given for discussion or vote on the amendments. Now, on the other side of the Capitol, it is true, they spend fruitless time in talking; they are too slow, and they have adopted no rules that will force them to a vote. We have amended the rules in this House so we can force the House to come to a vote. Now, the rule is being perverted for the purposes of depriving the House of voting and expressing its sense on important amendments.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. BAILEY. I yield now the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN].

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I concur in the opinion that the best way that this House can spend a little of the time that is before it is in considering in the House separately the different amendments that have been offered by the Senate, and therefore I am not able to bring myself to believe that to adopt this rule is wise and the best way to dispose of the measure. There is a disposition all over the country, there is a disposition on the part of all the members of all the parties in this House, to provide whatever revenue is necessary to carry on the war we are now engaged in. But gentlemen differ very widely as to how that revenue should be raised. The Senate has adopted 213 amendments to the bill, and some of them are very important. And we all know that with that number of amendments, varying in magnitude and importance as widely as can be conceived, from the coinage of the silver that is now on hand down to the change of punctuation points, it will be utterly impossible on a general conference report, submitted to the House and to be voted on as an entirety, ever to get the sense of the House on these separate propositions.

I object to this method of dealing with it, because when it comes to the adoption of the conference report, it being an entirety, there will not be a member on the floor that will not be compelled to vote for many things that he does not want to support, if he votes for the adoption of the conference report, or to vote against many things he would prefer to support, if he votes against its adoption.

To illustrate, here is a proposition to coin the silver we have and utilize the seigniorage that will provide $42,000,000 additional money. If we coin the silver that has been purchased we utilize thereby the seigniorage. I am strongly for that amendment, believing, as I do, that it is a wise thing to do.

What is the objection to giving this House the opportunity to express itself on that question, and, if we concur in it, shorten the work of the conference and reduce the complexities of the report that they will finally make? Is it proposed to submit that to the conference and kill it there? Again, the Senate has put an amendment in the bill providing that the tax on tobacco shall not be retroactive. That is very important and should be adopted. Great injustice will be done to those engaged in that trade—a trade from which we get a very large revenue now, and are to get a still larger revenue—if that amendment is not adopted. Why not have an opportunity to vote upon that? Vote down this rule and let us adopt that also. And so I might illustrate with other amendments that the bill contains as it comes from the Senate.

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that when the bill passed the House there was a great diversity of opinion as to the issuing of the $500,000,000 of bonds. I believe the Senate has reduced the number that is to be issued. The people are about to have an immense bond debt saddled on them. Why may we not relieve the complication of the bill by taking a separate vote on that proposition? I am averse to dealing with the bill in the way proposed by this rule because it deprives the House of having an opportunity of expressing its sense on these different measures. And we know that a fruitful means of defeating meritorious provisions in a complicated bill is to jumble them up in conference and lose them on the final report, which must be adopted as an entirety or rejected as an entirety.

There are other reasons why the course I have urged should be taken; but I will not occupy further the time of the House. What I have said illustrates sufficiently the position of those of us who do not regard the course proposed in this resolution as a proper method of procedure.

In addition to that, it is within the memory of all of us that, as suggested to me by my colleague [Mr. GAINES], this bill as passed by the House was never amply discussed, or at least ample opportunity was never given for amendments under the five-minute rule. We were cut off from the full consideration of the bill by way of amendment, and we ought not now to be deprived of this last opportunity to adopt those amendments already adopted by the Senate which we may consider meritorious. Surely there is no pressing necessity to justify a hasty and careless consideration of a bill so important and far-reaching.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has one minute remaining.

Mr. DALZELL. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. Seventeen minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the rule which has been reported by the Committee on Rules is identically the same as that which was reported in the case of the tariff bill of 1897, and substantially the same as that reported in the case of the tariff bill of 1894. It has been found by experience that with a large number of amendments upon a complicated bill like a tariff bill or a war revenue measure the best results are obtained by sending the bill immediately to conference, and this practice has prevailed even with reference to appropriation bills.

Two hundred and thirteen amendments to this bill have been adopted by the Senate. The Senate has been considering the bill for five weeks, with only ninety Senators to participate in the discussion. If the House, with its numerous membership, should enter upon the discussion of the various amendments to this bill in the same manner and with the same latitude that the Senate has entered upon it, we should probably find ourselves, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], discussing various amendments or other propositions three months hence—having reached no result.

A large number of these amendments are such as will require care in their consideration and arrangement, and it has been found by experience that this can be secured with much more desirable results in the conference committee than otherwise. It has always been found that the moment we enter upon the discussion here of controverted amendments in large numbers the time is occupied upon two or three amendments and the great body of the amendments are not reached.

If it should prove in this case that there are some controverted questions upon which the House has not already expressed its opinion, then from the very nature of the case, unless there should be a prompt agreement of the conferees, those particular important controverted points would be brought back for the consideration of the House. But for the present it has been thought best to follow the practice that has prevailed on both sides of the House, when either party had a majority, of sending the bill and amendments at once to conference. Experience has shown that the best results can be obtained by continuing that course of action.

Many amendments have been adopted by the Senate that are not germane to the bill, that have not the slightest reference to a war revenue measure. Those amendments would not have been in order, if offered originally in this House. But above all it must be borne in mind that this is a bill to provide ways and means for war expenditures. Five weeks have elapsed since this bill went to the Senate.

The war has been going on from day to day, and large expenditures have already been incurred, while others are in sight to a far greater extent than can be covered by any existing sources of revenue. Larger expenditures are at hand, and in such an exigency as this, with a war upon us, it is incumbent upon this House to take the shortest road to secure results that will provide ways and means to meet war expenditures.

I hope, therefore, that the same rule which has been found desirable and effective in the past, securing as it did the best results not only in 1894, but also in 1897, may be followed now by the House, and that this bill may be immediately put in conference. Then, if there should arise points of disagreement on which it may be necessary for us to come back to the House and to the Senate, proper discussion may be had thereon. For the present, in order that all these details may be eliminated and vital matters, if there are still disagreeing votes upon them, may be reached, I trust the rule which has been reported by the Committee on Rules will be agreed to, and prompt measures taken to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures.

The question being taken on agreeing to the resolution, there were on a division (called for by Mr. BAILEY)—ayes 106, nays 90.

Mr. BAILEY. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 106, answered "present" 7, not voting 104; as follows:

YEAS—137.

Alexander,	Dayton,	Landis,	Royce,
Babcock,	Dingley,	Linney,	Russell,
Baker, Md.	Dolliver,	Littauer,	Shannon,
Barham,	Eddy,	Loud,	Shattuc,
Barney,	Ellis,	Lovering,	Shelden,
Barrows,	Fenton,	Low,	Sherman,
Bartholdt,	Fletcher,	Lybrand,	Smith, Ill.
Belden,	Fowler, N. J.	McCall,	Snover,
Belford,	Gilson,	McCleary,	Sperry,
Bishop,	Gillett, Mass.	McDonald,	Steele,
Booze,	Graff,	McIntire,	Stevens, Minn.
Boutelle, Me.	Griffin,	Mahany,	Stewart, N. J.
Brewster,	Grosvenor,	Mann,	Stewart, Wis.
Broderick,	Grow,	Marsh,	Stone, C. W.
Bromwell,	Hager,	Mercer,	Stone, W. A.
Brownlow,	Harmer,	Miller,	Sulloway,
Burleigh,	Hawley,	Mills,	Towney,
Burton,	Heatwole,	Minor,	Taylor, Ohio
Cannon,	Hemenway,	Moody,	Tongue,
Capron,	Henderson,	Morris,	Updegraff,
Clark, Iowa,	Henry, Conn.	Mudd,	Van Voorhis,
Cochrane, N. Y.	Henry, Ind.	Northway,	Wadsworth,
Coddling,	Hepburn,	Olmsted,	Walker, Va.
Connell,	Hicks,	Otjen,	Wanger,
Cooper, Wis.	Hilborn,	Parker, N. J.	Ward,
Cousins,	Hill,	Payne,	Warner,
Crump,	Hitt,	Pearce, Mo.	Weaver,
Crumpacker,	Hopkins,	Pearson,	White, Ill.
Curtis, Iowa,	Jenkins,	Perkins,	White, N. C.
Curtis, Kans.	Johnson, Ind.	Pitney,	Wise,
Dalzell,	Johnson, N. Dak.	Powers,	Yost,
Danford,	Kerr,	Prince,	Young,
Davenport,	Ketcham,	Pugh,
Davidson, Wis.	Kirkpatrick,	Ray,
Davison, Ky.	Lacey,	Reeves,

NAYS—106.

Adamson,	De Graffenreid,	Lester,	Robertson, La.
Bailey,	De Vries,	Lewis, Ga.	Robinson, Ind.
Baird,	Dinamore,	Lewis, Wash.	Sayers,
Baker, Ill.	Dockery,	Little,	Shafroth,
Ball,	Fitzgerald,	Livingston,	Shuford,
Bankhead,	Fleming,	Lloyd,	Simpson,
Barlow,	Fox,	Love,	Sims,
Bartlett,	Greene,	McClellan,	Skinner,
Berry,	Griffith,	McCormick,	Stallings,
Bland,	Griggs,	McCulloch,	Stark,
Bodine,	Gunn,	McDowell,	Stephens, Tex.
Brantley,	Handy,	McMillin,	Stokes,
Brenner, Ohio	Hartman,	McRae,	Strowd, N. C.
Brewer,	Hay,	Maddox,	Sulzer,
Broussard,	Henry, Miss.	Maguire,	Sutherland,
Brucker,	Henry, Tex.	Marshall,	Swanson,
Brundidge,	Hinrichsen,	Martin,	Talbot,
Burke,	Howard, Ga.	Maxwell,	Taylor, Ala.
Carmack,	Hunter,	Meekison,	Terry,
Castle,	Jones, Va.	Moon,	Vandiver,
Clardy,	Jones, Wash.	Norton, Ohio	Vincent,
Clark, Mo.	Kelley,	Ogden,	Wheeler, Ky.
Clayton,	Kitchin,	Osborne,	Williams, Miss.
Cooney,	Kieberg,	Rhea,	Wilson,
Cowherd,	Knowles,	Richardson,	Zenor.
Cummings,	Lamb,	Ridgely,
De Armond,	Lanham,	Rixey,

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—7.

Clarke, N. H.	Meyer, La.	Otey,	Slayden.
McAleer,	Norton, S. C.	Settle,

NOT VOTING—104.

Acheson,	Colson,	Howard, Ala.	Quigg,
Adams,	Connolly,	Howe,	Robb,
Aldrich,	Cooper, Tex.	Howell,	Robbins,
Allen,	Corliss,	Hull,	Sauerhering,
Arnold,	Cox,	Hurley,	Showalter,
Barber,	Cranford,	Jett,	Smith, Ky.
Barrett,	Davey,	Joy,	Smith, S. W.
Beach,	Davis,	King,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Belknap,	Dorr,	Knox,	Southard,
Bell,	Dorner,	Kulp,	Southwick,
Bennet, Pa.	Driggs,	Latimer,	Spalding,
Bennet,	Elliott,	Lawrence,	Sparkman,
Benton,	Ernestrout,	Lentz,	Sprague,
Bingham,	Evans,	Lorimer,	Strait,
Botkin,	Faris,	Loudenslager,	Strode, Nebr.
Boutell, Ill.	Fischer,	McEwan,	Sturtevant,
Bradley,	Fitzpatrick,	Mahon,	Tate,
Brosius,	Footo,	Mesick,	Thorp,
Brown,	Foss,	Miers, Ind.	Todd,
Brumm,	Fowler, N. C.	Mitchell,	Underwood,
Bull,	Gaines,	Newlands,	Vehslage,
Butler,	Gardner,	Odell,	Walker, Mass.
Campbell,	Gillet, N. Y.	Overstreet,	Weymouth,
Catchings,	Grout,	Packer, Pa.	Wheeler, Ala.
Chickering,	Hamilton,	Peters,	Wilber,
Cochran, Mo.	Hooker,	Pierce, Tenn.	Williams, Pa.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. LATIMER, is confined to his room by sickness. I ask that he be excused. If he were present, he would vote "no."

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My colleague, Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee, is detained at home by illness in his family. He asks to be excused. There was no objection.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I desire to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. SOUTHARD. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. LANHAM. I ask that the gentleman from Florida, Mr. DAVIS, be excused on account of sickness in his family.

There was no objection.

Mr. MCALEER. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. KNOX. If he were present, he would vote "aye," and I should vote "no."

Mr. DRIGGS (having previously voted in the negative). I desire to withdraw my vote. I have a permanent pair with the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. DORR, and he is not here. I voted without knowledge of that fact.

Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire. I am paired with the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. CARMACK. I voted in the affirmative, and I desire to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. RIDGELY. I wish to state in behalf of my colleague, Mr. BOTKIN, that he is unavoidably detained by serious illness in his family. If he were here, he would vote "no."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that his colleague, Mr. BOTKIN, be excused on account of sickness in his family. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask that my colleague, Mr. QUIGG, who is absent on account of sickness, be excused. If he were here, he would vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that his colleague, Mr. QUIGG, be excused on account of illness. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOW. I ask that my colleague, Mr. MITCHELL, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to know if the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HENDERSON, has voted?

The SPEAKER. He has.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then I will let my vote stand. I did not know whether he voted or not.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Has the gentleman from California, Mr. HILBORN, voted?

The SPEAKER. He has.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Then I will let my vote stand.

Mr. BROMWELL. I ask that my colleague, Mr. BROWN, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that my colleague, Mr. QUIGG, be excused on account of sickness. He would have voted "aye" if he had been here.

The SPEAKER. The excuse has been granted already.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. OVERSTREET with Mr. MIERS of Indiana.

Mr. SHOWALTER with Mr. NORTON of South Carolina.

Mr. STURTEVANT with Mr. SLAYDEN.

Mr. BELKNAP with Mr. JETT.

Mr. SOUTHWICK with Mr. STRAIT.

Mr. BARRETT with Mr. LENTZ.

Mr. HOOKER with Mr. CATCHINGS.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. BENTON.

Mr. SAUERHERING with Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. QUIGG with Mr. CRANFORD.

Mr. EVANS with Mr. SETTLE.

Mr. SOUTHARD with Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.

Mr. ALDRICH with Mr. ALLEN.

Mr. FOSS with Mr. COOPER of Texas.

Mr. MESICK with Mr. TATE.

Mr. DOVERNER with Mr. SPARKMAN.

Mr. BROSIUS with Mr. ERMENTROUT.

Mr. KULP with Mr. DAVEY.

Mr. FARIS with Mr. PETERS.

Mr. McEWAN with Mr. VEHLAGE.

Mr. DORR with Mr. DRIGGS.

Mr. HOWELL with Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. BRUMM with Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. KNOX with Mr. MCALEER.

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. BENNER of Pennsylvania.

Mr. FOOTE with Mr. ROBB.

Mr. MAHON with Mr. OTEY.

Mr. CORLIES with Mr. TODD.

Mr. ARNOLD with Mr. COX.

Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire with Mr. CARMACK.

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. GAINES.

For this day:

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois with Mr. BENTON.

Mr. WEYMOUTH with Mr. SMITH of Kentucky.

Mr. JOY with Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee.

Mr. HOWE with Mr. ELLIOTT.

Mr. CHICKERING with Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri.

Mr. ACHESON with Mr. KING.

Mr. SPALDING with Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska with Mr. LATIMER.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments in gross to the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House nonconcurred in the amendments of the Senate and agreed to the conference asked for; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. DINGLEY, Mr. PAYNE, and Mr. BAILEY.

CLASSIFICATION OF LETTERS PATENT, ETC.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4168) for revising and perfecting the classification of letters patent and printed publications of the Patent Office.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of determining with more readiness and accuracy the novelty of inventions for which applications for letters patent are or may be filed in the United States Patent Office, and to prevent the issuance of letters patent of the United States for inventions which are not new, the Commissioner of Patents is hereby authorized and directed to revise and perfect the classification, by subjects-matter, of all letters patent and printed publications in the United States Patent Office which constitute the field of search in the examination as to the novelty of invention for which applications for patents are or may be filed.

Sec. 2. That for the purpose of enabling the Commissioner of Patents to carry out the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to appoint from time to time, in the manner already provided for by law, such additional number of principal examiners, assistant examiners, first-class clerks, copyists, laborers, assistant messengers, and messenger boys as he may deem necessary: Provided, however, That the whole number of additional employees shall not exceed 3 principal examiners, 2 first assistant examiners, 2 second assistant examiners, 6 third assistant examiners, 5 fourth assistant examiners, 4 first-class clerks, 4 copyists, 6 laborers, 6 assistant messengers, and 6 messenger boys; that the annual expenses for this additional force shall not exceed the sum of $32,880.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill which has just been read.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HICKS] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following committee amendment—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not offer an amendment.

Mr. HICKS. It is to correct the amount in the bill.

The SPEAKER. No amendment can be offered except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HICKS. Well, I have no doubt the House will agree to my amendments if they can be heard.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. No amendment will be in order until the House has agreed to consider the measure?

The SPEAKER. No amendment will be in order at any time under this motion except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Well, as I understand it, the House has not yet agreed to suspend the rules and consider the bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the rules and pass the bill as presented to the House, and no amendment is in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HICKS. I presented the bill with the amendment. This is the bill that I asked to have read. I will not insist on the amendment, however.

The SPEAKER. Was the bill read with the amendment?

Mr. HICKS. No, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. It was not.

The SPEAKER. Then the question will have to be taken on the bill as it stands, unless the amendment is adopted by unanimous consent.

Mr. HICKS. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read.

Mr. BLAND. I shall object to any amendment at this stage.

Mr. HICKS. The amendment is a reduction of the appropriation. Otherwise there is no change in the bill.

Mr. BLAND. I understood that the amendment increased the appropriation.

Mr. HICKS. It reduces it from $62,000 to $47,000.

Mr. BLAND. Well, I have no objection to that. If that is the only thing in the amendment, I shall not object.

Mr. HICKS. That is all.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment that is offered, and then the Chair will ask for unanimous consent.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 14, page 2, after the word "of," the words "sixty-two" and insert in lieu thereof the words "forty-seven;" and in line 17 strike out "eight" and insert "one."

Mr. DOCKERY. I suppose the gentleman is aiming to get his bill in harmony with the regulations of the Patent Office.

Mr. HICKS. It reduces the amount to $47,180, the actual amount needed; that is all.

Mr. CANNON. Is this a Senate bill?

Mr. HICKS. Yes, sir. It is, however, similar to House bill 7062, except it does not require quite so large a force nor quite so much money.

Mr. CANNON. And the gentleman seeks to pass a Senate bill under suspension.

Mr. STEELE. He seeks to amend the Senate bill by reducing the amount.

Mr. CANNON. I ask if this is a Senate bill that the gentleman is seeking to pass?

Mr. HICKS. It is.

Mr. CANNON. I do not care about the matter being sent to conference. If it passes, it seems to me it had better pass as it is; and if it is defeated, it had better be defeated as it is.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the amendment?

Mr. CANNON. Yes. If this is a House bill, I have no objection to the modification; but if it be a Senate bill, I object.

Mr. HICKS. This is a Senate bill. I merely want to correct the amount stated in it as the appropriation, which in the pending measure is $62,880, when in fact it should be but $47,180.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; it is a Trojan horse, and would go to conference. We will have this bill passed or not passed as it is.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think we had better fight it out right here as it is.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. BLAND. Let us hear what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has to say.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is as to the suspension of the rules and passing the Senate bill as reported to the House. On that question the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HICKS] has thirty minutes, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has thirty minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, it is a well-known fact to every member of this House that has acquainted himself with the business of the Interior Department that the Patent Office is the only branch of that part of the Government that pays its expenses. It has been impossible, Mr. Speaker, for the Patent Office, with the force at command, to keep pace with the increased work of examination of applications and the arrangement, perfection, and classification of the sources of information necessary to determine the originality of alleged inventions. There has been but little, if any, increase in the force of examiners and assistant examiners since 1886. In that year the number was increased to 188. The number now is 200. The number of applications for patents in 1886 was 35,968. The number in 1897 was 35,613.

The number in 1897 was 47,905, an increase of 33 per cent in the work to be done and only 6 per cent of increase in the force to do the work. The consequence is that the Patent Office is over a year behind in the consideration to-day of applications being filed. The increase in the field of search is enormous each year. Since 1883 more than 20,000 patents have been issued by the Government annually. In 1890 the number was 26,000. The pressing need now is for a more perfect arrangement of patents and applications, and references of all kinds, in the Patent Office. The amount paid into the Treasury last year was $252,798.58 over and above all expenses. The small amount asked for of money is but a little over $47,000. The demand is pressing.

I hold in my hand letters from over 100 manufacturers in the country that have asked that this matter be considered and this force be increased. The fact that this is a Senate bill, introduced by Senator PLATT of Connecticut, who has for many years given patent legislation special and personal attention, should so commend itself to this House that this bill should pass without even a division. The distinguished Senator so ably sets forth the reasons for the passage of the bill that I commend the report to be read carefully, after which I am confident the bill must meet with the favor of two-thirds of the members of this House. Hon. C. H. Duell, the Commissioner of Patents, and Hon. C. N. Bliss, Secretary of the Interior, both unite in letters recommending the prompt enactment of the measure. I herewith submit the same and ask that the same be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, March 13, 1898.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Referring to my conversations with you relative to an increased force for this office, I wish to report that Senator O. H. PLATT, at my suggestion, introduced the bill in the form of an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill. I had a hearing before that committee yesterday. Every member of the committee present admitted the urgent necessity for the relief we asked for, but doubted the advisability of putting it into that appropriation. Upon their suggestion Senator PLATT yesterday afternoon introduced the bill as Senate bill 4168.

I wish you would send to Senator O. H. PLATT at the earliest possible moment your approval of the measure. The passage of the bill would without doubt result in the earlier issue of patents and enable a more complete and thorough examination to be made, thereby preventing the issue of many worthless patents. The public would be the gainers by this, and manufacturers and inventors certainly would be greatly assisted and pleased, because they would have their applications passed to issue in better form and at an earlier date.

In 1886 there were 188 examiners in this office, and at the present time there are 200. The number of applications received in 1886 was 35,968; in 1897 the number was 47,905. There was, as you will see, an increase in work of about 33 per cent, while the increase in force is only 6 per cent. Each examiner in 1897 did at least 17 per cent more work than in 1886.

These are a few of the reasons which lead me to ask you to make the endorsement as strong as possible.

I remain, very respectfully, yours,

C. H. DUELL, Commissioner.

Hon. C. N. Bliss,
Secretary of the Interior.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 13, 1898.

SIR: I transmit herewith a copy of a communication of even date from the Commissioner of Patents in relation to Senate bill 4168, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, "for revising and perfecting the classification of letters patent and printed publications in the Patent Office."

This measure was strongly advocated by the late Commissioner, Benjamin Butterworth, and is equally as strongly approved of by the present Commissioner of Patents, Duell.

The condition of the work in the Patent Office is such that relief in some form must be provided. The present force of the examining corps is, I am advised, inadequate to perform the current work of examinations, so that they could hardly be expected, in addition to their regular work, to engage in making classifications of patents and publications of the Patent Office.

In view of the present condition of the finances of the country, I have been loath to recommend appropriations for any material increase in the clerical force of the Department, but in this instance the demand of the public business is such as to warrant me in departing from such rule so far as the Patent Office is concerned. This measure will afford the Patent Office the relief desired, and I urge upon the committee its favorable consideration.

Very respectfully,

C. N. BLISS, Secretary.

Hon. O. H. PLATT,
Chairman Committee on Patents, United States Senate.

Mr. HICKS. No additional argument is needed to prove the necessity for the immediate enactment of this very necessary measure, that will bring relief to hundreds of inventors residing in all parts of the country, who are now justly complaining of the delay attending the proper transaction of their business.

The Committee on Patents, of which I have the honor of being chairman, unanimously agreed that the desired increase of force was needed, and authorized the reporting of the bill. I most earnestly ask that the measure meet with no factions opposition, and that in the interests of the public service we promptly pass the bill. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, my colleague of the committee [Mr. LOVERING].

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, I prefer that the gentlemen on the other side use some of their time before I proceed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I understand that under the procedure of the House the gentleman is unable to offer an amendment cutting down the appropriation, so we must vote on the appropriation that is in the bill.

Mr. HICKS. It calls for an appropriation of $47,180, but by an error in the Senate bill it was made sixty-odd thousand. If we pass the Senate bill, there will not be over $47,180 paid out. Gentlemen need not worry about injustice being done. The Patent Office has been so well and economically managed in the past that no fears need be indulged in that the record of past years will now be departed from.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But we are asked to vote for sixty-odd thousand when only forty-seven thousand is needed.

Mr. HICKS. We shall not expend the $47,180 if it is not needed. The Commissioner of Patents can, I assure the House, be depended upon to do his duty, and will strictly follow the duties imposed upon him by this bill. No good reason can be urged as to why the bill shall not pass.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield twenty minutes to my colleague [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, this is not a proposition to appropriate $62,000 nor $47,000. It is a proposition involving a liability of not less than $325,000. That is the statement of the case, and I can prove it. I regret that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], who had prepared himself fully to expose this bill to the House, is not present, but he is absent to-day by necessity. It is true that the bill as it now stands carries $16,000 in round numbers more than the Patent Office asks for. But this is an annual appropriation only. According to the Deputy Commissioner of Patents, this work will require not less than five years. Sixty-four thousand dollars a year for five years, making a total minimum cost of $320,000.

I desire the members of the House to understand this bill, because this is an "old soldier," as familiar to me as the face of my honored friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. It has been bobbing up here constantly and with unbecoming regularity for the last ten years. It was here pressed by the last Commissioner of Patents. It is here pressed by the present Commissioner of Patents. It has behind it a lobby, and I do not use the term in any offensive sense. It is here backed by every patent attorney in this city. It is a bill the benefit of which primarily is divided equally between the patent attorneys of this city and the inventors. It is not a bill to bring up the business of the Patent Office, and I challenge that statement to the attention of the House.

This bill is to inaugurate a new classification in the Patent Office. From the time the Patent Office was organized until now patents have been issued and classified according to "use." The attorneys now want an additional classification according to "structure," and that is provided for by the first section of this bill. I desire members to understand that this is not a bill to bring up the work of the Patent Office. It is not a bill to carry on the existing classification, but is a bill involving at least an expenditure of $325,000.

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. You say that the new classification will not bring up the business of the Patent Office. How do you know that?

Mr. DOCKERY. I say this is not a bill to bring it up under the existing classification.

Mr. HOPKINS. Can you not facilitate the business of the Patent Office under a new classification and benefit the public at the same time?

Mr. DOCKERY. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. HOPKINS. But we will give you more.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, if I can have an hour—

Mr. HOPKINS. We will give you more time if the gentleman will answer my question.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will ask unanimous consent for forty minutes. This is a very important bill and carries a large appropriation; and I ask unanimous consent that each side have forty minutes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Wait a minute; perhaps we shall not need it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended to forty minutes on a side.

Mr. HOPKINS. One moment, Mr. Speaker; I would like to have the gentleman answer my question first.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do you object?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, I do not; but I want the gentleman to answer my question.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will answer your question.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman will answer my question I do not object.

Mr. BELDEN. I object.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let the gentleman answer my question just the same. I will give him the time.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman has no time to give. He is very generous with something that is not his. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] were here. This is in substance an old provision which has been offered on appropriation bills, and with which the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as well as myself, are familiar. Substantially this work was inaugurated in 1882—not exactly this same work—by an appropriation of $10,000. That legislation authorized an abridgment of patents. The next year $50,000 was appropriated. Then Congress, confronted with the possible liability estimated at from $800,000 to a million under that classification, abandoned it after $50,000 had been expended upon it.

As I have said, this bill does not provide for exactly that classification, but it authorizes a classification according to structure, which will cost, according to testimony, not less than $325,000.

Now, what is the excuse for this proposition? It is said the office desires this new classification to bring up the business; and the excuse is the litigation in the courts arising out of the granting of improper patents. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that every patent of importance—every one that carries any value—goes into the courts for adjudication. I care not how you may classify patents, if a patent is valuable, somebody will be standing around to insist that the patent infringes upon some right of his and ready to institute a lawsuit, so that valuable patents issued by the Government have gone into the courts for adjudication. And they will still go there under this classification; they will continue to go there for all time so long as patents are valuable. There is no escape from it.

All other governments issue patents practically without examination. But these gentlemen, these patent attorneys, who have been swarming around the rooms of the Committee on Appropriations for ten long years—and I do not blame the patent attorneys for this; if I were a patent attorney, I would be in favor of this bill—come here saying that the Patent Office pays a large amount of revenue into the Treasury and therefore the force should be enlarged. Yet during the last ten years we have given that office an increased appropriation of $68,000 in round numbers, and in the present legislative appropriation bill we have embodied an increase of 13 clerks at a cost of about $16,000.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HICKS] makes this plea in favor of the bill. But other governments make no such claim. In England the patentee is required to pay an annuity into the treasury. All the patents there are sources of income to the Government. I have here a list officially prepared of the different governments which thus impose a charge upon patentees so as to assist in maintaining the government.

But the gentleman has said that because the Patent Office has a surplus of income as compared with outlay, therefore we should supply the office with unnecessary force. The argument is misleading and fallacious.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]; but before doing so, I wish to state the case again.

This is not a bill to bring up the back work under the existing classification. It is a bill to provide a new classification. This proposition has been rejected by every House of Representatives for ten long years. It was rejected by the House of Representatives when we had $100,000,000 of surplus in the Treasury. It was rejected by the House of Representatives when there was no necessity for laying additional taxation. It was rejected by the House of Representatives when there was no proposition pending to issue bonds to carry on a war with Spain.

But at the present time, with the war fever rampant against Spain and against the Treasury also, these patent attorneys press this bill for consideration, when we have just now sent to conference a bill that authorizes the issue of $500,000,000 of bonds and $100,000,000 of tax certificates, and which carries perhaps $200,000,000 of direct taxes.

Mr. Speaker, the time may come when it may be wise to institute this new classification, but I suggest to gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber—

Mr. LIVINGSTON. When will that time come?

Mr. DOCKERY. It will not come, my friend, until "this cruel war is over." It will not come while taxes are being levied upon the people—

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What has that to do with it?

Mr. DOCKERY. It has this to do with it, that your people and my people are compelled to pay these taxes, and taxation is being increased in order to carry on the war to successful completion; but I hope we shall not increase taxation for the benefit of inventors and of patent attorneys in the city of Washington. I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri has eleven minutes remaining.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest that the other side occupy some of their time before I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HICKS. I yield three minutes to my friend from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, this is a very plain and practical question. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] has not presented it to the House from the standpoint from which it ought to be presented. He has undertaken to appeal to the prejudices of members by references to the war and to taxation, which have nothing whatever to do with this question. The simple question is this: Is the public served at the present time as it ought to be served by the Patent Office? There is not a man on the floor of this House who has had any connection with the business of that office who will not confess that it is almost impossible to get business attended to there now in due time and with that dispatch to which applicants for patents are entitled.

Mr. DOCKERY. I deny it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Well, I do not care what you deny. I state what is the fact as shown by the records and reports of the Patent Office, as well as certified to by the officials of that office from the highest to the lowest. I know it is so, because I go there from week to week and from month to month endeavoring to get matters affecting my constituents attended to. And the business can not now be done.

Now, the whole practical question is this: Is the public now served in the transaction of the business of that office as it should be served? If not, can the work be properly done with a reasonable outlay of money, which will not fall as a burden upon the shoulders of the taxpayers of the country; for that office during the last year has paid into the Treasury $252,000 more than it costs the Government to run the business. The increase of business in that Department has been 88 per cent (a fact of which the gentleman from Missouri takes no cognizance), while the increase in the force of the Patent Office has been only 6 per cent.

Now, any schoolboy 10 years old can draw from that proposition the deduction that the people—your constituency and mine—can not be properly served in view of that large ratio of increase in the business and the small ratio of increase in the force to attend to the business.

Where does the gentleman from Missouri stand in his denial? He can not deny those facts and figures. I repeat that last year the Patent Office turned into the Treasury of the United States $252,798.50 more than it cost the Government to prosecute all the business in that department. Yet the gentleman talks about the taxation upon the people, when in fact that department of the Government is a source of absolute revenue.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HICKS. I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING], a member of the committee.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, I should be very glad if the gentlemen on the other side would say now all that they have to say on this subject.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask the gentleman whether he intends to use all the remaining time on his side?

Mr. LOVERING. I intend to use it or apportion it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would be glad, then, if the gentleman would apportion a part of his time now.

Mr. LOVERING. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Thirteen minutes and a half.

Mr. LOVERING. Then I will proceed for a few moments.

Mr. Speaker, the necessity for this measure must be obvious to anyone who has given any attention to the subject. For many years I have been doing business with the Patent Office, and I am familiar with its methods. I know also something of the disadvantages under which it is now working. And I tell you, sir, that the patent system of the United States is to-day in danger of breaking down. It is the best patent system known in the world. It has been adopted as a model by the whole world. But, Mr. Speaker, it has come to a point where it is losing much of its usefulness. Any individual carrying on his business on the plan on which the Government is now carrying on the business of the Patent Office would soon fall into the hands of his creditors, and very properly, too. The fact is that the office is overwhelmed, deluged with work.

There can be no doubt of this. There is no need of making any misrepresentation upon this point. It is well known that during the last year there has been an increase of 2,000 applications. There are 14,000 applications waiting to be examined, and the present force is insufficient to do the work. Who suffers by this? What does it mean? It means, in the first place, a loss of revenue to the Government, because for every dollar paid out under this bill two dollars additional will come back, and the revenue for next year will be that much larger than the present revenue.

Mr. HANDY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. LOVERING. Certainly.

Mr. HANDY. Will the clerks provided for by this act be used to transact current business, or will they be used in the work of making a reclassification?

Mr. LOVERING. I want to say upon this point that this matter of classification is misunderstood. There is a classification now. The only trouble is that they are obliged to devote so much time to getting this work out of the way that they can not keep up the work of classification as they ought. It is a classification not only of the patents of this country, but of all the countries of the world; and unless they can have the use of those patents they can not grant a valid patent. And I want to say about these clerks to be employed that this is the only department of the Government to-day in which the clerks are any of them employed overtime. They work up to 5 o'clock every day.

Mr. HANDY. I did not understand the gentleman to tell me whether these additional clerks were to be used in current work or whether they were to be used on a new work—that of entering upon a reclassification.

Mr. LOVERING. The present examiners are used for both.

Mr. HANDY. But these new examiners; how will they be used?

Mr. LOVERING. These clerks will be used for both—for bringing up arrears of work and for making a classification. The work has got to go on together. I would like to have the bill read differently from what it does in this respect, but it will answer every purpose as it is.

Mr. HANDY. The bill itself seems to indicate that the clerks will be put at a new work—at the work of revising for reclassification by subject-matter.

Mr. LOVERING. This is not a new system; and if the gentleman will not interrupt me, I will answer him further on.

Mr. HANDY. I will not, of course, interrupt the gentleman without his consent.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. LOVERING. If the gentleman will please excuse me, my time is exceedingly limited and I have a great deal of ground to go over in a very few minutes. I can not yield.

Mr. DOCKERY. If it is not a new subject-matter, why do you say so in your bill?

Mr. LOVERING. Furthermore, I wish to say that this means a loss to the public. The public is more interested in this than anybody; more, even, than the patentees. Much has been said here about the lawyers of Washington. I never heard of the lawyers of Washington in relation to this matter before to-day.

I have been familiar with the necessity for this bill for years, and this is the first time I have ever heard that there was a lobby in connection with the matter. I have never seen a lobbyist and do not know of one.

Now, it has been said that the Patent Office grants monopolies. Well, suppose it does. What do you want your examiners for? You want the examiners to limit those monopolies as much as possible. It is to guard the public interest quite as much as it is to guard the interests of inventors that this thing is asked for, and I say that while every possible public right should be safeguarded, every possible encouragement should be given to inventors. Our courts are now overcrowded with work that should have been done in the Patent Office before.

A great deal has been said about working this force overtime, making them do more work. Why, Mr. Speaker, they are worked harder than any other people in the service of the United States Government to-day, and they turn in more money to the Treasury than any business department in the service. As has been said, they turned in over $252,000 last year over and above paying for everything in connection with the work. The Patent Office has in the United States Treasury to-day $5,000,000, which has been paid in since 1836, over and above all the expenses of the office. Then, more than all that, they have paid for building that part of the Patent Office which they occupy themselves.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. CANNON. And how much on the other side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Seven and a half on the other side.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I will only use a part of the nine minutes, and I do ask for attention for three or four minutes.

I am proud of the Patent Office of the United States. I want it to be efficient. It is not to me a question of expenditure, provided it is a necessary expenditure and a proper expenditure at this time.

Now, I want to be entirely frank with the House, and to say that I am not a patent expert; but, in my judgment, this enactment should not be made at this time for the following reasons:

First, the legislative bill for the coming year, prepared by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], substantially makes an increase of clerical force of $16,000 in the Patent Office. Now, if you pass this bill, you have no place to put these additional employees unless you lease additional buildings. Now, it is not proper to do that, because, knowing of this crowded condition in the Patent Office, we have, under the lead of the Committee on Appropriations, legislated to put the Post-Office Department in the new building on the Avenue, and by the 1st of December the Land Office will go out of the Interior Department, and that room will be turned over to the Patent Office.

Then for the first time you would have room for this increase of force if it is wise to make it. They are now crowded in there almost like rabbits in a burrow, and this is totally unavailable unless you go outside and rent additional buildings, which is not an apt thing to do, and furnish them for the period between now and December. Now, so much for that.

Some gentlemen say that great revenues are derived from the Patent Office. Why, when somebody wants to appropriate something for New York, they say all the revenues are collected from New York. And so on. There is nothing in that argument one way or the other. If there was not one cent of revenue from the Patent Office it is entitled to be properly maintained, and it is not entitled to be more than properly maintained.

Now, I was interested in the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING], who said that we have the best patent system on earth. Well, I am glad to know that, and I think the gentleman has much of knowledge about it; but what does this bill do? Does it bring up the work? I think not. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], from the great manufacturing city of Philadelphia, says not, in my conversations with him. But it authorizes and directs these employees to revise and perfect the classification by subjects-matter. As the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] says, since the foundation of the Patent Office it has been by use. It is a long work. Whether it ought to be entered on, whether we have room or not, I do not know. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] says no, in his judgment. If it is necessary to enter upon it, let me say to the House that it is entirely competent to do so upon any legislative appropriation bill that we annually pass.

Now, for these reasons, and others that I have not time to state, without reference to whether this classification would be wise or not, it is not wise to enter upon this work until the Land Office gets out of the Interior Department into the old Post-Office building on the 1st of December next, at which time, when there will be more room for the Patent Office, we can take this matter up and act intelligently.

Mr. MAHANY. Will the gentleman permit a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. CANNON. All right.

Mr. MAHANY. Suppose we secure the room by December next, as the gentleman suggests, how will we have the force of clerks to occupy it unless we provide for them now?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, you can provide for it on any regular appropriation bill.

Mr. MAHANY. The gentleman knows that in all human probability that will not be done until next year.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, the next Congress meets in December.

Mr. MAHANY. Oh, no; this Congress meets in December.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, this Congress meets in December. There is no trouble about it. The truth of the matter is, I do not know where, but somewhere or other, this matter is being very industriously worked. I can always tell when a thing is being worked. [Laughter.]

I get letters from Illinois, letters from Minnesota and California, all just alike; generally the circular letters that were sent out, sometimes with the coupons torn off and sometimes not; and they call that public sentiment. I think if our friends in the Patent Office, or whoever is interested in this matter, will let us alone that we will properly care for this service with the aid of the Committee on Patents of the House and under the leadership of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] who I am exceedingly sorry is not here to-day.

Mr. LOVE. What does the bill call for—what amount?

Mr. CANNON. The bill calls for $64,000, but here is what I object to in the bill, as we have not room to put them in now: This force is authorized and directed to revise and perfect the classification by subjects-matter, a long work. It has heretofore been by use. It is not to bring up work, as shown on the face of the bill. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING] is candid enough to say that he wishes he could change this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am glad the gentleman has made that clear. Some gentlemen seem to misunderstand it. They think the object of the bill is to bring up the work. I am glad the gentleman is stating the truth.

Mr. CANNON. The bill speaks for itself.

Mr. DOCKERY. The bill shows that it is not to bring up the work under the existing classification.

Mr. CANNON. I yield back my time to the gentleman.

Mr. DOCKERY. How much time remains on this side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri has three minutes remaining.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope gentlemen on the other side will use some of their time.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says this is an old bill, and he says he has been worked from time to time. I do not know who has worked the gentleman. Certainly no one has tried to work me, and my purpose is perfectly honest and businesslike in the matter. Commissioner Butterworth proposed this legislation a year ago, and it was his purpose to bring up the work of classification, which we are already doing, and to bring up the work of examination at the same time. It all goes together; it is a part of the same thing. It is of no use to try to separate it and misconstrue the purpose of the bill.

As for our having room, it is well known that there is room enough in another building which is not occupied, on G street in this city, belonging to the Government, where fifty additional examiners and clerks can be employed. And aside from that, now is the time to be doing this work, when we are about to move to our new quarters. Everyone will agree that it can be done both the tabulating and classifying, and better done, at such time than at any other, and everyone who knows anything about the work knows that it should be done at the earliest possible moment.

I want to say one other thing. A poor man can not to-day take out a patent and hold it. For what reason? Because it takes so long a time to have his claims examined and passed upon that he has to compromise his interests with some capitalist by either selling out or giving a part to him before he can take out his patent. There are a good many cases that I could give as illustrations if I had the time. A great many patents, if they can not be taken out at once and exploited within three or four months, become worthless. As to the expense incurred by this bill being $330,000, it is too absurd. It is as absurd as it would be to multiply the salaries of the members of the House by 5 and say that is what it costs to run the Government.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me a question right there?

Mr. LOVERING. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is it not true that it takes twelve to fifteen months to procure a patent unless some member of Congress goes there and gets it made a special case, and by that means delays ten or twelve others?

Mr. LOVERING. Yes; sometimes two years.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is it not true that if this appropriation is made it will bring up the work and the classification at the same time?

Mr. LOVERING. Yes; that is what I have said.

Mr. HITT. Is this a report by all of the committee?

Mr. LOVERING. It is; and the bill was passed by the Senate, and it was recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Patents and by everybody else who has had anything to do with patents. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Four minutes.

Mr. LOVERING. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I do not profess to be an expert in this matter, but when I heard the bill read I saw there was an increase of officers to the number of about forty, and an appropriation of about $60,000. I do not believe that we ought, under the circumstances, to largely increase this force, so that it will require the present appropriation of $60,000; and what the future may bring forth no one can tell. How long this special organization shall exist we are not informed; whether the work is to be completed in twelve months or twelve years is not stated. When a force of this kind is once created, it is very difficult to get rid of it.

This morning we sent to conference a bill largely increasing the taxation of the people of this country, carrying $300,000,000 of interest-bearing bonds for the purpose of procuring revenue, not only to carry on the war, but to pay the ordinary expenditures of the Government. I think these conditions behoove this House to be careful in what manner the expenditures of this Government are increased. We are in no condition now to enter upon new schemes of appropriation. The whole effort of Congress ought to be to retrench, reform, and revise the expenditures wherever it can be done, and certainly this proposition can wait. Since the gentleman from Illinois has informed us that it can not properly be performed without increasing or procuring new quarters and increased additional expenditure for rent, why not permit it to wait a few months? Why enter upon this expenditure at this time when it is not an emergency, when we are demanding appropriations here every day on the score of emergency. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the bill will be defeated.

Mr. LOVERING. I now yield, Mr. Speaker, two minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, it is always easy to raise objections to any measure that you do not want to pass. This bill ought to pass. I say that without a very clear or definite knowledge as to the precise terms of the bill. Why do I say it? For this reason: The State of Connecticut is more interested in patents, in proportion to its population, than any other State in the Union. For that reason it has had as chairman of the Committee on Patents in the Senate a Senator from Connecticut. This bill was prepared by Senator PLATT of Connecticut with his full knowledge of the work and necessities of the Patent Office. I have that confidence in him, in his integrity, his economical ideas, his knowledge of the work of the Patent Office, that induces me to vote for this bill as it stands; and I shall do so. [Applause.]

Mr. LOVERING. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to put the Patent Office in a condition so that the business there will be expedited, so that the applicants for patents may have their applications examined into and passed upon while there is some use for them. It is asked by the Bureau which for years and years have turned a surplus annually into the Treasury of more than a half million dollars. It is no raid upon the Treasury, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] would indicate, but it is rather a proposition which will cost directly a small increase of the appropriation, or rather lessen the surplus turned into the Treasury by the office, but which will in the end increase the revenue, because in the expenditure of this appropriation more patents will be granted and larger fees will be received.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have a case in point illustrating the results to be obtained by a rearrangement of the records of the Government. Down in the War Department is a bureau known as the Record and Pension Division. Gentlemen will remember that but a dozen years ago or less it required from six months to a year to obtain an answer in reference to the record of a soldier of the Revolutionary war or any other of our wars. We made provision for the reclassification of the records of that Bureau, and as a result to-day we have this fact, that instead of waiting from six months to a year to get an answer to an inquiry in reference to the record of any soldier, we invariably get that answer within twenty-four hours.

And, Mr. Speaker, while such is the promptitude with which answers are received, while such is the expedition of business there, it is also a fact that this improvement has been accomplished with an enormous saving to the Government. I have here a letter from Colonel Ainsworth, the chief of that division, in which he says that by the rearrangement of those records it is not only possible for him to make replies at once satisfactory and full, but that there has been a saving to the Government this year of $425,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. I know the gentleman from New York would not do injustice to the House by making anything except an accurate statement—

The SPEAKER. The time for debate has expired.

The question being taken on suspending the rules and passing the bill, there were on a division—ayes 99, noes 51; less than two-thirds voting in the affirmative.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 154, nays 58, answered "present" 9, not voting 138; as follows:

YEAS—154.

Alexander,	Davison, Ky.	Linney,	Russell,
Babcock,	De Vries,	Littauer,	Shannon,
Baker, Md.	Dolliver,	Livingston,	Shattuc,
Ball,	Driggs,	Lovering,	Shelden,
Bankhead,	Ellis,	Lybrand,	Sherman,
Barney,	Fleming,	McAlear,	Skinner,
Barrows,	Fowler, N. J.	McCall,	Smith, Ill.
Bartholdt,	Gibson,	McCleary,	Smith, S. W.
Bartlett,	Gillet, N. Y.	McCulloch,	Snover,
Belden,	Gillett, Mass.	McDonald,	Sperry,
Belford,	Graff,	McIntire,	Stark,
Benner, Pa.	Griffin,	Maddox,	Steele,
Booze,	Grosvenor,	Maguire,	Stevens, Minn.
Boutelle, Me.	Hager,	Mahany,	Stewart, N. J.
Brenner, Ohio	Harmer,	Marshall,	Stewart, Wis.
Brewster,	Hawley,	Maxwell,	Sulloway
Broderick,	Heatwole,	Mercer,	Sulzer,
Bromwell,	Henderson,	Meyer, La.	Sutherland,
Brownlow,	Henry, Conn.	Miller,	Swanson,
Brucker,	Hepburn,	Mills,	Tawney,
Burlingame,	Hicks,	Moody,	Taylor, Ohio
Burton,	Hilborn,	Morris,	Taylor, Ala.
Capron,	Hill,	Mudd,	Tongue,
Clardy,	Hinrichsen,	Northway,	Updegraff,
Clark, Iowa	Hitt,	Norton, Ohio	Van Voorhis,
Clark, Mo.	Hopkins,	Olmsted,	Wadsworth,
Cochrane, N. Y.	Hunter,	Otjen,	Walker, Va.
Coddling,	Hurley,	Parker, N. J.	Ward,
Connell,	Jenkins,	Payne,	Warner,
Cooper, Wis.	Johnson, N. Dak.	Pearce, Mo.	Weaver,
Cousins,	Jones, Wash.	Pearson,	Weymouth,
Crump,	Kerr,	Perkins,	White, Ill.
Cummings,	Ketcham,	Pittman,	White, N. C.
Curtis, Iowa	Kirkpatrick,	Powers,	Wise,
Curtis, Kans.	Knox,	Prince,	Yost,
Dalzell,	Lacey,	Pugh,	Young,
Danford,	Lester,	Ray,	Zenor.
Davenport,	Lewis, Ga.	Reeves,
Davidson, Wis.	Lewis, Wash.	Royce,

NAYS—58.

Baker, Ill.	Dockery,	Knowles,	Shuford,
Bland,	Fox,	Lanham,	Simpson,
Botkin,	Greene,	Lloyd,	Sims,
Brantley,	Griffith,	Love,	Slayden,
Brundidge,	Grow,	McDowell,	Stephens, Tex.
Burke,	Handy,	McMillin,	Stokes,
Cannon,	Hay,	Meekison,	Strowd, N. C.
Castle,	Hemenway,	Moon,	Terry,
Clayton,	Henry, Ind.	Osborne,	Vandiver,
Connolly,	Henry, Miss.	Rhea,	Vincent,
Cooney,	Howard, Ga.	Richardson,	Wheeler, Ky.
Cowherd,	Jones, Va.	Ridgely,	Williams, Miss.
Crumpacker,	Kelley,	Rixey,	Wilson.
De Armond,	Kitchin,	Robinson, Ind.
De Graffenreid,	Kieberg,	Sayers,

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—9.

Adamson,	Gaines,	McClellan,	Otey,
Carmack,	Griggs,	Norton, S. C.	Settle.
Dinsmore,

NOT VOTING—133.

Acheson,	Barrett,	Boutell, Ill.	Catchings,
Adams,	Beach,	Bradley,	Chickering,
Aldrich,	Belknap,	Brewer,	Clarke, N. H.
Allen,	Bell,	Brosius,	Cochran, Mo.
Arnold,	Bennett,	Broussard,	Colson,
Bailey,	Benton,	Brown,	Cooper, Tex.
Baird,	Berry,	Brumm,	Corlies,
Barber,	Bingham,	Bull,	Cox,
Barham,	Bishop,	Butler,	Cranford,
Barlow,	Bodine,	Campbell,	Davey,

Davis,	Hooker,	Mann,	Southwick,
Dayton,	Howard, Ala.	Marsh,	Spalding,
Dingley,	Howe,	Martin,	Sparkman,
Dorr,	Howell,	Mesick,	Sprague,
Dovener,	Hull,	Miers, Ind.	Stallings,
Eddy,	Jett,	Minor,	Stone, C. W.
Elliott,	Johnson, Ind.	Mitchell,	Stone, W. A.
Ermentrout,	Joy,	Newlands,	Strait,
Evans,	King,	Odell,	Strode, Nebr.
Faris,	Kulp,	Ogden,	Sturtevant,
Fenton,	Lamb,	Overstreet,	Talbert,
Fischer,	Landis,	Packer, Pa.	Tate,
Fitzgerald,	Latimer,	Peters,	Thorp,
Fitzpatrick,	Lawrence,	Pierce, Tenn.	Todd,
Fletcher,	Lentz,	Quigg,	Underwood,
Foote,	Little,	Robb,	Vehalaga,
Foss,	Lorimer,	Robbins,	Walker, Mass.
Fowler, N. C.	Loud,	Robertson, La.	Wanger,
Gardner,	Loudenslager,	Sauerharing,	Wheeler, Ala.
Grout,	Low,	Shafroth,	Wilber,
Gunn,	McCormick,	Showalter,	Williams, Pa.
Hamilton,	McKean,	Smith, Ky.
Hartman,	McRae,	Smith, Wm. Alden
Henry, Tex.	Mahon,	Southard,

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois with Mr. GRIGGS.

Mr. MANN with Mr. JETT.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE with Mr. MCCLELLAN.

Mr. WANGER with Mr. ADAMSON.

For this day:

Mr. HAMILTON with Mr. BRADLEY.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

Mr. DINGLEY with Mr. BAILEY.

On this vote:

Mr. FLETCHER with Mr. LOW.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. As he is absent, I withdraw my vote, and wish to be recorded "present."

Mr. GRIGGS. I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. BOUTELL. I desire to withdraw my vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was rejected.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 448) granting to the Kettle River Valley Railway Company a right of way through the north half of the Colville Indian Reservation in the State of Washington.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, granted to the Kettle River Valley Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, a right of way for a railroad, to the extent of 100 feet on each side of the center line thereof, across the said north half of the said Colville Indian Reservation, and also a right of way to the extent of 100 feet on each side of the center line of any branches of said line, commencing at a point on the line of the Spokane Falls and Northern Railway, in Stevens County, Wash., crossing the Columbia River, and running thence westerly and northwesterly by the most feasible route through the north half of said reservation, said line or branches to connect at one or more points on the international boundary line with any road organized under the laws of the Dominion of Canada or Province of British Columbia, together with all the rights granted to railroads by the act of Congress entitled "An act granting to railroads a right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875. And for the purpose of this grant and the construction of said railway all the provisions of said act are hereby declared to be applicable thereto to the same extent as though the lands in said reservation were open to settlement and sale.

SEC. 2. That any damages or injuries occasioned to private property, whether the same be a vested or inchoate right to the property injured, whether the same belong to a white man or an Indian, shall be ascertained, and compensation made therefor in accordance with the laws of Washington relating to the exercise of eminent domain or the taking of private property for public use.

The SPEAKER. Is the motion to suspend the rules seconded?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to which there can be no reasonable objection. It simply grants a right of way (which it is more than probable might be secured as the result of a lawsuit) through a portion of what used to be the Colville Indian Reservation. The north half of that reservation, so called, was restored to the public domain by an act of July 2, 1892, for all purposes excepting that until the President issued a proclamation no white man might take up a farm there under the homestead act. But as the administrative officers of the Government have questioned whether that land was restored to the public domain to such an extent that a railroad might be constructed through there without the assent of Congress, I ask that this bill be passed. The construction of this railroad can not injuriously affect any part of the Union and is of vital importance to all the Pacific Northwest.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. And it carries no appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No appropriation whatever.

Mr. HANDY. I notice by this bill that all the rights granted to railroads by the act of Congress entitled "An act granting to railroads a right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875, are given to this railroad.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes, sir.

Mr. HANDY. Will the gentleman please explain what the rights thus granted to this railroad are?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They are the rights granted under the general law, authorizing any railroad company to construct its line through any part of the public domain; authorizing the road to take a certain width of land, to construct turn-outs, bridges, depots, and things of that sort.

Mr. HANDY. How much land would be granted for such purposes?

Mr. JONES of Washington. One hundred feet on each side of the center line of the right of way.

Mr. HANDY. And nothing in addition?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Nothing in addition.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill, it was decided in the affirmative, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ELECTION CONTEST—FIRST DISTRICT OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. OLMSTED. I am directed by the Committee on Elections No. 2 to present a report in the contested-election case of Joseph Gazin vs. Adolph Meyer, from the First Congressional district of Louisiana.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire immediate action upon this report?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes, sir; and also upon another which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The one just presented must be first disposed of. The Clerk will read the resolution reported by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Joseph Gazin was not elected to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the First Congressional district of the State of Louisiana, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. OLMSTED, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. OLMSTED. Now, Mr. Speaker, I present two other resolutions in the contested-election case of Armand Romain vs. Adolph Meyer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], from the same committee, presents the following resolutions which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Armand Romain was not elected to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the First Congressional district of the State of Louisiana, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That Adolph Meyer was elected to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the First Congressional district of the State of Louisiana, and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to.

On motion of Mr. OLMSTED, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AGREEMENT WITH THE SEMINOLE INDIANS.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 3596) to ratify the agreement between the Dawes Commission and the Seminole Nation of Indians.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas an agreement was made by Henry L. Dawes, Tams Bixby, Frank C. Armstrong, Archibald S. McKennon, Thomas B. Needles, the commission of the United States to the Five Civilized Tribes, and Allison L. Aylesworth, secretary, John F. Brown, Okchan Harjo, William Cully, K. N. Kinkehee, Thomas West, Thomas Factor, Seminole commission, A. J. Brown, secretary, on the part of the Seminole Nation of Indians on December 16, 1897, as follows:

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES COMMISSIONERS TO NEGOTIATE WITH THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES AND THE COMMISSIONERS ON THE PART OF THE SEMINOLE NATION.

This agreement by and between the Government of the United States of the first part, entered into in its behalf by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, Henry L. Dawes, Tams Bixby, Frank C. Armstrong, Archibald S. McKennon, and Thomas B. Needles, duly appointed and authorized thereunto, and the government of the Seminole Nation in Indian Territory, of the second part, entered into on behalf of said government by its commission, duly appointed and authorized thereunto, viz, John F. Brown, Okchan Harjo, William Cully, K. N. Kinkehee, Thomas West, and Thomas Factor;

Witnesseth, That in consideration of the mutual undertakings herein contained, it is agreed as follows:

All lands belonging to the Seminole tribe of Indians shall be divided into three classes, designated as first, second, and third class; the first class to be appraised at $5, the second class at $2.50, and the third class at $1.25 per acre, and the same shall be divided among the members of the tribe so that each shall have an equal share thereof in value, so far as may be, the location and fertility of the soil considered; giving to each the right to select his allotment so as to include any improvements thereon, owned by him at the time; and each allottee shall have the sole right of occupancy of the land so allotted to him, during the existence of the present tribal government, and until the members of said tribe shall have become citizens of the United States. Such allotments shall be made under the direction and supervision of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes in connection with a representative appointed by the tribal government; and the chairman of said commission shall execute and deliver to each allottee a certificate describing therein the land allotted to him.

All contracts for sale, disposition, or encumbrance of any part of any allotment made prior to date of patent shall be void.

Any allottee may lease his allotment for any period not exceeding six years, the contract therefor to be executed in triplicate upon printed blanks provided by the tribal government, and before the same shall become effective it shall be approved by the principal chief and a copy filed in the office of the clerk of the United States court at Wewoka.

No lease of any coal, mineral, coal oil, or natural gas within said nation shall be valid unless made with the tribal government, by and with the consent of the allottee and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Should there be discovered on any allotment any coal, mineral, coal oil, or natural gas, and the same should be operated so as to produce royalty, one-half of such royalty shall be paid to such allottee and the remaining half into the tribal treasury until extinguishment of tribal government, and the latter shall be used for the purpose of equalizing the value of allotments; and if the same be insufficient therefor, any other funds belonging to the tribe, upon extinguishment of tribal government, may be used for such purpose, so that each allotment may be made equal in value as aforesaid.

The town site of Wewoka shall be controlled and disposed of according to the provisions of an act of the general council of the Seminole Nation, approved April 23, 1897, relative thereto; and on extinguishment of the tribal government, deeds of conveyance shall issue to owners of lots as herein provided for allottees; and all lots remaining unsold at that time may be sold in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Five hundred thousand dollars of the funds belonging to the Seminoles, now held by the United States, shall be set apart as a permanent school fund for the education of children of the members of said tribe, and shall be held by the United States at 5 per cent interest, or invested so as to produce such amount of interest, which shall be, after extinguishment of tribal government, applied by the Secretary of the Interior to the support of Mekasuky and Emahaka academies and the district schools of the Seminole people; and there shall be selected and excepted from allotment 330 acres of land for each of said academies and 30 acres each for eight district schools in the Seminole country.

There shall also be excepted from allotment one-half acre for the use and occupancy of each of twenty-four churches, including those already existing and such others as may hereafter be established in the Seminole country, by and with consent of the general council of the nation; but should any part of same, at any time, cease to be used for church purposes, such part shall at once revert to the Seminole people and be added to the lands set apart for the use of said district schools.

One acre in each township shall be excepted from allotment and the same may be purchased by the United States upon which to establish schools for the education of children of noncitizens when deemed expedient.

When the tribal government shall cease to exist the principal chief last elected by said tribe shall execute, under his hand and the seal of the nation, and deliver to each allottee a deed conveying to him all the right, title, and interest of the said nation and the members thereof in and to the lands so allotted to him, and the Secretary of the Interior shall approve such deed, and the same shall thereupon operate as relinquishment of the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the land embraced in said conveyance, and as a guarantee by the United States of the title of said lands to the allottee; and the acceptance of such deed by the allottee shall be a relinquishment of his title to an interest in all other lands belonging to the tribe, except such as may have been excepted from allotment and held in common for other purposes. Each allottee shall designate one tract of 40 acres, which shall, by the terms of the deed, be made inalienable and nontaxable as a homestead in perpetuity.

All moneys belonging to the Seminoles remaining after equalizing the value of allotments as herein provided and reserving said sum of $500,000 for school fund shall be paid per capita to the members of said tribe in three equal installments, the first to be made as soon as convenient after allotment and extinguishment of tribal government, and the others at one and two years, respectively. Such payments shall be made by a person appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, who shall prescribe the amount of and approve the bond to be given by such person; and strict account shall be given to the Secretary of the Interior for such disbursements.

The loyal Seminole claim shall be submitted to the United States Senate, which shall make final determination of same, and, if sustained, shall provide for payment thereof within two years from date hereof.

There shall hereafter be held at the town of Wewoka, the present capital of the Seminole Nation, regular terms of the United States courts at other points in the judicial district of which the Seminole Nation is a part.

The United States agrees to maintain strict laws in the Seminole country against the introduction, sale, barter, or giving away of intoxicants of any kind or quality.

This agreement shall in no wise affect the provisions of existing treaties between the Seminole Nation and the United States, except in so far as it is inconsistent therewith.

The United States courts now existing, or that may hereafter be created, in Indian Territory shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all controversies growing out of the title, ownership, occupation, or use of real estate owned by the Seminoles, and to try all persons charged with homicide, embezzlement, bribery, and embracery hereafter committed in the Seminole country, without reference to race or citizenship of the persons charged with such crime; and any citizen or officer of said nation charged with any such crime, if convicted, shall be punished as if he were a citizen or officer of the United States, and the courts of said nation shall retain all the jurisdiction which they now have, except as herein transferred to the courts of the United States.

When this agreement is ratified by the Seminole Nation and the United States the same shall serve to repeal all the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 7, 1897, in any manner affecting the proceedings of the general council of the Seminole Nation.

It being known that the Seminole Reservation is insufficient for allotments for the use of the Seminole people, upon which they, as citizens, holding in severally, may reasonably and adequately maintain their families, the United States will make effort to purchase from the Creek Nation, at $1.25 per acre, 200,000 acres of land, immediately adjoining the eastern boundary of the Seminole Reservation and lying between the North Fork and South Fork of the Canadian River, in trust for and to be conveyed by proper patent by the United States to the Seminole Indians, upon said sum of $1.25 per acre being reimbursed to the United States by said Seminole Indians; the same to be allotted as herein provided for lands now owned by the Seminoles.

This agreement shall be binding on the United States when ratified by Congress and on the Seminole people when ratified by the general council of the Seminole Nation.

In witness whereof the said commissioners have hereunto affixed their names at Muskogee, Ind. T., this 16th day of December, A. D. 1897.

HENRY L. DAWES,
TAMM BIXBY,
FRANK C. ARMSTRONG,
ARCHIBALD S. MCKENNON,
THOMAS B. NEEDLES,
Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes.
ALLISON L. AYLESWORTH,
Secretary.

JOHN F. BROWN,
OKCHAH HARJO,
WILLIAM CULLY,
K. N. KINKEHEE,
THOMAS WEST,
THOMAS FACTOR,
Seminole Commission.
A. J. BROWN, Secretary.

Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc. That the same be, and is hereby, ratified and confirmed, and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent therewith are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LITTLE. I demand a second, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas demands a second, and asks unanimous consent that it be considered as ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. LITTLE. No.

Mr. CANNON. Somebody ought to demand a second who at least wants to inquire about it to see whether the bill ought to pass.

Mr. LITTLE. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] shall demand it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, then, demands a second.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that the second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Illinois to twenty minutes.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this is an act to ratify the agreement made by the Dawes Commission with the Seminole tribe of Indians. As this House knows, the Dawes Commission has been in existence for about five years. That commission entered into an agreement with the Creeks, which was not accepted. They entered into a treaty with the Chickasaws and Choctaws which was rejected by the Chickasaw Nation. The Cherokees refused to treat with them. The Seminoles entered into this agreement, which has been ratified by the tribe. There are 2,739 Seminoles. They own 375,000 acres of land.

They have in the United States Treasury $2,070,000 in money to their credit. This agreement provides that the lands of the Seminoles shall be divided into three classes, which shall be appraised at $5, $3.50, and $1.25 per acre, to be divided among the members of the tribe, each to have an equal share in value. The allottees are given the right to occupy the land during the existence of the tribal government.

There is a prohibition against the sale or contract for sale of any part of the land prior to the issuance of patents, but an allottee may lease his allotment for a term not exceeding six years. Mineral lands can not be leased without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. There is one town in the nation, and lots in that town are to be disposed of under the town-site law, enacted by the general council of the Seminole Nation, approved April 23, 1897. The sum of $500,000 of their funds is to be set aside as a permanent school fund for the education of the children of the members of the tribe. There are twenty-four churches in the nation, and one-half acre is set aside for each.

There are 28 district schools, and the 80 acres are set aside for each. There are 2 academies, which will receive 320 acres each. One acre in each township is excepted from allotment for school purposes, which may be bought by the United States for the purpose of establishing schools for noncitizens of the tribe. When the tribal government ceases, deeds are to be given to each member of the tribe for 40 acres for a homestead, which shall be inalienable and nontaxable. The money of the tribe is to be distributed among its members in three equal installments, the first as soon as allotments are made and the tribal government is extinguished and the others in one and two years.

The loyal Seminole claim, which amounts to $163,888.95, is to be submitted to the Senate of the United States for final determination. Regular terms of the United States court are to be held at Wewoka, and the United States is to strictly enforce the laws against the introduction of intoxicating liquors into the country. The United States courts are given exclusive jurisdiction in certain cases, which are described on page 6 of the bill. The law of 1897, which took away the jurisdiction of the Indian courts and certain rights of the general council of the Seminole Nation, is repealed, and this law is to take its place. The United States agrees to make an effort to buy 200,000 acres of land from the Creek Indians at $1.25 an acre, but the same is to be paid for out of the money of the Seminole tribe of Indians.

It seemed to your committee that after having paid out from thirty to forty thousand dollars a year for the Dawes Commission, and that commission having entered into this agreement, and it being the only one that had been ratified by the tribe, that it was the duty of your committee, there being no serious objection, to report it and ask for its ratification.

That is all I desire to say on the bill, unless some gentleman desires to ask some questions about it, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CANNON. I should be glad to ask the gentleman a question or two. I do not know whether I am for his bill or not. I have never read this agreement until this minute, following the Clerk as he read it. I notice that it is provided that the loyal Seminole claim shall be submitted to the United States Senate, which shall make final determination of the same, and, if sustained, shall provide for the payment thereof within two years from date hereof.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. That ought to be "thereof."

Mr. CANNON. "Thereof" or "hereof," whichever it is. That seems to make the Senate a board of arbitrators to pass upon this claim. Now, does not the gentleman think that this agreement ought to be modified? Should there not be some legislation to limit that claim?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I will say to the gentleman that it was the opinion of the subcommittee having charge of this bill, a subcommittee composed of three members of the Senate and five members of the House, that the claim should be referred to a joint committee of the House and Senate, but that provision was at last stricken out and not agreed to by the House committee; but in the passage of this bill by the Senate the clause was left as agreed to between the Dawes Commission and the Seminole tribe of Indians.

The loyal Seminole claim is based upon the fourth article of the treaty of March 21, 1866. There was a commission appointed to investigate it. They investigated and reported on this claim, and $50,000 of it was paid. That leaves a balance of $163,888.95.

Mr. CANNON. Does not my friend think there ought to be some guard placed upon that matter? I am not familiar with it, but what is there to prevent the claim being presented before the Senate alone and established for one million or two million dollars or any other sum?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. The loyal Seminole claim is known, and the amount of it is known. It is a matter of record. It has been passed upon. There has been a finding, and part of it has been paid, as shown by a letter I have from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which is as follows:

WASHINGTON, April 13, 1898.

SIR: In compliance with your request of the 11th instant to be furnished with a statement of the amount of awards made to loyal Seminoles on account of losses sustained during the war of the rebellion, in accordance with the fourth article of the treaty of March 21, 1866, showing also balance due on such account after the payment of $50,000 made thereon, as provided also by the treaty above referred to, I have to state that the aggregate of claims filed with the commission amounted to $216,351.20. The amount allowed on said claims was $213,888.95 and the amount paid thereon was $50,000, leaving an unpaid balance of $163,888.95.

Very respectfully,

W. A. JONES, Commissioner.

It was my judgment that both the House and Senate should pass upon this claim, but the importance of getting this measure through at this time was so great that, so far as I was concerned, I was perfectly willing to waive that judgment.

Mr. CANNON. Does not the gentleman think that the bill might be amended so as to limit the amount?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend would put in an amendment so that it would read "not exceeding $167,000," I should be very glad, and should feel very much safer.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that that section be amended so as to read:

That the loyal Seminole claim, not to exceed $163,888.95, shall be submitted to the United States Senate, which shall make final determination of the same, etc.

That is the amount reported by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as the balance unpaid upon this claim.

Mr. CANNON. Fifty thousand dollars of that has been paid. Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. No; the aggregate of claims filed with the commission amounted to $216,351.20. The amount allowed was $213,888.95. The amount paid was $50,000.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will modify his motion in that respect, I shall be very glad.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that that amendment be inserted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] asks unanimous consent to modify his proposition. The gentleman had better reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. CANNON. While the amendment is being prepared let me ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. How much do I understand is held in the Treasury as a trust fund for the Seminoles?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Two million and seventy thousand dollars.

Mr. CANNON. Now, $500,000 of that is to be retained, as I understand?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Retained as a permanent school fund.

Mr. CANNON. And the balance of it is to be paid out and divided among these Indians?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. After the allotments are made and the tribal government is extinguished, it is to be divided and paid out among the members of the tribe per capita.

Mr. CANNON. Then it is something of a bid to the Indians to discontinue the tribal government, or are they compelled to discontinue their tribal government by this agreement?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I think not. The Seminole tribe entered into this agreement, and the Dawes Commission had less trouble with it than any other of the Five Tribes, and it has been ratified by the tribe.

Mr. CANNON. When do they disband the tribal relations?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. As soon as the allotments are made.

Mr. CANNON. It depends on the Indians?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. This would be an incentive for them to do away with the tribal relations?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. They are drawing 5 per cent interest on the fund, and have been for years, and have not been over anxious to have it paid.

Mr. CANNON. On page 6, and at the top of page 7, it seems that the United States binds itself to purchase from the Creek Nation 200,000 acres at $1.25 an acre for the Seminoles, which is to be reimbursed to the United States by said Seminole Indians.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. To be paid for out of the money in the Treasury. The United States simply agrees to make an effort to purchase that number of acres from the Creek Indians, and when purchased is to be paid for out of the money of the Seminoles now in the Treasury.

Mr. CANNON. I wish my friend would amend his bill to make it so provide. It says that the United States are to be reimbursed by the Seminole Indians. Now, the other provision that this trust fund is to be paid to them per capita seems to conflict with what my friend now says.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is nothing in that.

Mr. CANNON. If there is nothing in it, I do not want it modified.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. It was and is the intention that the land be paid for out of the trust fund now in the Treasury, but as far as I am concerned, I am willing to have the agreement amended, so there can be no question about it.

Mr. CANNON. All I want is to render it certain. Now, my friend provides in the bill that 40 acres allotted to each Indian shall be held as an allotment in perpetuity, inalienable and non-taxable. Does that take pretty much all the land on the reservation?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. They have 375,000 acres, and the purchase of 200,000 more makes about 575,000 acres of land. It will take about 100,000 acres of land to allot them 40 acres each.

Mr. CANNON. The burden of the government is to be thrown upon—

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. About 470,000 acres of land. But the gentleman should remember that in the original treaty with this nation it is agreed that these lands shall be their permanent home.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask my friend a little further. On page 6, what is the effect of the following words on the top of the page:

This agreement shall in no wise affect the provision of existing treaties between the Seminole Nation and the United States, except in so far as it is inconsistent therewith.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Their general council has certain rights under the old treaties. It may enact certain laws which are to be enforced by the Indian court, and it has a right to provide for the running of their government, etc.

Mr. CANNON. All of that is to disappear when you dissolve the tribal relations?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Yes; but until that time they are to have the right of passing laws, and their courts are to have limited jurisdiction. The following provision shows the extent of the jurisdiction of the United States courts:

The United States courts now existing, or that may hereafter be created, in Indian Territory shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all controversies growing out of the title, ownership, occupation, or use of real estate owned by the Seminoles, and to try all persons charged with homicide, embezzlement, bribery, and embracery hereafter committed in the Seminole country without reference to race or citizenship of the persons charged with such crime; and any citizen or officer of said nation charged with any such crime, if convicted, shall be punished as if he were a citizen or officer of the United States, and the courts of said nation shall retain all the jurisdiction which they now have, except as herein transferred to the courts of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I want to ask whether this provision that the treaties between the Seminole Nation and the United States are not to be affected—I am not familiar with them—whether there are provisions in those treaties that would put a burden upon the Treasury of the United States after the trust funds are paid?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. There is nothing that I know of.

Mr. CANNON. Well, the gentleman knows about the treaties.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I have read the treaties, and it is my recollection that there is nothing of the kind.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me it would be desirable, at as early a day as practicable, that the tribal relations should cease in the Indian Territory, and they should begin to get ready to hustle and make their way like other people. Does my friend expect under a ratification of this agreement that that time is to arrive pretty soon?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. This agreement is one of the first steps in that direction. The Dawes Commission was appointed for the purpose of entering into agreements with the Five Civilized Tribes to get them to give up their tribal governments and take their lands in severalty. They made a treaty with the Seminoles and they have ratified it. A general bill has passed the House, and has been reported to the Senate, to change the conditions in the Indian Territory. It is being discussed in the Senate to-day. The committee thought this tribe ought to be favored some because it had ratified the agreement made with the Dawes Commission.

Mr. CANNON. I have now, Mr. Speaker, used all the time I wish. If any other gentleman wishes any of it I will yield to him.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the motion further modified by inserting the other amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the modifications which the gentleman from Kansas asks.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "claim," in line 23, page 5, the words "not exceeding the sum of $163,888.95."

After the word "Indians," in line 4, page 7, insert "out of the funds of said Indians now in the Treasury of the United States."

On page 8, after the word "confirmed," insert the words "as herein amended."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the amendments which have been reported? [After a pause.] The Chairs hears none, and they will be incorporated in the bill.

The rules were suspended; and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the bill as amended was passed.

CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE FOR THE DISTRICT OF ALASKA.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8571) to define and punish crimes in the District of Alaska, and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said District, with amendments reported by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] There is none.

Mr. DOCKERY. I should like to know what this bill is.

Mr. WARNER. It provides a criminal code and a code of procedure thereunder for the District of Alaska. It is substantially a codification of the laws of Oregon, now governing that Territory, with such laws of the United States as are applicable.

Mr. DOCKERY. I thought we passed a bill only two or three days ago to authorize the commission to make this codification.

Mr. WARNER. No; we passed a resolution a few days ago authorizing the existing commission to draw up a civil code. This is a criminal code, which had been already drawn up, and has been reported to the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is it reported pursuant to the requirements of law?

Mr. WARNER. Yes, sir. Judge Culberson, Judge Thompson, and Judge Botkin are the commissioners; and under the law they were required to submit their codification or revision to the Attorney-General, who has laid it before Congress. It has been referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws by the Speaker of the House, and has been reported back for passage with three amendments.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does this proposed code in any respect other than the three amendments change the existing law?

Mr. WARNER. Well, there may be some additional sections which are not embraced in the laws of Oregon or the general laws of the United States. I am not certain as to that.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not propose to object to the bill. With the experience we have had to-day, it is just about as profitable to use time in reading this bill as in any other way. Indeed, I would rather have the time consumed in this manner.

Mr. WARNER. The governor of the Territory and all the law officers up there, and also the Attorney-General, recommend the passage of this bill, and say it is necessary it should be passed at once.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. MAHANY. I suggest to the gentleman that he ask unanimous consent to have the bill printed in the RECORD, and allow consideration of the measure to go over until to-morrow. Then such members as are interested can inform themselves about the bill from the RECORD.

Mr. WARNER. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. KNOX. This bill has already been printed, and there is an ample supply of copies. It is a very voluminous bill, and there does not seem to be any necessity for printing it in the RECORD.

Mr. LACEY. Can the gentleman point out the paragraphs in this bill which are new provisions of law? If those can be segregated from the parts which are purely codification, perhaps the consideration of the measure might not take much time.

Mr. MAHANY. The matter is of such importance that I shall have to object to dispensing with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. KNOX (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, I renew the request for unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the bill.

Mr. MAHANY. If the gentleman can point out briefly to the House the new provisions of law embraced in this codification, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. MAXWELL. I shall object to going on with the consideration of this bill without its being read in full.

The Clerk resumed the reading.

Mr. MAHANY (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of this bill be dispensed with, that it be printed in the RECORD, and that its consideration be the first business in order to-morrow after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. DOCKERY. If I remember correctly, a special order has already been made for to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal. I think it very proper that we should hear this bill read.

Mr. GAINES. This is a very important matter. None of us have had a chance to read this bill. There is not a quorum present, and it does not seem proper that we should go on with its consideration now.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to dispensing with the reading of the bill, and the reading will be resumed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Before the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] is pressed, I trust I may be allowed to submit an observation. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LACEY) put the question on the motion to adjourn and said: The ayes appear to have it.

Several MEMBERS. Division!

Mr. SHAFROTH. I make the point of order that the motion to adjourn is not in order pending the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is too late to make that point now.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, it was agreed to, there being—ayes 49, noes 9.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Pending the announcement of the vote on the motion to adjourn, The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4699. An act to provide an American register for the steamship China.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a favorable recommendation, a communication from the Quartermaster-General, together with a draft of a bill relating to the better organization of his Department, was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7890) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and finally settle the claims of bona fide settlers on the so-called Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1515); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 509) granting an increase of pension to John H. Sanborn, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1510); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4399) granting a pension to Sarah Jordan, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1511); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CASTLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2886) to increase the pension of Thaddeus M. Joy, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1512); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3705) granting a pension to Catherine Childers, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1513); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3693) granting an increase of pension to Leah L. Price, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1514); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3694) for the relief of Joseph Tousaint, alias Touzin, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1517); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RAY of New York, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1780) for the relief of Reuben H. Waters, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1518); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1453) granting an increase of pension to Henry Wilson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1519); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MILLS: A bill (H. R. 10501) to enable the President to accord redress for certain judicial errors in courts-martial, and thereby to obtain reinforcements for exigencies of war—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. OLMSTED: A bill (H. R. 10592) for the recognition of the military service of the officers and enlisted men of certain State military organizations—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HINRICHSSEN: A concurrent resolution (House Con. Res. No. 36) authorizing the Secretary of War to supply each Senator, Representative, and Delegate of the Fifty-fifth Congress who has not already received the same, a copy of the Records of the Union and Confederate Armies—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. JENKINS: A joint resolution (H. Res. 277) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HARTMAN: A joint resolution (H. Res. 278) authorizing preparation and delivery of medals to Lieutenant Hobson and crew for gallant conduct June 4, 1898—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MCCALL: A joint resolution (H. Res. 279) authorizing the President, in his discretion, to waive one year's suspension from promotion, and to order reexamination in certain cases—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HILBORN: A joint resolution (H. Res. 280) directing the Secretary of War to prepare and submit plans and estimates of dredging the channel through the shoals in San Pablo Bay off Pinole Point, in California—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HARTMAN: A bill (H. R. 10598) for the relief of Ewell P. Drake—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10594) to remove charge of desertion against Calvin Goodenough—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10595) granting a pension to Fiddlar White—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAMB: A bill (H. R. 10596) for the relief of the trustees of Enon Baptist Church, Chesterfield County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OLMSTED: A bill (H. R. 10597) for the relief of Peter Hiestand—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A bill (H. R. 10598) for the relief of Collin Adams, of Shelby County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10599) for the relief of L. D. Sugg, of Lincoln County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SULLOWAY: A bill (H. R. 10600) granting a pension to Samuel A. Page—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10601) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Tilton—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VANDIVER: A bill (H. R. 10602) for the relief of L. W. Pritchett—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. YOUNG: A bill (H. R. 10603) to pension Martha Loveland, widow of Robert S. Loveland, alias William H. Hamilton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILBORN: A bill (H. R. 10604) granting a pension to Elisha T. Bisbee—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WARNER: A bill (H. R. 10605) to increase the pension of Annie Cusack—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCALL: A joint resolution (H. Res. 276) for the relief of Richard R. Steedman, United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HILBORN: A joint resolution (H. Res. 281) to authorize the President to appoint as an assistant engineer in the Navy Ex-Naval Cadet David M. Berry—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAMS: Petitions of Charles B. Costello and M. Fisher, of Philadelphia, Pa., protesting against additional tax on snuff, tobacco, etc., in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BAKER of Illinois: Petition of B. F. Jackson & Co., of Indianapolis, Ind., remonstrating against the adoption of Schedule B of the war-revenue bill, placing a tax on proprietary medicines—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CASTLE: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of San Diego, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to substitute voluntary arbitration for railway strikes—to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petitions of the Fresno District Epworth League and Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of San Diego, Cal., for the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of San Diego, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting kinetoscope reproductions of prize fights in the District of Columbia and the Territories and the transmission by mail of newspaper descriptions of prize fights—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of San Diego, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to forbid the interstate transmission of lottery messages by telegraph, the enactment of a Sunday-rest law, and to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DOVENER: Petition of Ella Henderson and 35 other citizens of the State of West Virginia, for the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. FARIS: Papers in support of House bill No. 8095, for the relief of William Cruse—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, evidence in support of the claim of George W. Wiggle for a pension, to accompany House bill No. 6678—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FENTON: Petition of Fisher & Streich and 10 other druggists of Portsmouth, Ohio, protesting against the taxation of proprietary articles in the war-revenue bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 8346, granting a pension to John C. Sharp, of Company G, Seventh Ohio Volunteer Cavalry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany House bill No. 9751, to remove the charge of desertion against John Martin—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GIBSON: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Deer Lodge, Tenn., favoring legislation providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LACEY: Resolution of E. B. Townsend Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Bloomfield, Iowa, objecting to the erection of a monument to Albert Pike in the city of Washington, D. C.—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. NORTON of Ohio: Protests of George S. Yingling, of Tiffin, Ohio, and A. O. Suber, of Carey, Ohio, remonstrating against the proposed tax on life-insurance policies—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protests of L. H. Flocken, Marion, Ohio; T. P. Hurd & Sons, Clyde, Ohio; The C. Riester Company, Galion, Ohio, and A. Billhardt & Sons, Upper Sandusky, Ohio, in opposition to House bill No. 10100, known as the war-revenue bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petitions of the National Cash Register Company, of Dayton, Ohio, and the Globe Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, in favor of the passage of House bill No. 7082 and Senate bill No. 4168, to increase the force in the Patent Office—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, resolution of Goshen Grange, No. 573, of Anglaize County, Ohio, asking for the issue of legal-tender notes for war purposes—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SULLOWAY: Petitions of Ellen R. Robbins and 25 others; Mrs. Arthur E. Clarke, Annie V. Batchelder, and 14 others; Eva Dodge Walker and 13 others; Andrew N. Baker and 87 others; Belle R. Daniels and 18 others, favoring the passage of Senate bill No. 4194, for the protection of birds—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. SULZER: Resolutions of Irish National Club, of New York City, Edward O'Flaherty, president, in opposition to the so-called "Anglo-Saxon alliance"—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. TODD: Petition of the Sterling Remedy Company, of Indiana Mineral Springs, Ind., protesting against certain provisions in House bill No. 10100, known as the war-revenue bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Coldwater, Mich., for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Coldwater, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting kinetoscope reproductions of prize fights in the District of Columbia and the Territories and the transmission by mail of newspaper descriptions of prize fights—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Kalamazoo and Coldwater, Mich., for the passage of a bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Coldwater, Mich., in favor of the passage of bills to forbid interstate transmission of lottery messages by telegraph and to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TONGUE: Petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Presbyterian Church, Methodist Episcopal Church, Sunday school board, Epworth League, Chapter No. 4558, and public school board, all of Cresswell, Oreg., for the passage of bills to forbid interstate transmission of lottery and other gambling matter by telegraph and to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Presbyterian Church of Turner, Oreg., and the Methodist Episcopal churches of Stayton, Shaw, and Turner, Oreg., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of citizens of Cresswell, Grants Pass, Bethany,

Turner, Shaw, Stayton, and Yamhill, State of Oregon, in favor of the passage of a bill to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. YOUNG: Papers to accompany House bill for the relief of Martha Loveland—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 7, 1898.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The VICE-PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing submitting estimates for additional appropriations for the work of that Bureau; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CHIEF ORDNANCE OFFICERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, together with draft of a bill to provide chief ordnance officers for corps and division commanders, and recommending favorable consideration; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed with amendments the following bills:

A bill (S. 3596) to ratify the agreement between the Dawes Commission and the Seminole Nation of Indians; and

A bill (S. 4048) granting to the Kettle River Valley Railway Company a right of way through the north half of the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the passage of the so-called convict-labor bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of sundry seamen of the Pacific Coast, praying for the enactment of legislation for the amelioration of existing conditions in the merchant marine; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of Rocky Mountain Division, No. 103, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Laramie, Wyo., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WELLINGTON presented a petition of 105 citizens of Maryland, praying for the enactment of legislation to more effectually restrict immigration; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Berlin, Md., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. QUAY presented the petition of H. H. Cooper, secretary of the Philadelphia Annual Conference, and sundry other colored citizens of the United States, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 2821, providing a national memorial home for the aged and infirm colored people of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a memorial of the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, of St. Louis, Mo., remonstrating against the passage of House bill No. 10258, requiring stamps to be affixed by United States gaugers to packages containing from 1 to 5 gallons of spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PENROSE presented a petition of 52 citizens of Pottstown, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Army and Navy canteens, Soldiers' Homes, immigrant stations, and all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the Medical Society of York County, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No.

1063, for the further prevention of cruelty to animals in the District of Columbia; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1618) to authorize the President to place William T. Godwin on the retired list with the rank of first lieutenant, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1271) granting a pension to Clara A. Short, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1908) granting an increase of pension to George W. Nevins;

A bill (S. 896) granting a pension to Mary J. Hill; and

A bill (S. 2096) for the relief of Susana Marion.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4701) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Tilton, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3532) granting a pension to J. K. Hager, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3534) granting a pension to Annie E. Joseph;

A bill (S. 3285) to increase the pension of Mary F. Hopkins;

A bill (S. 4661) granting a pension to Ella Hayne Agnew;

A bill (S. 606) granting a pension to William Conklin;

A bill (S. 2960) granting a pension to Amos H. Goodnow;

A bill (S. 3136) granting a pension to Dr. William O. Torrey;

A bill (S. 2068) granting a pension to John B. Ritzman;

A bill (S. 2064) granting a pension to Philetus M. Axtell;

A bill (S. 4612) granting a pension to Caroline L. Guild;

A bill (S. 1258) granting a pension to Owen Devine;

A bill (S. 4635) granting a pension to John B. Boggs, Olney, Ill.;

A bill (S. 2120) granting a pension to William A. P. Fellows; and

A bill (S. 3017) granting a pension to Charles Edwin Brown.

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4429) granting a pension to Jennie P. Stover, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4509) granting a pension to John H. Morrison, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2285) granting an increase of pension to Henry Hatch, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4622) granting a pension to John S. Beatty; and

A bill (S. 4132) to increase the pension of Herman Piel.

Mr. ROACH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 168) granting a pension to W. P. Snowden, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10200) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 13, 1891, and the act amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1893, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1831) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Jane V. Davidson, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANNA, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4655) granting an increase of pension to Richard L. Titsworth; and

A bill (S. 4246) increasing the pension of Margaret Love Sherrett.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 4721) to enable the President to accord redress for certain judicial errors in courts-martial, and to obtain certain reinforcements thereby for exigencies of war; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not conversant with the contents of the bill, but I introduce it for consideration by the committee. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 4732) granting a pension to George Fetterman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WELLINGTON introduced a bill (S. 4733) for the relief of Mrs. A. M. Hollingsworth, of Ocean, Allegany County, State of Maryland; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ROACH introduced a bill (S. 4724) granting a pension to Francis R. May; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CANNON introduced a bill (S. 4725) granting a pension to Philander C. Burch; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4726) granting a pension to Sarah A. Erb; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4727) granting a pension to Annette C. Sell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PRITCHARD introduced a bill (S. 4738) to change the time of holding the United States courts in the eastern district of North Carolina; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 4729) for the relief of John Emerson, late a private in Company I, Nineteenth Maine Infantry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 4730) to increase the pension of Levi Moser; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PASCO (for Mr. HAWLEY) introduced a bill (S. 4731) to increase the force of the Ordnance Department; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. WELLINGTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7389) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed upon the public works of, or work done for, the United States or any Territory or the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROACH submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for the maintenance of the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians, in the State of North Dakota, and to pay expenses incurred by them and their delegation to Washington, D. C., regarding their claim for unceded lands, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 3 to the bill (H. R. 10565) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898, agrees to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4 with certain amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, and had passed an amendment to the title, in which it also requested the concurrence of the Senate.

MILITARY AND NAVAL DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES, June 7, 1898.

Resolved, That the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 10565, "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898," numbered 1, 2, and 3.

Agrees to amendment numbered 4 with amendments as follows:

Page 6, after line 6, insert:

"PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

"For printing and binding for the Navy Department and its bureaus, to be executed under the direction of the Public Printer, $20,000.

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

"ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

"For labor and expenses of engraving and printing: For salaries of all necessary clerks and employees other than plate printers and plate printers' assistants, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $20,000.

For wages of plate printers, at piece rates, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rate usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants, at $1.25 a day each, when employed, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $12,000.

"For engravers, printers, and other materials, except distinctive paper, and for miscellaneous expenses, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $18,000."

Page 1, line 7, after "eight," insert:

"And for other purposes."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes."

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate agree to the House amendments. They are only small amendments, one for printing for the Navy Department, $20,000, and three amendments for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for work upon stamps, which the Department desires to do at once. There are letters from the Secretary covering all of the details of the transaction. I will state to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] that I consulted with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who read the documents. The Senator from Maryland was not then in.

Mr. GORMAN. I merely wish to say that I am aware that these appropriations must be made, but I do not believe it is proper or wise to pursue this sort of legislation. This urgent deficiency bill came here; such measures are coming constantly, almost weekly, and here are items inserted after the Senate acted upon the bill which were never considered in the original bill when it passed through the House or when it passed here. While they may be necessary in this case, I think the heads of Departments ought to take notice of the fact that it is not the proper way to legislate.

Mr. HALE. The Senator understands that these are not items put on in conference.

Mr. GORMAN. No; items put on by the House.

Mr. HALE. Put on by the House.

Mr. GORMAN. After we amended the bill.

Mr. HALE. After we amended it.

Mr. GORMAN. It is a very unusual thing for either House to put new items on an appropriation bill in that way.

Mr. HALE. As appropriation bills go back and forth, it is the undoubted right of either branch to put on amendments. Instead of sending the bill into conference, the House agreed to our amendments and then put on other amendments that had not come up—small matters, as I think clearly the House had a right to do. It is not exceeding authority. It is put on by one body in open session and sent over to this body in open session.

Mr. GORMAN. It is a very unusual proceeding, and while it may be a necessary one here, I think the heads of Departments which have these urgency matters before them ought to make the estimates, and they ought in the first instance to be included in the bill either in the House or in the Senate. I merely wish to call attention to the fact. I have no doubt the items are all right.

Mr. HALE. They are all right. I see what the Senator wants to get at and feel the force of it. The Senator will understand that under the present condition things are coming up almost every day which no Secretary can anticipate. These came up in reference to printing and in reference to work in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which are made necessary to get out the work on the stamps provided for in the revenue bill. They want to do it beforehand. The Senator will see it is a case of extreme necessity.

Mr. GORMAN. They ought to have looked forward to it when the bill was under consideration.

Mr. HALE. I move that the amendments of the House be concurred in.

The amendments were concurred in.

AGREEMENT WITH THE SEMINOLE INDIAN NATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3596) to ratify the agreement between the Dawes Commission and the Seminole Nation of Indians.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendments of the House of Representatives and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas were appointed.

COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4048) granting to the Kettle River Valley Railway Company a right of way through the north half of the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of

Turner, Shaw, Stayton, and Yamhill, State of Oregon, in favor of the passage of a bill to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. YOUNG: Papers to accompany House bill for the relief of Martha Loveland—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 7, 1898.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.
The VICE-PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing submitting estimates for additional appropriations for the work of that Bureau; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CHIEF ORDNANCE OFFICERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, together with draft of a bill to provide chief ordnance officers for corps and division commanders, and recommending favorable consideration; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed with amendments the following bills:

A bill (S. 3596) to ratify the agreement between the Dawes Commission and the Seminole Nation of Indians; and

A bill (S. 4048) granting to the Kettle River Valley Railway Company a right of way through the north half of the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the passage of the so-called convict-labor bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of sundry seamen of the Pacific Coast, praying for the enactment of legislation for the amelioration of existing conditions in the merchant marine; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of Rocky Mountain Division, No. 103, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Laramie, Wyo., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WELLINGTON presented a petition of 105 citizens of Maryland, praying for the enactment of legislation to more effectually restrict immigration; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Berlin, Md., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. QUAY presented the petition of H. H. Cooper, secretary of the Philadelphia Annual Conference, and sundry other colored citizens of the United States, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 2821, providing a national memorial home for the aged and infirm colored people of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a memorial of the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, of St. Louis, Mo., remonstrating against the passage of House bill No. 10253, requiring stamps to be affixed by United States gaugers to packages containing from 1 to 5 gallons of spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PENROSE presented a petition of 52 citizens of Pottstown, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Army and Navy canteens, Soldiers' Homes, immigrant stations, and all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the Medical Society of York County, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No.

1063, for the further prevention of cruelty to animals in the District of Columbia; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1618) to authorize the President to place William T. Godwin on the retired list with the rank of first lieutenant, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1271) granting a pension to Clara A. Short, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1909) granting an increase of pension to George W. Nevins;

A bill (S. 896) granting a pension to Mary J. Hill; and

A bill (S. 2086) for the relief of Susana Marion.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4701) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Tilton, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3532) granting a pension to J. K. Hager, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3534) granting a pension to Annie E. Joseph;

A bill (S. 3285) to increase the pension of Mary F. Hopkins;

A bill (S. 4661) granting a pension to Ella Hayne Agnew;

A bill (S. 606) granting a pension to William Conklin;

A bill (S. 2960) granting a pension to Amos H. Goodnow;

A bill (S. 3136) granting a pension to Dr. William O. Torrey;

A bill (S. 2968) granting a pension to John B. Ritzman;

A bill (S. 2964) granting a pension to Philetus M. Axtell;

A bill (S. 4612) granting a pension to Caroline L. Guild;

A bill (S. 1258) granting a pension to Owen Devine;

A bill (S. 4635) granting a pension to John B. Boggs, Olney, Ill.;

A bill (S. 3120) granting a pension to William A. P. Fellows; and

A bill (S. 3017) granting a pension to Charles Edwin Brown.

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4429) granting a pension to Jennie P. Stover, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4509) granting a pension to John H. Morrison, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2235) granting an increase of pension to Henry Hatch, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4622) granting a pension to John S. Beaty; and

A bill (S. 4132) to increase the pension of Herman Piel.

Mr. ROACH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 168) granting a pension to W. P. Snowden, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10290) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 13, 1891, and the act amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1893, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1831) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Jane V. Davidson, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANNA, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4655) granting an increase of pension to Richard L. Titsworth; and

A bill (S. 4246) increasing the pension of Margaret Love Skerrett.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 4731) to enable the President to accord redress for certain judicial errors in courts-martial, and to obtain certain reinforcements thereby for exigencies of war; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not conversant with the contents of the bill, but I introduce it for consideration by the committee. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 4722) granting a pension to George Fetterman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WELLINGTON introduced a bill (S. 4723) for the relief of Mrs. A. M. Hollingsworth, of Ocean, Allegany County, State of Maryland; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ROACH introduced a bill (S. 4724) granting a pension to Francis R. May; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CANNON introduced a bill (S. 4725) granting a pension to Philander C. Burch; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4726) granting a pension to Sarah A. Erb; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4727) granting a pension to Annette C. Sell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PRITCHARD introduced a bill (S. 4728) to change the time of holding the United States courts in the eastern district of North Carolina; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 4729) for the relief of John Emerson, late a private in Company I, Nineteenth Maine Infantry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 4730) to increase the pension of Levi Moser; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PASCO (for Mr. HAWLEY) introduced a bill (S. 4731) to increase the force of the Ordnance Department; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. WELLINGTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7389) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed upon the public works of, or work done for, the United States or any Territory or the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROACH submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for the maintenance of the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians, in the State of North Dakota, and to pay expenses incurred by them and their delegation to Washington, D. C., regarding their claim for unceded lands, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 3 to the bill (H. R. 10565) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898, agrees to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4 with certain amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, and had passed an amendment to the title, in which it also requested the concurrence of the Senate.

MILITARY AND NAVAL DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES, June 7, 1898.

Resolved, That the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 10565, "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898," numbered 1, 2, and 3.

Agrees to amendment numbered 4 with amendments as follows:

Page 6, after line 6, insert:

"PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

"For printing and binding for the Navy Department and its bureaus, to be executed under the direction of the Public Printer, $20,000.

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

"ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

"For labor and expenses of engraving and printing: For salaries of all necessary clerks and employees other than plate printers and plate printers' assistants, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $20,000.

For wages of plate printers, at piece rates, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rate usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants, at $1.25 a day each, when employed, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $12,000.

"For engravers', printers', and other materials, except distinctive paper, and for miscellaneous expenses, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $18,000."

Page 1, line 7, after "eight," insert:

"And for other purposes."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes."

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate agree to the House amendments. They are only small amendments, one for printing for the Navy Department, $20,000, and three amendments for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for work upon stamps, which the Department desires to do at once. There are letters from the Secretary covering all of the details of the transaction. I will state to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] that I consulted with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who read the documents. The Senator from Maryland was not then in.

Mr. GORMAN. I merely wish to say that I am aware that these appropriations must be made, but I do not believe it is proper or wise to pursue this sort of legislation. This urgent deficiency bill came here; such measures are coming constantly, almost weekly, and here are items inserted after the Senate acted upon the bill which were never considered in the original bill when it passed through the House or when it passed here. While they may be necessary in this case, I think the heads of Departments ought to take notice of the fact that it is not the proper way to legislate.

Mr. HALE. The Senator understands that these are not items put on in conference.

Mr. GORMAN. No; items put on by the House.

Mr. HALE. Put on by the House.

Mr. GORMAN. After we amended the bill.

Mr. HALE. After we amended it.

Mr. GORMAN. It is a very unusual thing for either House to put new items on an appropriation bill in that way.

Mr. HALE. As appropriation bills go back and forth, it is the undoubted right of either branch to put on amendments. Instead of sending the bill into conference, the House agreed to our amendments and then put on other amendments that had not come up—small matters, as I think clearly the House had a right to do. It is not exceeding authority. It is put on by one body in open session and sent over to this body in open session.

Mr. GORMAN. It is a very unusual proceeding, and while it may be a necessary one here, I think the heads of Departments which have these urgency matters before them ought to make the estimates, and they ought in the first instance to be included in the bill either in the House or in the Senate. I merely wish to call attention to the fact. I have no doubt the items are all right.

Mr. HALE. They are all right. I see what the Senator wants to get at and feel the force of it. The Senator will understand that under the present condition things are coming up almost every day which no Secretary can anticipate. These came up in reference to printing and in reference to work in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which are made necessary to get out the work on the stamps provided for in the revenue bill. They want to do it beforehand. The Senator will see it is a case of extreme necessity.

Mr. GORMAN. They ought to have looked forward to it when the bill was under consideration.

Mr. HALE. I move that the amendments of the House be concurred in.

The amendments were concurred in.

AGREEMENT WITH THE SEMINOLE INDIAN NATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3596) to ratify the agreement between the Dawes Commission and the Seminole Nation of Indians.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendments of the House of Representatives and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas were appointed.

COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4048) granting to the Kettle River Valley Railway Company a right of way through the north half of the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, which was, on page 2, after line 12, to insert, as a new section, the following:

SEC. 2. That any damages or injuries occasioned to private property, whether the same be a vested or inchoate right to the property injured, whether the same belong to a white man or an Indian, shall be ascertained and compensation made therefor in accordance with the laws of Washington relating to the exercise of eminent domain or the taking of private property for public use.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 6th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 4554) to authorize the establishment of post-offices at military posts or camps; and

An act (S. 4578) to remove the disability imposed by section 8 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business appears to be closed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask to have House bill 8581 proceeded with.

Mr. QUAY. I wish to submit a conference report on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senate gave unanimous consent yesterday that this bill should be the order of business immediately after the close of the routine business this morning, and such being the case, I feel that it is my duty to ask the Senate to continue with the bill in accordance with that unanimous agreement.

Mr. QUAY. I suppose if unanimous consent has been given I can not prevent the taking up of the bill, but I have two objections to proceeding further with its consideration after it is taken up. First, I desire to present the report of the committee of conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill, and second, I desire to look into this Indian bill. It will not require more than an hour's examination to satisfy me as to its provisions. My attention was first called to it when I was visited by a delegation of Cherokee Indians last night, and I am really not certain what ought to be done. I am certain, however, of two propositions—one that the amendment providing for the roll of Cherokee freedmen ought to go out, and that, I understand, will go out.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall move to strike out that provision.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is impossible to hear on this side of the Chamber. I am very much interested in hearing what is going on upon the other side.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order, so that the Senator from Pennsylvania may be heard.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have the bill laid before the Senate, and then we will proceed to discuss it.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8581) for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. QUAY. Then the provision for segregating 157,000 acres of land by the Delaware Indians should go out. I am not so clear about that as I am that the freedmen's roll amendment should be defeated. The Indians themselves allege that the entire bill should be defeated; that it was passed by the House over their heads and against their will and in contravention of treaties made with them. But the bill has been carefully prepared and the subject has been thoroughly examined by the Committee on Indian Affairs, who are undoubtedly impartial.

If the bill is constitutional, it may probably be better for the Indians that something of the sort should be enacted. As I have said, one of these amendments I will resist. I understand it is to be withdrawn. The other in regard to the Delaware Indians, I think, ought to go out. I should be glad if the Senator from South Dakota would allow an hour or two for the further examination of the bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the committee investigated both those questions and came to the conclusion that both of them should go out of the bill.

Mr. QUAY. But they are put in the bill by the committee. They are Senate amendments.

Mr. PETTIGREW. No; the Delaware provision is a House provision, and the other was placed in the bill because we could reach it in conference if, after investigating it, we concluded it ought not to remain. That provision we now propose to strike out.

Mr. QUAY. I do not know that I shall resist the passage of the bill with these two provisions eliminated.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think it will take us some time to dispose of the bill, and I should like to proceed with it.

Mr. QUAY. I think eliminating those two points there will not be much opposition to it, though I am not authorized or prepared to say so. I should like to examine the Delaware amendment before the bill passes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. We will reach it in conference.

Mr. QUAY. I shall have no control over the conference; I shall have no voice there.

Mr. HALE. Let those items be passed over.

Mr. PETTIGREW. We will pass over those items.

Mr. QUAY (to Mr. PETTIGREW). Do you wish me to suspend presenting the Post-Office conference report?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to go on for a short time with the bill and see what progress we can make. I think it will take but a short time.

Mr. QUAY. The understanding is distinct in any event that those two points are conceded by the committee?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes, sir.

Mr. BATE. I could not understand what the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania was.

Mr. PETTIGREW. No motion was made.

Mr. BATE. He made some suggestions, but I could not understand their full import.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will state to the Senator from Tennessee that the Senator from Pennsylvania thought the two provisions should go out of the bill. One is in regard to the roll of freedmen in the Cherokee country. The committee are of the same opinion.

Mr. BATE. Well.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The other was the provision segregating 157,000 acres of land in the Cherokee country for the Delawares, which the Senator from Pennsylvania thinks should go out of the bill, and the committee concede that also.

Mr. BATE. That is on pages 28 and 29. Is that the provision?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not remember just on what pages of the bill. When we reach them, I shall move to strike them out.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I think the bill is wrong in many respects, but I do not want to throw any obstacle especially in the way of taking action upon it. I think it is in violation of all the treaties that have ever been made with the Indians by this Government, and it is overriding moral and legal obligations. I think the whole thing is wrong. I have the treaties here, which I can read if necessary, but they have heretofore been read and the case is understood to be as I state it.

That is my main objection to this bill. But the particular points that have just been made in reference to two provisions, one in regard to the freedmen and the other in regard to the Delaware Indians, ought, I think, to go out. I was hoping that the bill would go over until it could be thoroughly understood by the Senate. It is a very important measure, involving our moral obligations to those Indians, as well as our legal rights and the rights of the Indians and citizens in that Territory.

The question of allotment comes up and the bill indorses the action of the Dawes Commission. It takes away from those Indians the courts that they have had under treaties, and every right almost they have of a political and legal character has been denied them. The bill goes on to approve the action in the past in that regard. I think that Senators owe it to themselves to look into it and to see to it, because the course of the Government toward those Indians has certainly been a source of much repression, and justly so.

But I am not going to throw any obstacle in the way of those who have the bill in charge by any further delay. However, I think the consideration of the bill ought to be postponed, and that Senators should have time to study it. I shall not object to action, though the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] would like to be here, for he has some points that he wants to make, and I see he is not in his seat.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the committee will be read.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 13, page 12, line 23, after the word "improvements," to insert "and in renewing any lease the rights of lessees who have made subleases shall be protected;" and on page 13, line 1, after the word "Interior," to strike out the following additional provision:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall apply to the collection of individual royalty on oil, coal, asphalt, and other mineral, under existing contracts, for the period of nine months after the passage of this act.

So as to read:

And in making new leases due consideration shall be made for the improvements of such lessees, and in all cases of the leasing or renewal of leases of oil, coal, asphalt, and other mineral deposits preference shall be given to parties in possession who have made improvements, and in renewing any lease the rights of lessees who have made subleases shall be protected. The rate of royalty to be paid by all lessees shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 14, page 13, line 11, after the word "thereunder," to insert:

And the clerk of said court shall record all papers and perform all the acts required of the recorder of the county, or the clerk of the county court, or the secretary of state, as provided in Mansfield's Digest.

So as to read:

SEC. 14. That the inhabitants of any city or town in said Territory having 200 or more residents therein may proceed, by petition to the United States court in the district in which such city or town is located, to have the same incorporated as provided in chapter 29 of Mansfield's Digest of the Statutes of Arkansas, if not already incorporated thereunder; and the clerk of said court shall record all papers and perform all the acts required of the recorder of the county, or the clerk of the county court, or the secretary of state, as provided in Mansfield's Digest, and such city or town government, when so authorized and organized, shall possess all the powers and exercise all the rights of similar municipalities in said State of Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 14, page 14, line 25, after the word "aggregate," to strike out "one" and insert "two," so as to read:

And the councils of such cities and towns, for the support of the same and for school and other public purposes, may provide by ordinance for the assessment, levy, and collection annually of a tax upon such property, not to exceed in the aggregate 2 per cent of the assessed value thereof, in manner provided in chapter 129 of said digest, entitled "Revenue," and for such purposes may also impose a tax upon occupations and privileges.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, to strike out section 15, in the following words:

SEC. 15. That the United States hereby consents and authorizes each of the Five Civilized Tribes to convey by deed in fee, to any city or town which is now or may hereafter be incorporated under the provisions of this act, the lands embraced within the limits of said corporation and upon which said city or town is located, upon such terms and for such price as shall be agreed upon between said tribes and said corporation, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. If any of the cities or towns herein referred to shall purchase the lands within the corporate limits of said city or town, the chief executive officer of said corporation is hereby authorized and directed to plat the ground thus purchased into blocks, lots, streets, and alleys, and dedicate to the public said streets, alleys, and grounds reserved for public use for parks and schools; and upon said plat being approved by and filed with the Secretary of the Interior, said Secretary shall appoint an officer who, in conjunction with a person to be chosen by the city or town council, shall appraise the lots embraced in said plat at their cash value, and separate and apart from any improvements that may be located upon the same; and should said appraisers be unable to agree upon the value, the judge of the United States court for the district in which the city or town is located shall select a third person, who is not interested in said town, to assist them, and the determination of a majority of such appraisers shall be conclusive; and any person having buildings upon any of the said lots may purchase the said lots at 50 per cent of the appraised value thereof; but if the person owning the buildings upon said lots shall not purchase said lots within six months after the appraisal, as herein provided, then said lots may be sold at public auction to the highest bidder, at a price not less than 50 per cent of the appraised value thereof; and if the price received shall exceed 50 per cent of the appraised value of such lots, the remainder shall be paid to the owner of the said improvements. Lots not occupied by any person may be sold at private sale at the appraised value, or at public auction at such times and places as shall be provided for, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may make. The purchase money for all lots sold by the city or town under the provisions of this act shall be made in four equal annual payments, the first payment to be made within ninety days after the purchase. The proceeds of the sales of said lots shall be applied, first, to the payment of the purchase price of the land on which said town or city or village is located, and after said payment is made all sums realized from the sale of said lots shall be deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury for the use and benefit of the public schools of said city or town, and be paid out as directed by the proper school officers, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. Provided, That until title shall be obtained under the provisions of this section the use of all vacant lots in cities and towns now or hereafter incorporated shall be disposed of upon such conditions as may be provided by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That in surface the use of which is reserved to present coal operators shall be included such lots in towns as are occupied by lessees' houses, either occupied by said lessees' employees or as offices or warehouses: Provided, however, That in those town sites designated and laid out under the provisions of this act, where coal mines are now being operated and coal is being mined, there shall be reserved from appraisement and sale all lots occupied by houses of miners actually engaged in mining, and only while they are so engaged, and in addition thereto a sufficient amount of land, to be determined by the appraisers, to furnish homes for the men actually engaged in working for the lessees operating said mines and a sufficient amount for all buildings and machinery for mining purposes: And provided further, That when the lessees shall cease to operate said mines, then, and in that event, the lots of land so reserved shall be disposed of as provided for in this act.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 13, section 16, after the word "use," to insert "the same;" and in line 21, after the word "tribe," to strike out "whose allotment of lands may hereafter disclose oil, coal, asphalt, or other minerals from using the same for his, her, or their own use and benefit, or from disposing" and insert "to dispose;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That where any citizen shall be in possession of only such amount of agricultural or grazing lands as would be his just and reasonable share of the lands of his nation or tribe and that to which his wife and minor children are entitled, he may continue to use the same or receive the rents thereon until allotment has been made to him: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall impair the rights of any member of a tribe to dispose of any timber contained on his, her, or their allotment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 8, section 17, after the word "provided," to strike out:

And any person found in such possession of lands or other property in excess of his share and that of his family, as aforesaid, or having the same in any manner inclosed, at the expiration of nine months after the passage of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 18. That any person convicted of violating any of the provisions of sections 16 and 17 of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by a fine of not less than $100, and shall stand committed until such fine and costs are paid (such commitment not to exceed one day for every $2 of said fine and costs), and shall forfeit possession of any property in question, and each day on which such offense is committed or continues to exist shall be deemed a separate offense.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 17. That it shall be unlawful for any citizen of any one of said tribes to inclose or in any manner, by himself or through another, directly or indirectly, to hold possession of any greater amount of lands or other property belonging to any such nation or tribe than that which would be his approximate share of the lands belonging to such nation or tribe and that of his wife and his minor children as per allotment herein provided. And the United States district attorneys in said Territory are required to see that the provisions of said sections are strictly enforced, and they shall at once proceed to dispossess all persons of such excessive holding of lands and to prosecute them for so unlawfully holding the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 4, section 19, after the word "made," to insert "by the United States;" in line 6, after the word "of," to strike out "all expenses incurred in transacting their business and of;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 19. That no payment of any moneys on any account whatever shall hereafter be made by the United States to any of the tribal governments or to any officer thereof for disbursement, but payments of all sums to members of said tribes shall be made under direction of the Secretary of the Interior by an officer appointed by him; and per capita payments shall be made direct to each individual in lawful money of the United States, and the same shall not be liable to the payment of any previously contracted obligation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, to strike out section 21, in the following words:

SEC. 21. That all rights of way granted to railroad corporations whose lines have heretofore been constructed and at the time of the passage of this act are being operated, and those granted by act of Congress which are now in the course of construction, or are hereafter constructed as provided in the act or acts of Congress granting the right, together with such lands as they were or are authorized to take or acquire for depot or rights of way, sidings, and freight or storage purposes, are hereby confirmed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, beginning with line 1, to insert:

The roll of the freedmen of the Cherokee Nation made under the provisions of the decree entered of record in the Court of Claims of the United States February 6, 1894, in the case of Moses Whitmire, trustee of the freedmen of the Cherokee Nation, against the Cherokee Nation and the United States, is hereby confirmed, and the commission of the Five Civilized Tribes shall make a roll of said freedmen by adopting the aforesaid roll as made in the aforesaid case. And it shall add thereto the names of the descendants of all persons thereon born since May 3, 1894, and the names of all persons who applied before the commission that made the roll of freedmen in said case, and whose names were not placed upon either said roll or the rejected roll of freedmen made by said commission in said case, if in their judgment the evidence offered before said commission of the Five Civilized Tribes justifies their being made citizens of the Cherokee Nation in accordance with the provisions of the said decree, and the descendants of said persons born since May 3, 1894; and from the roll thus made the said commission shall expunge the names of all persons on said roll who have died since May 3, 1894, or who shall have abjured their citizenship in the Cherokee Nation; and the roll as thus made shall be the final and complete roll of the freedmen of the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is the amendment in regard to the Cherokee freedmen which I ask to have disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 24, page 24.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to strike out, commencing in line 20, after the word "thereto," down to and including the word "them," in line 24.

The SECRETARY. After the word "thereto," in line 20, page 24, strike out the remainder of the paragraph, in the following words:

And if they find that such persons have removed to and in good faith become residents upon the lands in the Choctaw Nation, and are entitled to enrollment under said article, they shall place their names on the rolls made by them.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. After the word "thereto," in line 20, I suggest to insert "and make report to the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

Said commission shall have authority to determine the identity of Choctaw Indians claiming rights in the Choctaw lands under article 14 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Nation concluded September 27, 1890, and to that end they may administer oaths, examine witnesses, and perform all other acts necessary thereto, and make report to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Very well. I think that is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 25, line 17, section 22, after the word "treaty," to strike out "and a sufficient amount of land shall be reserved from allotment for their use under the provisions of said treaty in case it be found that they are entitled thereto;" in line 20, after the word "acres," to insert "of land, including their present residences and improvements;" and in line 23, after the word "them," to strike out "until their rights under said treaty are determined;" so as to read:

It shall make a correct roll of Chickasaw freedmen entitled to any rights or benefits under the treaty made in 1866 between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes and their descendants born to them since the date of said treaty; and 40 acres of land, including their present residences and improvements, shall be allotted to each, to be selected, held, and used by them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 12, section 24, after the word "of," to strike out "any property of any kind" and insert "agricultural or grazing land;" so as to make the section read:

That all leases of agricultural or grazing land belonging to any tribe hereafter made by the tribe or any member thereof shall be absolutely void, and all leases heretofore so made shall terminate at the expiration of one year after the passage of this act unless herein otherwise expressly provided; but this shall not prevent individuals from leasing their allotments when made to them as provided in this act.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In line 13, page 28, section 24, after the word "tribe," I move to strike out the word "hereafter;" in line 14, after the word "made," to insert "after the 1st day of January, 1899;" in line 15, after the word "leases," to strike out "heretofore;" in the same line, after the word "made," to insert "prior to said date;" and in line 16, after the word "terminate," to strike out "at the expiration of one year after the passage of this act" and insert "on the 1st day of January, 1899;" so that the section will read:

That all leases of agricultural or grazing land belonging to any tribe made after the 1st day of January, 1899, by the tribe or any member thereof shall be absolutely void, and all leases made prior to said date shall terminate on the 1st day of January, 1899, unless herein otherwise expressly provided; but this shall not prevent individuals from leasing their allotments when made to them as provided in this act.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to strike out section 26 and in lieu thereof to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 26, in the following words:

SEC. 26. That before any allotment shall be made of lands in the Cherokee Nation there shall be segregated therefrom by the commission heretofore mentioned, in separate allotments or otherwise, the 157,600 acres purchased by the Delaware tribe of Indians from the Cherokee Nation under agreement of April 8, 1867, and the use and occupancy of 160 acres of said land shall be allotted to each registered Delaware Indian now living, and the remainder thereof shall be reserved to the descendants of deceased registered Delawares, subject to the judicial determination of the rights of said descendants and the Cherokee Nation under said agreement.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Delaware Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation are hereby authorized and empowered to bring suit in the Court of Claims of the United States within sixty days after the passage of this act against the Cherokee Nation for the purpose of determining the rights of said Delaware Indians in and to the lands and funds of said nation under their contract and agreement with the Cherokee Nation dated April 8, 1867, or the Cherokee Nation may bring a like suit against said Delaware Indians; and jurisdiction is conferred on said court to adjudicate and fully determine the same.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Ought there to be a right of appeal to the Supreme Court in that case? I ask the Secretary to read the last part of the amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

Or the Cherokee Nation may bring a like suit against said Delaware Indians; and jurisdiction is conferred on said court to adjudicate and fully determine the same.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That seems to cover it all.

Mr. MORGAN. To what court is the right of appeal?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is nothing in the amendment—that is what I was speaking of—about the right of appeal, but that, I think, may be adjusted in conference.

Mr. MILLS. I suggest to amend by saying "the right of appeal to the Supreme Court."

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to hear the amendment read again. The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suggest that there be added the words "with right of appeal to the Supreme Court."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no objection to that clause.

Mr. MORGAN. "Right of appeal of either party to the Supreme Court."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes; and if anything more is required, it can be adjusted in conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert at the end of the amendment:

And with right of appeal to either party to the Supreme Court.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I accept that as part of the amendment.

Mr. BATE. I should like to have it read again.

The Secretary read the amendment as modified.

Mr. BATE. That limits it to those two parties. I want a general appeal arising from all litigation that may occur under this act, and I shall offer an amendment of that kind.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee desire to have the amendment laid over?

Mr. BATE. Oh, no.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move a committee amendment, to come in right after section 27.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, on page 30, after line 16, as new sections, the following:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prevent any unlawful or wrongful use or occupation of tribal property in the Indian Territory, and may locate one Indian inspector in the Indian Territory, who may, under his authority and direction, perform any duties required of the Secretary of the Interior by law relating to affairs therein.

SEC. —. That on the 1st day of July, 1898, all tribal courts in the Indian Territory shall be abolished, and no officer of said courts shall thereafter have any authority whatever to do or perform any act theretofore authorized by any law in connection with said courts, or to receive any pay for same; and all parties to civil suits then pending in any such court may transfer same to the United States court in said Territory by filing with the clerk of the court the original papers in the suit or notice of the same duly verified as such by the party taking such transfer, and said court shall try and determine the same in all respects as if said suit had been originally instituted therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The adoption of the two sections which have just been read will require that the following sections be renumbered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 29, after the amendment just adopted, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 28. That the following agreement, made by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, between the Government of the United States and the governments of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes or nations of Indians on the 28d day of April, 1897, as herein amended, is hereby ratified and confirmed, and the same shall be of full force and effect when ratified by a majority of the voters of both tribes voting thereon, according to their respective laws on the subject: Provided, That at the election to be held for such purpose all male members of each of said tribes, qualified to vote under his tribal laws, shall have the right to vote at the election precinct most convenient to his residence, whether the same be within the bounds of his tribe or not; and if said agreement, as hereby amended, is accepted by said tribe or nation, the provisions of this act shall only apply to the said tribe or nation where the same does not conflict with the provisions of said agreement, but if said agreement is not accepted by said tribe or nation within six months after the passage of this act, then, in that event, this act shall be in full force and effect as to the same:

This agreement, by and between the Government of the United States of the first part, entered into in its behalf by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, Henry L. Dawes, Frank C. Armstrong, Archibald R. McKennon, Thomas B. Cabanis, and Alexander B. Montgomery, duly appointed and authorized thereunto, and the governments of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes or nations of Indians in the Indian Territory, respectively, of the second part, entered into in behalf of such Choctaw and Chickasaw governments, duly appointed and authorized thereunto, viz: Green McCurtain, J. R. Standley, N. B. Ainsworth, Ben Hampton, Wesley Anderson, Amos Henry, D. C. Garland, and A. S. Williams, in behalf of the Choctaw Tribe or Nation, and R. M. Harris, L. O. Lewis, Holmes Colbert, F. S. Mosely, M. V. Cheadle, E. L. Murray, William Perry, A. H. Colbert, and R. L. Boyd, in behalf of the Chickasaw Tribe or Nation.

ALLOTMENT OF LANDS.

Witnesseth, That in consideration of the mutual undertakings, herein contained, it is agreed as follows:

That all the lands within the Indian Territory belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians shall be allotted to the members of said tribes so as to give to each member of these tribes (except the Choctaw freedmen) so far as possible a fair and equal share thereof, considering the character and fertility of the soil and the location and value of the lands.

That all the lands set apart for town sites, and the strip of land lying between the city of Fort Smith, Ark., and the Arkansas and Poteau rivers, extending up said river to the mouth of Mill Creek; and 640 acres each, to include the buildings now occupied by the Jones Academy, Tuskegee Female Seminary, Wheelock Orphan Seminary, and Armstrong Orphan Academy, and 10 acres for the capitol building of the Choctaw Nation; 160 acres each, immediately contiguous to and including the buildings known as Bloomfield Academy, Lebanon Orphan Home, Harley Institute, Rock Academy, and Collins Institute, and 5 acres for the capitol building in the Chickasaw Nation, and the use of 1 acre of land for each church house now erected outside of the towns, and 80 acres of land each for J. S. Morrow, H. R. Schermerhorn, and the widow of R. S. Bell, who have been laboring as missionaries in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations since the year 1866, with the same conditions and limitations as apply to lands allotted to the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, and to be located on lands not occupied by a Choctaw or a Chickasaw, and a reasonable amount of land, to be determined by the town-site commission, to include all court-houses and jails and other public buildings not hereinbefore provided for, shall be exempted from division. And all coal and asphalt in or under the lands allotted and reserved from allotment shall be reserved for the sole use of the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes, exclusive of freedmen: Provided, That where any coal or asphalt is hereafter opened on land allotted, sold, or reserved, the value of the use of the necessary surface for prospecting or mining, and the damage done to the other land and improvements, shall be ascertained under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and paid to the allottee or owner of the land by the lessee or party operating the same before operations begin. That in order to such equal division, the lands of the Choctaws and Chickasaws shall be graded and appraised so as to give to each member, so far as possible, an equal value of the land: Provided further, That the lands allotted to the Choctaw freedmen are to be deducted from the portion to be allotted under this agreement to the members of the Choctaw tribe, so as to reduce the allotment to the Choctaws by the value of the same and not affect the value of the allotments to the Chickasaws.

That the said Choctaw freedmen who may be entitled to allotments of 40 acres each shall be entitled each to land equal in value to 40 acres of the average land of the two nations.

That in the appraisement of the lands to be allotted the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes shall each have a representative, to be appointed by their respective executives, to cooperate with the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, or anyone making appraisements under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in grading and appraising the lands preparatory to allotment. And the land shall be valued in the appraisement as if in its original condition, excluding the improvements thereon.

That the appraisement and allotment shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and shall begin as soon as the progress of the surveys, now being made by the United States Government, will admit.

That each member of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes, including Choctaw freedmen, shall, where it is possible, have the right to take his allotment on land the improvements on which belong to him, and such improvements shall not be estimated in the value of his allotment. In the case of minor children, allotments shall be selected for them by their father, mother, guardian, or the administrator having charge of their estate, preference being given in the order named, and shall not be sold during his minority. Allotments shall be selected for prisoners, convicts, and incompetents by some suitable person akin to them, and due care taken that all persons entitled thereto have allotments made to them.

All the lands allotted shall be nontaxable while the title remains in the original allottee, but not to exceed twenty-one years from date of patent, and each allottee shall select from his allotment a homestead of 160 acres, for which he shall have a separate patent, and which shall be inalienable for twenty-one years from date of patent. This provision shall also apply to the Choctaw freedman to the extent of his allotment. Selections for homesteads for minors to be made as provided herein in case of allotment, and the remainder of the lands allotted to said members shall be alienable for a price to be actually paid, and to include no former indebtedness or obligation—one-fourth of said remainder in one year, one-fourth in three years, and the balance of said alienable lands in five years from the date of the patent.

That all contracts looking to the sale or incumbrance in any way of the land of an allottee, except the sale hereinafter provided, shall be null and void. No allottee shall lease his allotment, or any portion thereof, for a longer period than five years, and then without the privilege of renewal. Every lease which is not evidenced by writing, setting out specifically the terms thereof, or which is not recorded in the clerk's office of the United States court for the district in which the land is located, within three months after the date of its execution, shall be void, and the purchaser or lessee shall acquire no rights whatever by an entry or holding thereunder. And no such lease or any sale shall be valid as against the allottee unless providing to him a reasonable compensation for the lands sold or leased.

That all controversies arising between the members of said tribes as to their right to have certain lands allotted to them shall be settled by the commission making the allotments.

That the United States shall put each allottee in possession of his allotment and remove all persons therefrom objectionable to the allottee.

That the United States shall survey and definitely mark and locate the ninety-eighth meridian of west longitude between Red and Canadian rivers before allotment of the lands herein provided for shall begin.

MEMBERS' TITLES TO LANDS.

That as soon as practicable, after the completion of said allotments, the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation and the governor of the Chickasaw Nation shall jointly execute, under their hands and the seals of the respective nations, and deliver to each of the said allottees patents conveying to him all the right, title, and interest of the Choctaws and Chickasaws in and to the land which shall have been allotted to him in conformity with the requirements of this agreement, excepting all coal and asphalt in or under said land. Said patents shall be framed in accordance with the provisions of this agreement, and shall embrace the land allotted to such patentee and no other land. The Secretary of the Interior of the United States shall annex to such patent his official certificate that is drawn in accordance with the provisions of this agreement; that it embraces the land allotted to such patentee and no other land, and that he approves said patent; and said certificate shall be operative as a relinquishment of all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the land conveyed by said patents, and as a guaranty of the United States of title to and possession of the land so conveyed, and the acceptance of his patents by such allottee shall be operative as an assent on his part to the allotment and conveyance of all the lands of the Choctaws and Chickasaws in accordance with the provisions of this agreement, and as a relinquishment of all his right, title, and interest in and to any and all parts thereof, except the land embraced in said patents, except also his interest in the proceeds of all lands, coal, and asphalt herein excepted from allotment.

That the United States shall provide by law for proper records of land titles in the territory occupied by the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes.

RAILROADS.

The rights of way for railroads through the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations to be surveyed and set apart and platted to conform to the respective acts of Congress granting the same in cases where said rights of way are defined by such acts of Congress, but in cases where the acts of Congress do not define the same, then Congress is memorialized to definitely fix the width of said rights of way for station grounds and between stations, so that railroads now constructed through said nations shall have, as near as possible, uniform rights of way; and Congress is also requested to fix uniform rates of fare and freight for all railroads through the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations; branch railroads now constructed and not built according to acts of Congress to pay the same rates for rights of way and station grounds as main lines.

TOWN SITES.

It is further agreed that there shall be appointed a commission for each of the two nations. Each commission shall consist of one member, to be appointed by the executive of the tribe for which said commission is to act, who shall not be interested in town property other than his home, and one member of the commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, to be designated by the chairman thereof. Each of said commissions shall lay out town sites, to be restricted as far as possible to their present limits, where towns are now located in the nation for which said commission is appointed. Said commission shall have prepared correct and proper plats of each town, and file one in the clerk's office of the United States district court for the district in which the town is located, and one with the principal chief or governor of the nation in which the town is located, and one with the Secretary of the Interior, to be approved by him before the same shall take effect. When said towns are so laid out, each lot on which permanent, substantial, and valuable improvements, other than fences, tillage, and temporary houses, have been made, shall be valued by the commission provided for the nation in which the town is located at the price a fee-simple title to the same would bring in the market at the time the valuation is made, but not to include in such value the improvements thereon. The owner of the improvements on each lot shall have the right to buy the same at 62½ per cent of the said market value within sixty days from date of notice served on him that such lot is for sale, and if he purchases the same he shall, within ten days from his purchase, pay into the Treasury of the United States one-fourth of the purchase price, and the balance in three equal annual installments, and when the entire sum is paid shall be entitled to a patent for the same. In case the two members of the commission fail to agree as to the market value of any lot, they shall select a third person, who is not interested in town lots, who shall act with them to determine said value.

If such owner of the improvements on any lot fails within sixty days to purchase and make the first payment on same, such lot, with the improvements thereon, shall be sold at public auction to the highest bidder, under the direction of the aforesaid commission, and the purchaser at such sale shall pay to the owner of the improvements the price for which said lot shall be sold, less 62½ per cent of said appraised value of the lot, and shall pay the 62½ per cent of said appraised value into United States Treasury, under regulations to be established by the Secretary of the Interior, in four installments, as hereinafter provided. The commission shall have the right to reject any bid on such lot which they consider below its value.

All lots not so appraised shall be sold from time to time at public auction (after proper advertisement) by the commission for the nation in which the town is located, as may seem for the best interest of the nations and the proper development of each town, the purchase price to be paid in four installments as hereinafter provided for improved lots. The commission shall have the right to reject any bid for such lots which they consider below its value.

All the payments herein provided for shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior into the United States Treasury, a failure of sixty days to make any one payment to be a forfeiture of all payments made and all rights under the contract: Provided, That the purchaser of any lot shall have the option of paying the entire price of the lot before the same is due.

No tax shall be assessed by any town government against any town lot unsold by the commission, and no tax levied against a lot sold, as herein provided, shall constitute a lien on same till the purchase price thereof has been fully paid to the nation.

The money paid into the United States Treasury for the sale of all town lots shall be for the benefit of the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes (freedmen excepted), and at the end of one year from the ratification of this agreement, and at the end of each year thereafter, the funds so accumulated shall be divided and paid to the Choctaws and Chickasaws (freedmen excepted), each member of the two tribes to receive an equal portion thereof.

That no law or ordinance shall be passed by any town which interferes with the enforcement of or is in conflict with the Choctaw or Chickasaw constitutions or laws, or those of the United States, and all persons in such towns shall be subject to said laws, and the United States agrees to maintain strict laws in the territory of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes against the introduction, sale, barter, or giving away of liquors and intoxicants of any kind or quality.

That said commission shall be authorized to locate, within a suitable distance from each town site, not to exceed 5 acres to be used as a cemetery, and when any town has paid into the United States Treasury, to be part of the fund arising from the sale of town lots, $10 per acre therefor, such town shall be entitled to a patent for the same as herein provided for titles to allottees, and shall dispose of same at reasonable prices in suitable lots for burial purposes, the proceeds derived from such sales to be applied by the town government to the proper improvement and care of said cemetery.

That no charge or claim shall be made against the Choctaw or Chickasaw tribes by the United States for the expenses of surveying and platting the lands and town sites, or for grading, appraising, and allotting the lands, or for appraising and disposing of the town lots as herein provided.

That the land adjacent to Fort Smith and lands for court-houses, jails, and other public purposes excepted from allotment shall be disposed of in the same manner and for the same purposes as provided for town lots herein, but not till the Choctaw and Chickasaw councils shall direct such disposition to be made thereof, and said land adjacent thereto shall be placed under the jurisdiction of the city of Fort Smith, Ark., for police purposes.

There shall be set apart and exempted from appraisement and sale in the towns, lots upon which churches and parsonages are now built and occupied, not to exceed 50 feet front and 100 feet deep for each church or parsonage: Provided, That such lots shall only be used for churches and parsonages, and when they ceased to be used shall revert to the members of the tribes to be disposed of as other town lots: Provided further, That these lots may be sold by the churches for which they are set apart if the purchase money therefor is invested in other lot or lots in the same town, to be used for the same purpose and with the same conditions and limitations.

It is agreed that all the coal and asphalt within the limits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations shall remain and be the common property of the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes (freedmen excepted), so that each and every member shall have an equal and undivided interest in the whole; and no patent provided for in this agreement shall convey any title thereto. The revenues from coal and asphalt, or so much as shall be necessary, shall be used for the education of the children of Indian blood of the members of said tribes. Such coal and asphalt mines as are now in operation, and all others which may hereafter be leased and operated, shall be under the supervision and control of two trustees, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, one on the recommendation of the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, who shall be a Choctaw by blood, whose term shall be for four years, and one on the recommendation of the governor of the Chickasaw Nation, who shall be a Chickasaw by blood, whose term shall be for two years; after which the term of appointees shall be four years. Said trustees, or either of them, may, at any time, be removed by the President of the United States for good cause shown. They shall each give bond for the faithful performance of their duties, under such rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. Their salaries shall be fixed and paid by their respective nations.

All coal and asphalt mines in the two nations, whether now developed, or to be hereafter developed, shall be operated, and the royalties therefrom paid into the Treasury of the United States, and shall be drawn therefrom under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

All contracts made by the national agents of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations for operating coal and asphalt, with any person or corporation, which were, on April 23, 1897, being operated in good faith are hereby ratified and confirmed, and the lessees shall have the right to renew the same when they expire, subject to all the provisions of this act.

All agreements heretofore made by any person or corporation with any member or members of the Choctaw or Chickasaw nations, the object of which was to obtain such member or members' permission to operate coal or asphalt, are hereby declared void, but the rights of such persons or corporations thereunto shall continue unimpaired hereby, and shall be assured by new leases from such trustees, but such persons or corporations shall have prior right to lease the coal or asphalt claims described therein, by application to the trustees within six months after the ratification of this agreement.

All leases under this agreement shall include the coal or asphaltum, or other mineral, as the case may be, in or under 600 acres, which shall be in a square as nearly as possible, and shall be for thirty years. The royalty on coal shall be 15 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds on all coal mined, payable on the 25th day of the month next succeeding that in which it is mined. Royalty on asphalt shall be 60 cents per ton on — asphalt, payable same as coal: Provided, That the legislatures of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations may reduce such royalties when they deem it for their best interests to do so. No royalties shall be paid except into the United States Treasury as herein provided.

Lessees shall pay on each coal or asphalt claim at the rate of $100 per annum, in advance, for the first and second years; $200 per annum, in advance, for the third and fourth years; and $300 for each succeeding year thereafter. All such payments shall be treated as advanced royalty on the mine or claim on which they are made, and shall be a credit as royalty when each said mine is developed and operated, and its production is in excess of such guaranteed annual advance payments, and all persons having coal leases must pay said annual advance payments on each claim whether developed or undeveloped: Provided, however, That should any lessee neglect or refuse to pay such advanced annual royalty for the period of sixty days after the same becomes due and payable on any lease, the lease on which default is made shall become null and void, and the royalties paid in advance thereon shall then become and be the money and property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations.

In surface, the use of which is reserved to present coal operators, shall be included such lots in towns as are occupied by lessees' houses—either occupied by said lessees' employees or as offices or warehouses: Provided, however, That in those town sites designated and laid out under the provision of this agreement where coal leases are now being operated and coal is being mined there shall be reserved from appraisement and sale all lots occupied by houses of miners actually engaged in mining, and only while they are so engaged, and in addition thereto a sufficient amount of land, to be determined by the town-site board of appraisers, to furnish homes for the men actually engaged in working for the lessees operating said mines, and a sufficient amount for all buildings and machinery for mining purposes.

And provided further, That when the lessees shall cease to operate said mines, then and in that event the lots of land so reserved shall be disposed of by the coal trustees for the benefit of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes.

That whenever the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes shall be required to pay taxes for the support of schools, then the fund arising from such royalties shall be disposed of for the equal benefit of their members (freedmen excepted) in such manner as the tribes may direct.

It is further agreed that the United States courts now existing, or that may hereafter be created, in the Indian Territory shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all controversies growing out of the title, ownership, occupation, possession, or use of real estate, coal, and asphalt in the territory occupied by the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes; and of all persons charged with homicide, embezzlement, bribery, and embezzlement hereafter committed in the territory of said tribes, without reference to race or citizenship of the person or persons charged with such crime; and any citizen or officer of the Choctaw or Chickasaw nations charged with such crime shall be tried, and, if convicted, punished as though he were a citizen or officer of the United States.

And sections 1636 to 1644, inclusive, entitled "Embezzlement," and sections 1711 to 1713, inclusive, entitled "Bribery and Embezzlement," of Mansfield's Digest of the laws of Arkansas, are hereby extended over and put in force in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations; and the word "officer," where the same appears in said laws, shall include all officers of the Choctaw and Chickasaw governments; and the fifteenth section of the act of Congress, entitled "An act to establish United States courts in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1890, limiting jurors to citizens of the United States, shall be held not to apply to United States courts in the Indian Territory held within the limits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations; and all members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes, otherwise qualified, shall be competent jurors in said courts: Provided, That whenever a member of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations is indicted for homicide, he may within thirty days after such indictment and his arrest thereon, and before the same is reached for trial, file with the clerk of the court in which he is indicted, his affidavit that he can not get a fair trial in said court; and it thereupon shall be the duty of the judge of said court to order a change of venue in such case to the United States district court for the western district of Arkansas, at Fort Smith, Ark., or to the United States district court for the eastern district of Texas, at Paris, Tex., always selecting the court that in his judgment is nearest or most convenient to the place where the crime charged in the indictment is supposed to have been committed, which courts shall have jurisdiction to try the case; and in all said civil suits said courts shall have full equity powers; and whenever it shall appear to said court, at any stage in the hearing of any case, that the tribe is in any way interested in the subject-matter in controversy, it shall have power to summon in said tribe and make the same a party to the suit and proceed therein in all respects as if such tribe were an original party thereto; but in no case shall suit be instituted against the tribal government without its consent.

It is further agreed that no act, ordinance, or resolution of the council of either the Choctaw or Chickasaw tribes, in any manner affecting the land of the tribe, or of the individuals, after allotment, or the moneys or other property of the tribe or citizens thereof (except appropriations for the regular and necessary expenses of the government of the respective tribes), or the rights of any persons to employ any kind of labor, or the rights of any persons who have taken or may take the oath of allegiance to the United States, shall be of any validity until approved by the President of the United States. When such acts, ordinances, or resolutions passed by the council of either of said tribes shall be approved by the governor thereof, then it shall be the duty of the national secretary of said tribe to forward them to the President of the United States, duly certified and sealed, who shall, within thirty days after their reception, approve or disapprove the same. Said acts, ordinances, or resolutions, when so approved, shall be published in at least two newspapers having a bona fide circulation in the tribe to be affected thereby, and when disapproved shall be returned to the tribe enacting the same.

It is further agreed, in view of the modification of legislative authority and judicial jurisdiction herein provided, and the necessity of the continuance of the tribal governments so modified, in order to carry out the requirements of this agreement, that the same shall continue for the period of eight years from the 4th day of March, 1893. This stipulation is made in the belief that the tribal governments so modified will prove so satisfactory that there will be no need or desire for further change till the lands now occupied by the Five Civilized Tribes shall, in the opinion of Congress, be prepared for admission as a State to the Union. But this provision shall not be construed to be in any respect an abdication by Congress of power at any time to make needful rules and regulations respecting said tribes.

That all per capita payments hereafter made to the members of the Choctaw or Chickasaw nations shall be paid directly to each individual member by a bonded officer of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, which officer shall be required to give strict account for such disbursements to said Secretary.

SEC. 33. That the following sum be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Chickasaw Nation of Indians, namely:

For arrears of interest at 5 per cent per annum from December 31, 1840, to June 30, 1889, on $184,143.00 of the trust fund of the Chickasaw Nation erroneously dropped from the books of the United States prior to December 31, 1840, and restored December 27, 1887, by the award of the Secretary of the Interior, under the fourth article of the treaty of June 22, 1852, and for arrears of interest, at 5 per cent per annum, from March 11, 1850, to March 3, 1890, on $50,021.49 of the trust fund of the Chickasaw Nation erroneously dropped from the books of the United States March 11, 1850, and restored December 27, 1887, by the award of the Secretary of the Interior, under the fourth article of the treaty of June 22, 1852, $538,520.54, to be placed to the credit of the Chickasaw Nation with the fund to which it properly belongs: Provided, That if there be any attorneys' fees to be paid out of same, on contract heretofore made and duly approved by the Secretary of the Interior, the same is authorized to be paid by him.

It is further agreed that the final decision of the courts of the United States in the case of the Choctaw Nation and the Chickasaw Nation against the United States and the Wichita and Affiliated Bands of Indians, now pending, when made, shall be conclusive as the basis of settlement as between the United States and said Choctaw and Chickasaw nations for the remaining lands in what is known as the "leased district," namely, the land lying between the ninety-eighth and one hundredth degrees of west longitude and between the Red and Canadian rivers, leased to the United States by the treaty of 1855, except that portion called the Cheyenne and Arapahoe country, heretofore acquired by the United States, and all final judgments rendered against said nations in any of the courts of the United States in favor of the United States or any citizen thereof shall first be paid out of any sum hereafter found due said Indians for any interest they may have in the so-called leased district.

It is further agreed that all of the funds invested in lieu of investment, treaty funds, or otherwise, now held by the United States in trust for the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes, shall be capitalized within one year after the tribal governments shall cease, so far as the same may legally be done, and be appropriated and paid, by some officer of the United States appointed for the purpose, to the Choctaws and Chickasaws (freedmen excepted) per capita, to aid and assist them in improving their homes and lands.

It is further agreed that the Choctaws and Chickasaws, when their tribal governments cease, shall become possessed of all the rights and privileges of citizens of the United States.

ORPHAN LANDS.

It is further agreed that the Choctaw orphan lands in the State of Mississippi, yet unsold, shall be taken by the United States at $1.25 per acre, and the proceeds placed to the credit of the Choctaw orphan fund in the Treasury of the United States, the number of acres to be determined by the General Land Office.

This agreement shall be binding on the United States when ratified by Congress and on each tribe or nation, party hereto, when ratified by the constituted authorities of that tribe or nation, according to their respective laws on the subject.

In witness whereof the said commissioners do hereunto affix their names at Atoka, Ind. T., this the 23d day of April, 1897.

R. M. HARRIS, Governor.
GREEN McCURTAIN, Principal Chief.
ISAAC O. LEWIS,
HOLMES COLBERT,
ROBERT L. MURRAY,
WILLIAM FERRY,
R. L. BOYD.

Chickasaw Commission.

J. S. STANDLEY,
N. B. AINSWORTH,
HEN HAMPTON,
WESLEY ANDERSON,
AMOS HENRY,
D. C. GARLAND.

Choctaw Commission.

FRANK C. ARMSTRONG,
Acting Chairman.
ARCHIBALD S. MCKENNON,
THOMAS B. CABANISS,
ALEXANDER B. MONTGOMERY,
Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes.
H. M. JACOWAY, Jr.,
Secretary, Five Tribes Commission.

SEC. 30. That the following agreement, made by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, between the Government of the United States and the governments of the Muscogee, or Creek, tribes, or nations, of Indians, on the 27th day of September, 1897, as amended, is hereby ratified and confirmed, and the same shall be of full force and effect when ratified by the constituted authorities of that tribe, or nation, according to their respective laws on the subject; and if said agreement, as hereby amended, is accepted by said tribe, or nation, the provisions of this act shall only apply to the said tribe, or nation, where the same does not conflict with the provisions of said agreement; but if said agreement is not accepted by said tribe, or nation, within six months after the passage of this act, then in that event this act shall be in full force and effect as to the same:

This agreement, by and between the Government of the United States of the first part, entered into in its behalf by the commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, Henry L. Dawes, Frank C. Armstrong, Archibald S. McKennon, Alexander B. Montgomery, and Tams Bixby, duly appointed and authorized thereunto, and the government of the Muscogee or Creek Nation in the Indian Territory of the second part, entered into in behalf of such Muscogee or Creek government, by its commission, duly appointed and authorized thereunto, via, Pleasant Porter, Joseph Mingo, David N. Hodge, George A. Alexander, Roland Brown, William A. Sapulpa, and Concharlie Mico.

Witnesseth, That in consideration of the mutual undertakings herein contained, it is agreed as follows:

GENERAL ALLOTMENT OF LAND.

1. There shall be allotted out of the lands owned by the Muscogee or Creek Indians in the Indian Territory to each citizen of said nation 160 acres of land. Each citizen shall have the right, so far as possible, to take his 160 acres so as to include the improvements which belong to him, but such improvements shall not be estimated in the value fixed on his allotment, provided any citizen may take any land not already selected by another; but if such land, under actual cultivation, has on it any lawful improvements, he shall pay the owner of said improvements for same, the value to be fixed by the commission appraising the land. In the case of a minor child, allotment shall be selected for him by his father, mother, guardian, or the administrator having charge of his estate, preference being given in the order named, and shall not be sold during his minority. Allotments shall be selected for prisoners, convicts, and incompetents by some suitable person akin to them, and due care shall be taken that all persons entitled thereto shall have allotments made to them.

2. Each allotment shall be appraised at what would be its present value, if unimproved, considering the fertility of the soil and its location, but excluding the improvements, and each allottee shall be charged with the value of his allotment in the future distribution of any funds of the nation arising from any source whatever, so that each member of the nation shall be made equal in the distribution of the lands and moneys belonging to the nation, provided that the minimum valuation to be placed upon any land in the said nation shall be $1.25 per acre.

3. In the appraisal of the said allotment, said nation may have a representative to cooperate with a commission, or a United States officer, designated by the President of the United States, to make the appraisal. Appraisements and allotments shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and begin as soon as an authenticated roll of the citizens of the said nation has been made.

4. All controversies arising between the members of said nation as to their rights to have certain lands allotted to them shall be settled by the commission making allotments.

5. The United States shall put each allottee in unrestricted possession of his allotment and remove therefrom all persons objectionable to the allottee.

6. The excess of lands after allotment is completed, all funds derived from town sites, and all other funds accruing under the provisions of this agreement shall be used for the purpose of equalizing allotments, valued as herein provided, and if the same be found insufficient for such purpose, the deficiency shall be supplied from other funds of the nation upon dissolution of its tribal relations with the United States, in accordance with the purposes and intent of this agreement.

7. The residue of the lands not taken in allotments (town sites, railroad rights of way, school and other exemptions and donations excepted) shall be appraised by the Secretary of the Interior and sold, in tracts of not to exceed 160 acres to any one person, to the highest bidder, at public auction, for not less than the appraised value per acre, and the proceeds paid into the Treasury of the United States.

8. Patents to all lands sold shall be issued in the same manner as to allottees.

SPECIAL ALLOTMENTS.

9. There shall be allotted and patented 160 acres each to Mrs. A. E. W. Robertson and Mrs. H. F. Buckner (née Grayson) as special recognition of their services as missionaries among the people of the Creek Nation.

10. Harrell Institute, Henry Kendall College, and Nazareth Institute, in Muscogee, and Baptist University, near Muscogee, shall have free of charge, to be allotted and patented to said institutions or to the churches to which they belong, the grounds they now occupy, to be used for school purposes only and not to exceed 10 acres each.

RESERVATIONS.

11. The following lands shall be reserved from the general allotment heretofore provided:

All lands hereinafter set apart for town sites; all lands which shall be selected for town cemeteries by the town-site commission as hereinafter provided; all lands that may be occupied at the time allotment begins by railroad companies duly authorized by Congress as railroad rights of way; 160 acres at Okmulgee, to be laid off as a town, 1 acre of which, now occupied by the capitol building, being especially reserved for said public building; 1 acre for each church now located and used for purposes of worship outside of the towns, and sufficient land for burial purposes, where neighborhood burial grounds are now located; 160 acres each, to include the building sites now occupied, for the following educational institutions: Eufaula High School, Wealaka Mission, New Yaka Mission, Wetumpka Mission, Euchee Institute, Coweta Mission, Creek Orphan Home, Tallahassee Mission (colored), Pecan Creek Mission (colored), and Colored Orphan Home. Also, 4 acres each for the six court-houses now established.

TITLES.

12. As soon as practicable after the completion of said allotments the principal chief of the Muscogee or Creek Nation shall execute under his hand and the seal of said nation, and deliver to each of said allottees, a patent, conveying to him all the right, title, and interest of the said nation in and to the land which shall have been allotted to him in conformity with the requirements of this agreement. Said patents shall be framed in accordance with the provisions of this agreement and shall embrace the land allotted to such patentee and no other land. The Secretary of the Interior of the United States shall annex to said patent his official certificate that it is drawn in accordance with the provisions of this agreement; that it embraces the land allotted to such patentee and no other land, and that he approves said patent, and said certificate shall be operative as a relinquishment of all rights, title, and interest of the United States in and to the land conveyed by said patent and as a guaranty of the United States of title to and possession of the land so conveyed, and the acceptance of his patent by such allottee shall be operative as an assent on his part to the allotment and conveyance of all the land of the said nation in accordance with the provisions of this agreement, and as a relinquishment of all his rights, title, and interest in and to any and all parts thereof, except the land embraced in said patent; except, also, his interest in the proceeds of all lands herein excepted from allotment.

13. The United States shall provide by law for proper record of land titles in the territory occupied by the said nation.

TOWN SITES.

14. There shall be appointed a commission, which shall consist of one member appointed by the executive of the Muscogee or Creek Nation, who shall not be interested in town property other than his home, and one member who shall be an officer of the United States, to be designated by the President of the United States. Said commission shall lay out town sites, to be restricted as far as possible to their present limits, where towns are now located. No town laid out and platted by said commission shall cover more than 4 square miles of territory.

15. When said towns are laid out, each lot on which substantial and valuable improvements have been made shall be valued by the commission at the price a fee-simple title to the same would bring in the market at the time the valuation is made, but not to include in such value the improvements thereon.

16. In appraising the value of town lots, the number of inhabitants, the location and surrounding advantages of the town shall be considered.

17. The owner of the improvements on any lot shall have the right to buy the same at 50 per cent of the value within sixty days from the date of notice served on him that such lot is for sale, and if he purchase the same he shall, within ten days from his purchase, pay into the Treasury of the United States one-fourth of the purchase price and the balance in three equal annual payments, and when the entire sum is paid he shall be entitled to a patent for the same, to be made as herein provided for patents to allottees.

18. In any case where the two members of the commission fail to agree as to the value of any lot they shall select a third person, who shall be a citizen of said nation and who is not interested in town lots, who shall act with them to determine said value.

19. If the owner of the improvements on any lot fail within sixty days to purchase and make the first payment on the same, such lot, with the improvements thereon (said lot and the improvements thereon having been theretofore properly appraised), shall be sold at public auction to the highest bidder, under the direction of said commission, at a price not less than the value of the lot and improvements, and the purchaser at such sale shall pay to the owner of the improvements the price for which said lot and the improvements thereon shall be sold, less 50 per cent of the said appraised value of the lot, and shall pay 50 per cent of said appraised value of the lot into the United States Treasury, under regulations to be established by the Secretary of the Interior, in four installments, as hereinbefore provided. Said commission shall have the right to reject a bid on any lot and the improvements thereon which it may consider below the real value.

20. All lots not having improvements thereon and not so appraised shall be sold by the commission from time to time at public auction, after proper advertisement, as may seem for the best interest of the said nation and the proper development of each town, the purchase price to be paid in four installments, as hereinbefore provided for improved lots.

21. All citizens or persons who have purchased the right of occupancy from parties in legal possession prior to the date of signing this agreement, holding lots or tracts of ground in towns, shall have the first right to purchase said lots or tracts upon the same terms and conditions as is provided for improved lots, provided said lots or tracts shall have been theretofore properly appraised, as hereinbefore provided for improved lots.

22. Said commission shall have the right to reject any bid for such lots or tracts which is considered by said commission below the fair value of the same.

23. Failure to make any one of the payments as heretofore provided for a period of sixty days shall work a forfeiture of all payments made and all rights under the contract; provided that the purchaser of any lot may pay full price before the same is due.

24. No tax shall be assessed by any town government against any town lot unsold by the commission, and no tax levied against a lot sold as herein provided shall constitute a lien on the same until the purchase price thereof has been fully paid.

25. No law or ordinance shall be passed by any town which interferes with the enforcement of or is in conflict with the constitution or laws of said nation or of the United States, or in conflict with this agreement, and all persons in such towns shall be subject to such laws.

26. Said commission shall be authorized to locate a cemetery within a suitable distance from each town site, not to exceed 20 acres; and when any town shall have paid into the United States Treasury for the benefit of the said nation $10 per acre therefor, such town shall be entitled to a patent for the same, as herein provided for titles to allottees, and shall dispose of same at reasonable prices in suitable lots for burial purposes, the proceeds derived therefrom to be applied by the town government to the proper improvement and care of said cemetery.

27. No charge or claim shall be made against the Muscogee or Creek Nation by the United States for the expenses of surveying and platting the lands and town site, or for grading, appraising, and allotting the land, or for appraising and disposing of the town lots as herein provided.

28. There shall be set apart and exempted from appraisement and sale, in the towns, lots upon which churches and parsonages are now built and occupied, not to exceed 50 feet front and 150 feet deep for each church and parsonage. Such lots shall be used only for churches and parsonages, and when they cease to be so used, shall revert to the members of the nation, to be disposed of as other town lots.

29. Said commission shall have prepared correct and proper plats of each town, and file one in the clerk's office of the United States district court for the district in which the town is located, one with the executive of the nation, and one with the Secretary of the Interior, to be approved by him before the same shall take effect.

30. A settlement numbering at least 300 inhabitants, living within a radius of one-half mile at the time of the signing of this agreement, shall constitute a town within the meaning of this agreement. Congress may by law provide for the government of the said towns.

CLAIMS.

31. All claims, of whatever nature, including the "Loyal Creek Claim" made under article 4 of the treaty of 1866, and the "Self Emigration Claim," under article 12 of the treaty of 1866, which the Muscogee or Creek Nation, or individuals thereof, may have against the United States, or any claim which the United States may have against the said nation, shall be submitted to the Senate of the United States as a board of arbitration; and all such claims against the United States shall be presented within one year from the date hereof, and within two years from the date hereof the Senate of the United States shall make final determination of said claim; and in the event that any moneys are awarded to the Muscogee or Creek Nation, or individuals thereof, by the United States, provision shall be made for the immediate payment of the same by the United States.

JURISDICTION OF COURTS.

32. The United States courts now existing, or that may hereafter be created in the Indian Territory, shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all controversies growing out of the title, ownership, occupation, or use of real estate in the territory occupied by the Muscogee or Creek Nation, and to try all persons charged with homicide, embezzlement, bribery, and embezzlement hereafter committed in the territory of said nation, without reference to race or citizenship of the person or persons charged with any such crime; and any citizen or officer of said nation charged with any such crime shall be tried and, if convicted, punished as though he were a citizen or officer of the United States; and the courts of said nation shall retain all the jurisdiction which they now have, except as herein transferred to the courts of the United States.

ENACTMENTS OF NATIONAL COUNCIL.

33. No act, ordinance, or resolution of the council of the Muscogee or Creek Nation in any manner affecting the land of the nation, or of individuals thereof (except appropriations for the regular and necessary expenses of the government of the said nation), or the rights of any person to employ any kind of labor, or the rights of any person who have taken or may take the oath of allegiance to the United States, shall be of any validity until approved by the President of the United States. When such act, ordinance, or resolution passed by the council of said nation shall be approved by the executive thereof, it shall then be the duty of the national secretary of said nation to forward same to the President of the United States, duly certified and sealed, who shall, within thirty days after receipt thereof, approve or disapprove the same, and said act, ordinance, or resolution, when so approved, shall be published in at least two newspapers having a bona fide circulation throughout the territory occupied by said nation, and when disapproved shall be returned to the executive of said nation.

MISCELLANEOUS.

34. Neither the town lots nor the allotment of land of any citizen of the Muscogee or Creek Nation shall be subjected to any debt contracted by him prior to the date of his patent.

35. All payments herein provided for shall be made, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, into the United States Treasury, and shall be for the benefit of the citizens of the Muscogee or Creek Nation. All payments hereafter to be made to the members of the said nation shall be paid directly to each individual member by a bonded officer of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, which officer shall be required to give strict account for such disbursements to the Secretary.

37. The United States agrees to maintain strict laws in the territory of said nation against the introduction, sale, barter, or giving away of liquors and intoxicants of any kind or quality.

38. All citizens of said nation, when the tribal government shall cease, shall become possessed of all the rights and privileges of citizens of the United States.

39. This agreement shall in no wise affect the provisions of existing treaties between the Muscogee or Creek Nation and the United States, except in so far as it is inconsistent therewith.

40. This agreement shall be binding on the United States when ratified by Congress, and on the Muscogee or Creek Nation, party hereto, when ratified by the national council of said nation.

In witness whereof, the said commissioners do hereunto affix their names at Muscogee, Ind. T., this the 27th day of September, 1897.

HENRY L. DAWES, Chairman.
TAMS BIXBY, Acting Chairman.
FRANK C. ARMSTRONG,
ARCHIBALD S. MCKENNON,
A. B. MONTGOMERY,
Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes.
ALLISON L. AYLESWORTH,
Acting Secretary.
PLEASANT PORTER, Chairman.
JOSEPH MINGO,
DAVID M. HODGE,
GEORGE A. ALEXANDER,
ROLAND (his x mark) BROWN,
WILLIAM A. SAPULPA,
CONCHARTY (his x mark) MICCO,
Muscogee or Creek Commission.
J. H. LYNCH, Secretary.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to amend the amendment on page 29 by striking out lines 17, 18, and 19, except the word "the" at the end of line 19, and inserting what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29 it is proposed to amend the amendment reported by the committee by striking out lines 17, 18, and 19, except the word "the" at the end of line 19, as follows:

That the following agreement, made by the commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, between the Government of the United States and the governments of—

And insert:

That the following agreement, concluded by the United States commissioner and the commissioners representing—

So as to read:

That the following agreement, concluded by the United States commissioner and the commissioners representing the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes or nations of Indians on the 23d day of April, 1897, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In lines 24 and 25, on page 29, I move to strike out from the committee amendment the words, "according to their respective laws on the subject."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. On page 29, line 25 of the amendment, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted after the last word "that."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment after the last word "that," in line 25, on page 29, by inserting:

The respective executives of said tribes are hereby authorized and directed to make public proclamation that said amended agreement shall be voted on at their next election, or at any special election to be called by such executive for the purpose of voting on said agreement, and.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to call the attention of the Senator in charge of this bill to the fact that the bill repeals these Indian laws and still goes on and refers to them and gives authority to act under them. For instance, section 27 repeals all Indian laws of every sort and description, and yet in section 28, after striking out some of the Indian laws, it provides that the Indians are qualified to vote under their tribal laws if they wish to vote. There is great confusion as to when the laws are out and when they are in.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, the bill, beginning with section 28, provides for the submission of the agreement which has heretofore been made between the Dawes Commission and the Indian tribes and for a settlement of all of these difficulties. The bill before us, on page 28, looks to a disposition of all of these questions by the Government of the United States. The Indians have not ratified this agreement. Their agents made the agreement with the Dawes Commission, and this provision of section 28 is that in case they do ratify the agreement, then the terms of the agreement shall supersede the others and shall be enforced; but, if it is not ratified, then the provisions of the bill before section 28 shall become the law and be operative in that Territory. That reconciles the apparent discrepancy pointed out by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. PETTUS. I can not see how the law is to be enforced. First, it is absolutely repealed, and then it is proposed to enforce it for various other purposes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. If the Senator will examine the bill, he will notice that section 27 does not go into force until the tribe ratifies the agreement which follows section 28, and therefore the laws will not be repealed if the Indians ratify the agreement.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is an amendment to be offered in line 11.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting, after the word "same," in line 11, on page 30, the words "which said amended agreement is as follows, to wit."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. On page 31, line 9, of the amendment of the committee, I move to strike out the words "(except the Choctaw freedmen)."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will state that they are taken care of in another place.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. On page 33, line 1, of the committee amendment, after the word "Choctaw," I move to insert "and Chickasaw;" in line 3, after the word "Choctaw," to insert "and Chickasaw;" in line 4, after the word "Choctaws," to insert "and Chickasaws;" in the same line, after the word "same," to strike out "and not affect the value of the allotments to the Chickasaws;" and also in line 6, after the word "Choctaw," to insert the words "and Chickasaw."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. How will it then read?

The SECRETARY. The amendment as proposed to be amended, beginning in line 25, on page 32, will then read as follows:

Provided further, That the lands allotted to the Choctaw and Chickasaw freedmen are to be deducted from the portion to be allotted under this agreement to the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribe so as to reduce the allotment to the Choctaws by the value of the same.

That the said Choctaw and Chickasaw freedmen who may be entitled to allotments of 40 acres each shall be entitled each to land equal in value to 40 acres of the average land of the two nations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In line 24, on page 33, of the amendment of the committee, after the word "Choctaw," I move to insert "and Chickasaw."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In line 17, on page 34, after the word "Choctaw," I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting "and Chickasaw."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the amendment was continued to the end of line 16, on page 44.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In line 12, page 44, I move to strike out the word "thereunto" and insert "thereunder."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the amendment was resumed and continued to the end of line 21, on page 45.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest that it was agreed that the word "all" should be inserted in line 4, page 45, before the word "lessees."

Mr. PETTIGREW. I make that motion.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, page 45, before the word "lessees," it is proposed to insert "all;" so as to read "all lessees shall pay," etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the amendment was continued to the end of line 9, on page 50.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suggest that what is printed as section 39 ought to be stricken out.

Mr. PETTIGREW. If it is not objected to, I move that we pass over that part of the amendment until we finish the reading of the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. From line 10, on page 50, to line 16, on page 51.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes; that is the only controverted question there is, I think.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. At any rate, the word "Sec." and the figures "32" ought to go out.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I make that motion.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, page 50, it is proposed to strike out "Sec. 32."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the amendment was continued to the end of line 5, on page 53.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to strike out the paragraph at the top of page 53. We provide another way of ratifying the agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WARREN in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the top of page 53 it is proposed to strike out the following:

This agreement shall be binding on the United States when ratified by Congress and on each tribe or nation party hereto when ratified by the constituted authorities of that tribe or nation according to their respective laws on the subject.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the amendment was continued to the end of line 16, on page 54.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to strike out, on page 54, line 1, beginning with the word "following," all of line 1 after the first "the," all of line 2, and all of line 3 down to the last "the," and to insert in place of it "agreement concluded by the United States commissioners and the commissioners representing."

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, on page 54, line 1, to strike out "following agreement, made by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, between the Government of the United States and the governments of," and insert "agreement concluded by the United States commissioners and the commissioners representing," so as to read:

That the agreement concluded by the United States commissioners and the commissioners representing the Muscogee or Creek tribes, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the amendment was continued to line 16, on page 54.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to insert after the word "same," in line 16, the words "which agreement as amended is as follows, to wit," so as to read:

But if said agreement is not accepted by said tribe, or nation, within six months after the passage of this act, then in that event this act shall be in full force and effect as to the same; which agreement as amended is as follows, to wit.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the amendment was continued to line 9, on page 65.

TWELFTH AND SUBSEQUENT CENSUSES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4545) to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

Mr. QUAY. I rise to a privileged question. I present the report of the committee of conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill and ask that it be read.

Mr. TURPIE. I offer an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. QUAY. That will be in order after the conference report is disposed of.

Mr. TURPIE. At the end of line 13, on page 8, I move to insert:

But not more than two-thirds of the supervisors and enumerators provided for in this act shall be members of the same political party.

I ask the particular attention of the honorable Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received in a moment, after the conference report is disposed of.

Mr. TURPIE. I did not know there was a conference report pending.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. QUAY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9008) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 7, 14, 16, and 19.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 6, 13, 15, 18, and 24, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "One hundred thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "one hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "thirteen million eight hundred thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "For experimental rural free delivery, including pay of carriers, horse-hire allowance, supplies, and mechanical appliances, $150,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 11 and 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the amended paragraph, lines 6 to 12, inclusive, page 6 of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For rental or purchase of canceling machines, $100,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "four hundred and twenty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And provided further, That hereafter the Vice-President, Members and Members-elect of and Delegates and Delegates-elect to Congress shall have the privilege of sending free through the mails, and under their frank, any mail matter to any Government official or to any person, correspondence, not exceeding 3 ounces in weight, upon official or departmental business."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "fifteen" inserted by said amendment insert the word "thirty;" and in line 7, page 12, of the bill, after the word "inspectors," insert the words "and clerks;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment after the word "postage," in line 5 thereof; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 5. That a commission consisting of the chairmen of the Committees on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate and House of Representatives and three members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker, is hereby created to investigate the question whether or not excessive prices are paid to the railroad companies for the transportation of the mails and as compensation for postal-car service, and all sources of revenue and all expenditures of the postal service, and rates of postage upon all postal matter."

"Said commission is authorized to employ experts to aid in the work of inquiry and examination, also to employ a clerk and stenographer and such other clerical assistance as may be necessary, said experts and clerks to be paid such compensation as the said commission may deem just and reasonable."

"The Postmaster-General shall detail, from time to time, such officers and employees as may be requested by said commission in its investigation."

"For the purposes of the investigation, said commission is authorized to send for persons and papers, and, through the chairman of the commission or the chairman of any subcommittee thereof, to administer oaths and to examine witnesses and papers respecting all matters pertaining to the duties of said commission, and to sit during the recess of Congress."

"Said commission shall, on or before February 1, 1899, make report to Congress, which report shall embrace the testimony and evidence taken in the course of the investigation; also the conclusions reached by said commission on the several subjects examined and any recommendations said commission may see proper to make by bill or otherwise with the view of correcting any abuses or deficiencies that may be found to exist."

"The sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the necessary expenses of said commission, such payments to be made on the certificate of the chairman of said commission."

"Any vacancy occurring in the membership of said commission by resignation or otherwise shall be filled by the presiding officer of the Senate or House, respectively, according as the vacancy occurs in the Senate or House representation on said committee."

And the Senate agree to the same.

M. S. QUAY,
W. B. ALLISON,
R. F. PETTIGREW,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
E. F. LOUD,
GEO. W. SMITH,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish that the last amendment as agreed to may be read once more, the one about the commission.

Mr. QUAY. I will state before it is read, in explanation of the apparent changes—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Perhaps the Senator will explain the matter.

Mr. QUAY. The subjects of the investigation are the subjects indicated in the Senate amendment originally. The machinery for the investigation is taken pretty nearly from the Loud resolution, which came over from the House. The only practical changes beyond those are that it is directed that the commission shall be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate and the Speaker of the House.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The commission is to consist of how many?

Mr. QUAY. It is to consist of the chairmen of the two Post-Office committees and three members of the Senate and three members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. GORMAN. Appointed by the presiding officer?

Mr. QUAY. They are to be appointed by the presiding officers of the two Houses, whereas the Senate amendment left them to be selected practically by the Senate and by the House. We also made a specific appropriation of $20,000 for the expenses of the commission, it having been indicated to the committee of conference that the contingent fund of the Senate at least would not be sufficient.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, in explaining the report, how the clause now stands in regard to canceling machines?

Mr. QUAY. The House conferees receded. It stands as passed by the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. That clause was stricken out?

Mr. QUAY. On the clause regarding population the House conferees receded and the proviso was withdrawn, and the proviso dependent on that clause was also stricken out.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. With regard to the commission,

I understand that it is to consist of four members on the part of the Senate and four on the part of the House.

Mr. QUAY. That is my recollection. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think it had better be read.

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the first paragraph of section 5 from the conference report, as follows:

SEC. 5. That a commission consisting of the chairmen of the Committees on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate and House of Representatives and three members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker, is hereby created to investigate the question whether or not excessive prices are paid to the railroad companies for the transportation of the mails and as compensation for postal-car service, and all sources of revenue and all expenditures of the postal service, and rates of postage upon all postal matter.

Mr. QUAY. The Loud resolution commences at this point, with the machinery.

The Secretary read the remainder of the section, as follows:

Said commission is authorized to employ experts to aid in the work of inquiry and examination; also to employ a clerk and stenographer and such other clerical assistance as may be necessary, said experts and clerks to be paid such compensation as the said commission may deem just and reasonable.

The Postmaster-General shall detail, from time to time, such officers and employees as may be requested by said commission in its investigation.

For the purposes of the investigation said commission is authorized to send for persons and papers, and through the chairman of the commission or the chairman of any subcommittee thereof to administer oaths and to examine witnesses and papers respecting all matters pertaining to the duties of said commission, and to sit during the recess of Congress.

Said commission shall, on or before February 1, 1899, make report to Congress, which report shall embrace the testimony and evidence taken in the course of the investigation; also the conclusions reached by said commission on the several subjects examined, and any recommendations said commission may see proper to make by bill or otherwise with the view of correcting any abuses or deficiencies that may be found to exist.

The sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the necessary expenses of said commission, such payments to be made on the certificate of the chairman of said commission.

Any vacancy occurring in the membership of said commission by resignation or otherwise shall be filled by the presiding officer of the Senate or House, respectively, according as the vacancy occurs in the Senate or House representation on said committee.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania what provision was made as to free rural delivery. How does that provision stand?

Mr. QUAY. Rural free delivery is provided for by an appropriation of $150,000, applied to experimental rural free delivery. It is practically what was reported by the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Appropriations to the full committee except that the amount is reduced $50,000. As it came from the House to the Senate the amount appropriated was $300,000, according to my recollection. We reduced it to $150,000 and provided that it should be experimental. We insert the word "experimental," so that it leaves it in the bill as a continuing experiment instead of an established factor in our postal system.

Mr. GORMAN. And that is an increase of $100,000 over the present appropriation.

Mr. QUAY. Yes; over the appropriation of last year. But it is a reduction of 50 per cent upon the House appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I now ask that the existing order be temporarily laid aside, so that we may complete the consideration of House bill 8381, which we have been considering during the morning hour.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to inquire of the Senator from South Dakota about what length of time he anticipates will be consumed in the consideration of the bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. About thirty minutes.

Mr. CARTER. I consent to laying the unfinished business, the census bill, aside not to exceed one hour.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. CARTER. Laid aside not to exceed one hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Laid aside not to exceed one hour in order to continue the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8381) for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from South Dakota to the numbering of the subdivisions of the amended section which is pending. There is no subdivision No. 33, but there are two No. 34.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think that is a matter not at all important. We can change the numbering in the original agreement.

I move to strike out subdivision No. 40, beginning in line 21, on page 67, as we provide another method of ratifying this agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out subdivision No. 40, on page 67, as follows:

40. This agreement shall be binding on the United States when ratified by Congress, and on the Muscogee or Creek Nation, party hereto, when ratified by the national council of said nation.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee as it has been amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to, with the exception of the part reserved, beginning in line 10, on page 50.

Mr. BATE. I inquire if the reading of the bill has been concluded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill is concluded.

Mr. BATE. I have an amendment which I wish to propose, to come in after section 26, on page 29, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, after section 26, it is proposed to insert:

That in all suits or proceedings under or growing out of this act, or in any manner arising therefrom, touching personal and property rights, there shall be a right of appeal to the Court of Claims, the circuit courts of appeal, and to the Supreme Court of the United States in favor of any party to such suit or proceeding under the rules and regulations governing appeals from inferior courts to circuit courts of appeal and to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Now, I ask that we turn back to the paragraph on page 50, the only paragraph which has been passed over in considering the bill.

The Secretary read the portion of the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs which had been passed over, as follows:

SEC. 32. That the following sum be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Chickasaw Nation of Indians, namely:

For arrears of interest at 5 per cent per annum, from December 31, 1840, to June 30, 1889, on $184,143.00 of the trust fund of the Chickasaw Nation erroneously dropped from the books of the United States prior to December 31, 1840, and restored December 27, 1887, by the award of the Secretary of the Interior, under the fourth article of the treaty of June 22, 1832, and for arrears of interest at 5 per cent per annum, from March 11, 1850, to March 8, 1890, on $56,021.49 of the trust fund of the Chickasaw Nation erroneously dropped from the books of the United States March 11, 1850, and restored December 27, 1887, by the award of the Secretary of the Interior, under the fourth article of the treaty of June 22, 1832, $558,520.54, to be placed to the credit of the Chickasaw Nation with the fund to which it properly belongs: Provided, That if there be any attorneys' fees to be paid out of same, on contract heretofore made and duly approved by the Secretary of the Interior, the same is authorized to be paid by him.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I regret, first, that I felt myself compelled to differ with the majority of the committee with reference to this item, the only item, I believe, on which there has been any difference in the committee which has not been composed or reconciled. Second, I regret that I am obliged to present my objections to this item in a Senate so thin that if a vote were taken upon it, the Senate would have no idea whatever in relation to the subject discussed. This item is for the payment of a large amount of interest to the Chickasaw Nation of Indians.

Mr. QUAY. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, does he not think it better that this bill should go over until tomorrow, when the Senate will probably be full and we shall be able to act more intelligently upon it?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am entirely indifferent about that.

This item is for $558,520.54, and it is the interest on a payment of principal which has been made to the Chickasaws of $240,000. So that the interest is nearly three times as much as the principal sum, which was paid by Congress upon a claim made by the Chickasaws and submitted to Congress and provided for in an appropriation bill.

It would take more of the time of the Senate to explain the subject thoroughly than I feel that I should be justified in occupying, but I want to say right here in the outset that if this was put upon the ground of a donation to the Chickasaw tribe of Indians in order to secure from them the ratification of this agreement, I might not stand here to oppose; but it is opening the door, and if it is to be followed as a precedent it will cost the Government more than $5,000,000 on these Indian claims where we have paid the principal by resolution of Congress, but have not paid the interest, and it is therefore that I deem it so important.

I deem it very important to secure the ratification of this agreement by the Chickasaws and Choctaws. I suppose that if they can get this claim, which they have been presenting for years, agreed to be paid in that agreement, they will ratify the agreement; but, Mr. President, it is not right, in my judgment, that Congress should pay it, certainly upon any other ground than as a donation or bonus to secure the ratification of this agreement.

Under treaty away back in 1832, when these Indians lived east of the Mississippi River, they were to have their lands sold and they were to be transported to a home which they selected in the Indian Territory, and which was given to them there. The cost of transporting them was to be paid out of the amount which the Government should pay them for the land.

That account was audited by the Treasury Department, and the balance was placed to their credit in a fund which the United States agreed to keep for them and to pay them interest upon. Afterwards they claimed that the United States had allowed items for the expense of transporting them, for the services of the parties who transported them, and for various other matters which ought not to have been allowed, and that claim, formally made perhaps for the first time in 1856, was carried along until it went to the Court of Claims by a reference of the Interior Department in 1883. Then, in 1890 or 1891, $240,000 was paid back to the Indians upon the finding of the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act.

There has never been any judgment in the Court of Claims. The case was referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act, and the court found that it was exceedingly difficult to decide it after fifty years had elapsed; that the testimony was voluminous, though not satisfactory in quality; but they would do the best they could with the case, and they advised that $240,000 be paid back to the Indians, they claiming that about $600,000 should be paid back to them. The Secretary of the Interior followed that with a recommendation that it should be done, and the Committee on Appropriations accepted, say in 1890, a portion of it, and referred back the other portion to the Secretary of the Interior, who reported that he thought that ought to be paid, too; and in 1891—if I have the years aright—the balance was paid.

So that Congress has paid back to these Indians $240,000, which they claim has been erroneously charged to them, and now they claim that they should have the interest upon this $240,000 from the time when the first settlement was made by the Government and the items charged against their account, which the Court of Claims thought on the whole ought not to be paid.

To show what difficulty they had with this case—and I venture to say right here that if it had been a case between white men, there would never have been any advice that the Government should pay anything; but the Indians get treated better in the Court of Claims and in Congress than do the white people, and I do not know but it is right they should—the Court of Claims stated:

Fifty years have passed since the first of these expenditures was made, and the last was made some years before the treaty of 1852. Many important events have occurred since then; the country had been convulsed by civil war; the officers having charge of the emigration are dead, or at least are not obtainable; no fraud is alleged or shown on their part; the Indians were to some extent cognizant at the time of what took place; the evidence on either side is necessarily scanty in substance, however full in volume; there is a strong probability of honesty in every such transaction, and there is also an inevitable waste. These considerations, with others which will occur to anyone who scans this voluminous record, induce us to eliminate any prima facie presumption, and forbid us from throwing upon either side the onus of meeting such a presumption. In fact, at this late day to allow the claimants to rest on their exceptions and to require of the Government proof that each of the hundreds of small items in the accounts represents an honest, economical, and legal disbursement would produce an immediate final decision adverse to the defendants, while a demand upon the claimant for proof of a dishonest, extravagant, or illegal disbursement in each instance would throw them out of court at the outset, without substantial investigation into their rights.

Then the Court of Claims went to work, guessed at the amount, and allowed as interest about a third of what the Indians claimed they ought to have.

This case stands on entirely different ground from what it would if a case against the Government had been tried under circumstances where the evidence could be produced, and where, after hearing, a judgment had been rendered against the United States. Of course the Secretary of the Interior, after an advice of that sort by the Court of Claims, felt bound to recommend that those payments should be made. So much for the way in which the principal was paid, because that has a great deal to do with the question whether we ought to pay interest upon it.

I suggest, in the first place, that the way in which this principal sum was paid, it having been personally investigated by the Court of Claims under the circumstances which I have detailed and under the statement which they made, which shows that they could only arrive at a settlement of this question by guesswork, as it were; and secondly, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, who felt—the facts having been reported to him by the Court of Claims and their advice having been given to him—that the Government ought to pay this, the payment of the principal under those circumstances furnishes no presumption that interest ought to be paid.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the amount?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The principal was $240,000 and the amount claimed for interest, and which is proposed to be paid by this bill, is $584,000.

But there is more than that to the case, Mr. President. The question whether the Government should pay interest or not is always a question of equity, and is not a question of law. It is said that this money was diverted away back in 1835, or thereabouts, from a trust fund; that if it had not been diverted there would have been interest paid to these Indians all along on that fund up to the present time, and that when the Government, being a trustee, diverts money from a trust fund, of course it is bound to pay interest. That is the claim that is set up here in behalf of those Indians. But still, Mr. President, interest is a question of equity, and the Court of Claims treated this interest question to some extent in this case. They said if it was a case between individuals interest ought to be paid. I quote the language of the court:

We conclude from our examination of the case that the fund of the Chickasaw Nation should be credited with the sum of $240,164.53. In an action between individuals interest also would be allowed, for the issue presented is one of unauthorized disbursement by a trustee of trust funds expressly stipulated to be held invested in interest-bearing securities.

I beg to say that the Court of Claims, as I read the treaty, state that pretty strong. The court continues:

We refrain, however, from expressing any opinion on this subject, as the question must necessarily be taken to the legislative department of the Government, which alone has power to grant relief, which will consider the equities of the case and which will decide whether it is one wherein the doctrine should be waived that, as the sovereign does no wrong and is ever ready and willing to pay just debts, the Government pays no interest.

There are some equities in this case which, as it seems to me, operate against any claim for the payment of this interest.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question for information, as he goes along?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Was there a diversion of an interest-bearing trust fund by the Government?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. A portion of it was never put into the Treasury as a trust fund and interest paid upon it; that is to say, as to a portion of it these expenses were deducted—and the Indians say erroneously deducted—before the money went into the trust fund technically; and as to the others—

Mr. SPOONER. The money would have been invested in a trust fund if it had not been erroneously deducted?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It would; but it never actually reached the condition of being a part of a fund as to which interest was paid, as a portion of it—$56,000 of it—was taken out of the fund on which interest had been paid.

Mr. SPOONER. As a matter of equity between the Government and the Indians?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think that cuts any figure. The Government took this money and invested it in certain State stocks of the State of Arkansas, the State of Tennessee, and possibly of another State. As is well known, those States defaulted on the interest away back in 1863, and the Government has been paying that interest ever since to those Indians, as I hold, without any legal obligation to do so. A trustee is not bound to guarantee the investment which he makes, so long as he exercises sound discretion.

It is said by the attorneys who pressed this claim that the Government agreed to keep the money invested in stocks which should pay interest, but it did not. This was the language:

The funds thence resulting, after the necessary expenses of surveying and selling, and other advances which may be made, are repaid to the United States, shall from time to time be invested in some secure stocks, redeemable within a period of not more than twenty years; and the United States will cause the interest arising therefrom annually to be paid to the Chickasaws.

There is nothing special about the agreement and the treaty which the Government made with reference to guaranteeing the investment and paying interest which justifies the claim that the Government in this case was under any obligation which an ordinary trustee would not be under, and, as I have said, a trustee does not either in law or in equity guarantee the continued soundness of the security in which he makes the investment of a trust fund.

Mr. LINDSAY. Did the Government use this money for its own purposes while it was acting as trustee?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No; I suppose not. The Government invested it, as I said, in certain State stocks and State bonds.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. And took all those over for Government account and assumed the debt itself.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think so.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think so. I know that within a year or two we have made a settlement with the State of Arkansas; but I do not want to go back to that old settlement. I do not myself think much of the settlement.

Mr. FRYE. Nor does anybody else.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But we made a settlement with the State of Arkansas in which they have accounted after a fashion in that settlement to the Government for the principal and the interest of the Arkansas bonds.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. And the Government agreed to it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes; and the Government agreed to it, and the interest on that amounted to $154,000, which the State of Arkansas has in some sense refunded to the United States within a year or two; but there were of Tennessee sizes $202,800; there were of Tennessee five-and-a-halves $66,666.66, and also $104,000, the principal amounting to $170,000. If anything has been paid on those, it has been paid since March 5, 1894. I do not think anything has been paid on them.

So, Mr. President, all along since 1862 the Government has assumed this investment, paid the interest to the Indians yearly, made good or were to make good to the fund the bonds which became worthless. In addition to all that, these Indians asked that we should pay them the interest on this doubtful claim away back to 1832, 1833, or 1834.

The Senator from Arkansas says that the State of Arkansas settled with the Government; that is to say, it has redeemed its bonds and the defaulted interest upon them; but one thing is very certain—the Government began to pay this interest when it was not receiving interest from these bonds, and as far back as 1862 appropriated for it every year, and nobody has reimbursed the Government for the interest upon the interest which it thus assumed and paid. If the Indians had claimed interest on a claim of this sort, running so far back into the past and adjudicated under the circumstances which I have mentioned, certainly the Government has a right to say that upon every payment for interest that it made to these Indians for the last thirty-five years there should be interest reckoned to-day upon the amount so paid out. There will be no claim that the State of Arkansas has done that or that the State of Tennessee has done it. There has been no reimbursement, as I understand it, by the State of Tennessee.

I said that the States began to default on these bonds in 1861. I find I was mistaken about it. The States defaulted on the bonds as far back as 1845, and in 1846 we first began to make the appropriations. The first one was "to make good the interest on investments in State stocks and bonds for various Indian tribes not yet paid by the States, to be reimbursed out of the interest when collected." That was $66,000, and so we went on year after year appropriating every year large amounts of money until finally I think we made some general appropriation.

Since 1879 we have made ten annual appropriations from the Chickasaw trust fund for interest due the Chickasaw national fund. So, from 1845 up to the present date we have been paying the interest on this fund when we were not receiving it from the securities in which it had been invested, and in any settlement made by the State of Arkansas there has been no allowance to the Government for the interest upon the interest which the Government has thus paid out. Take the very first item, where the Government appropriated for interest which the States were not paying, in 1846, $68,000. If you were to reckon the claim of the Government for interest upon that money the same as the Indians reckon their claim upon the Government for the interest on their trust fund, which they say was diverted, the Government would be entitled to two or three times the amount of the sum paid out in 1845 as interest.

Mr. President, I do not know that there is anything more to be said about this matter. The Senator from Arkansas and the chairman of the committee feel that the Government, by its action, is in some way pledged to the payment of this interest. I can not see it. It seems to me that a question whether we will pay interest on a claim must be a question of equity, and no matter if the interest arises by diversion of a trust fund or by failure to pay a debt when it is due and when we ought to pay it, it is always a question of equity, and in this case it seems to me the equities are overwhelmingly in favor of the Government. We will call the Arkansas bond question a settled one; but I venture to say, without having made any exact computation, that if the Government is to be made good for those bonds in which this was invested, and properly invested at the time, and upon which it has not received principal or interest, and is to be made good for interest upon the payments which it has advanced to these Indians, that they might have their interest year by year when the Government received no fund to turn over to them, there would be a very much larger claim on behalf of the Government as against this fund and against these Indians, equitably, than the amount which they set up here as claim for interest.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I will detain the Senate but a few moments. The facts in this case are so clear and so simple that they need no argument.

This is not a proposition to have the Government pay interest on a claim. In 1833 the Chickasaw Indians sold a large quantity of land east of the Mississippi River, and the Government got the money. By a treaty agreement made between the Chickasaws and the Government at that time the money was to be kept in the Treasury of the United States as a trust fund and the Government was to pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent on it. A short time afterwards, only a few years afterwards, the Chickasaws began to complain that there were misappropriations of the trust fund; that amounts of it were being used to pay debts for which they were not liable, but were the debts of the Government of the United States. They failed to get a settlement of this matter until a treaty was made in 1852, which provided that this matter should be investigated and looked into.

The question whether the Government had used this trust fund improperly was left to the Court of Claims. The Indians claimed that a very large amount had been thus misappropriated. The Government contended that there had been none. The court found that $240,000 had been thus used by the Government improperly. The Congress of the United States restored every dollar of that money to the trust fund. It was bearing interest before it was misappropriated; it has borne interest since it was restored, and in all conscience it must bear interest during the time the Government had the use of the money which it did not own and which belonged to the Chickasaw Nation.

Now, there was a part of this, as stated by the Senator from Connecticut, which had not gone distinctly into the trust fund at the time of the misappropriation; but, as was drawn out by the Senator from Wisconsin and as stated by the Senator from Connecticut, it would have been in the trust fund and would, by the express terms of the treaty have been bearing 5 per cent interest if it had not been so misappropriated; and for that reason even that part of it can not be considered in any sense interest on a claim. It is simply a proposition whether the Government of the United States will in good faith pay the interest which it solemnly agreed with these wards of the nation it would pay to them for their money which the Government has used during all this time.

The fact that the interest amounts to $558,000 on a claim of $240,000—the size of the sum—is merely a badge of the enormity of the wrong of which the Government is guilty in holding out the $240,000 from the use of these Indians for so great a length of time. If it had been restored in one year the claim for interest would have been small, or if it had been restored in ten years it would have been infinitesimal compared with what it is now; but when they held this amount, some of it from 1835 or 1840 down to 1890, the Government certainly can not complain because its own stipulated interest at 5 per cent has accrued in that time to be a larger amount than the principal, and there is nothing wrong in it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Is the amount now greater than would have been the sum that the Indians would have received if the Government had not misappropriated the money?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is not.

Mr. PETTIGREW. And there is no compound interest?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is not. It is simple interest all the time, and the Indians might have had the use of some of this identical money fifty years ago, and the Government would have been responsible for interest on it. The Government has failed to pay interest on interest. It has merely allowed simple interest for this trust fund which it had in its own hands all these years. I can not understand how any man can hesitate for a moment to recognize the justice and equity of this matter.

The Secretary of the Interior himself found in favor of the Indians. Hesitating somewhat about it, he referred the matter to the Court of Claims, and while the Court of Claims did not report in favor of all that the Indians claimed, or nearly all that the Indians claimed, that court, a court of the United States, did find that the money was due these people, and the Secretary so reported. It seems to me there should have been no hesitation to have provided at that time for the payment of the interest justly due on the trust fund.

These are the simple facts in the case, and I do not propose to discuss it any further.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I will state, in addition, that this claim has been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior very recently, and has been recommended by him every time it has been referred to him, four or five times. I agree with the statement of facts as made by the Senator from Arkansas. I do not regard this as an ordinary interest claim. I think the Congress has always refused to pay an ordinary interest claim. I know the Committee on Indian Affairs has always refused to recommend the payment of such claims, but in this case the money was in the hands of the Government as a trust fund and we diverted it.

We decided that we diverted it, and we afterwards paid the principal to these people. If we had not diverted it, each year we would have paid this interest up to the time when we paid the principal. The Indians would have got the money year by year, and not only had the use of it, but, if they chose, had the interest upon the interest which now we do not give them. It seems to me it is entirely different from an ordinary claim for interest and is a most equitable claim. For that reason I voted to put it in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to that part of the amendment on page 50, beginning with line 10, down to line 16, on page 51, which was passed over.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment to come in after section 27.

The SECRETARY. Following the two additional sections which were inserted after section 27, it is proposed to insert:

Any person or corporation that is a party in any proceeding before any commission or court which involves a claim to any right or privilege arising under this act or to the right of citizenship in any tribe of Indians to which this act is applicable shall have the right to an appeal from the final ruling or judgment of such court or tribunal to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, and from such court to the Supreme Court of the United States, under the rules and regulations governing appeals in other cases.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, before a vote is taken, I wish to enter my protest. I think it is doing a very marked injustice to the Five Civilized Tribes. They have rights that the Government of the United States guaranteed unto them. It has guaranteed unto them those rights in the most solemn and sacred manner by treaties, and this bill violates those treaties. We have for the last few years, especially since the establishment of the Dawes Commission, I think in every Congress, more or less violated the treaties. This, however, seems to be the consummation of it, the finality of it. Let me call attention to section 27, referred to by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]:

That on and after the passage of this act the laws of the various tribes or nations of Indians shall not be enforced at law or in equity by the courts of the United States in the Indian Territory.

That sweeps all the laws of the Indians away, all their courts of justice, all their juries, all their local officers, and all the rights they have under the treaties which they have been given and guaranteed by the Government of the United States. Treaties which were entered into solemnly, which have been approved by the country, and which have lasted now ever since 1830 and 1835. Let me just read a line of one. I do not want to make a speech here. I know it will be useless. The treaty of 1835 provided:

But they—

The United States—

shall secure to the Cherokee Nation the right by their national councils, to make and carry into effect all such laws as they may deem necessary for the government and protection of the persons and property within their own country belonging to their people or such persons as have connected themselves with them.

This is but a specimen of other treaties, and shows that in the very treaty itself we gave them the right to make their own laws, to govern themselves, to establish their courts, and to carry on their institutions, which they have done—their schools, their colleges, their churches, their hospitals, and everything required by social as well as political necessities. They have those institutions there, and they have them in fine style, sir, in acceptable form, and they are being conducted so as to be beyond just criticism.

Now, then, we go along and encroach upon them inch by inch, Congress after Congress, until at last you have got to the main redoubt, and here it is destroyed. It is swept away in the twenty-seventh section and is all gone. I for one, sir, desire to enter my protest against it from a high moral standpoint, as well as a legal and political standpoint; and when I have said that, I have said all I care to say, for I know no argument, no recitation of historic facts, the reading of solemn treaties, nor anything else, under existing conditions, will stop the passage by the Senate of this House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the bill be printed as passed by the Senate, showing the amendments of the Senate and all in regular order.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have no objection to that.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. JONES of Arkansas, and Mr. PLATT of Connecticut were appointed.

TWELFTH AND SUBSEQUENT CENSUSES.

Mr. CARTER. Let the unfinished business be proceeded with. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4545) to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri the amendment which I send to the desk as meeting the objections urged by him yesterday afternoon to the first or second paragraph of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that there is an amendment pending offered by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CARTER. Then I withdraw the amendment for the time being.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 13, on page 8, it is proposed to insert:

But not more than two-thirds of the supervisors and enumerators provided for in this act shall be members of the same political party.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, I hope this amendment may be acceptable to the honorable Senator from Montana who has charge of the bill. Our census literature is very expensive and very voluminous. It ought, therefore, to be the most true, the most real, the most genuine in character. The people of the United States ought not to be placed in a position where they will have any suspicion that the computations were made for partisan purposes. The readers of the census ought to have the assurance that it is a true and authentic account of the matter presented; that it is true they ought to believe, and they ought to have no reason for believing otherwise. It will be a great reinforcement in the way of authenticity and veracity to have mixed appointments of the officers as provided in the amendment. I therefore hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I have no objection to urge to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. After the word "act," in line 5, page 3, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After the word "act," in line 5, page 3, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That in addition to the director, assistant director, and five chief statisticians, not to exceed twenty-five persons shall be appointed in or in connection with the Census Office prior to January 1, 1899.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is that moved by the Senator from Missouri? Mr. COCKRELL. It is not. The Senator from Montana has not offered the other amendment about the disbursing clerk.

Mr. CARTER. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that certain members of the committee thought it unwise to offer the amendment contemplated relative to the disbursing officer which it was expected to offer at this point.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall certainly move to strike that out. There is no earthly use for a paymaster to pay twenty-five or thirty men for a year or two.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask to have the amendment stated again.

Mr. COCKRELL. Read the amendment again. Is it a proviso or an addition?

Mr. CARTER. It is a proviso.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Twenty-five in addition?

Mr. CARTER. In addition to the director, assistant director, and five statisticians.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is 7, and 25 and 7 make 32.

Mr. CARTER. Thirty-two in all. That is the limit up to January 1, 1899.

Mr. CHANDLER. Not exceeding thirty-two in all prior to next January. I hope the Senator from Missouri will deem that generally satisfactory. I care nothing about the disbursing clerk, but it seems to me that that force will be necessary, and I am quite willing to agree that no more will be necessary.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it is ample; and if they will go to work and do what they ought to do they can be usefully employed. I am satisfied of that. They can facilitate the rapid taking of the census very greatly if they will prepare all the necessary instructions and the blanks that will be required and let them be published. Let those in regard to agriculture be published in the agricultural journals and in newspapers throughout the country. They will all do that. As to statistics of mortality, etc., let them be published in the medical journals and go through the hands of all the doctors and surgeons in the country. A more perfect census can be taken if this is done, and I shall accept this in lieu of the amendment I offered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am very glad the Senator does accept it. I desire to say to him that I have no doubt that all that will be required of the farmer can be stated on one page, in one circular, and the farmers in that way can be notified what books of account it will be advisable for them to keep, beginning next January, for the year, and these instructions can be printed and circulated. A million of them would cost very little.

Mr. COCKRELL. They ought to be circulated and they ought to be printed in the papers.

Mr. CHANDLER. As the Senator says, they will be printed in the agricultural newspapers and various other journals. Then as to the manufacturing industries, an account of which is to be taken from July 1 of next year to July 1, 1900, there will be six months in which to give out the scheme for this, and very much will be gained by allowing this preparation to be made, which I am satisfied can be made with a force of thirty-two persons.

Mr. COCKRELL. I now move, on page 3, to strike out, after the amendment just inserted, the closing part of line 5, down to section 3. I believe it is.

Mr. CHANDLER. The whole of the remainder of the section. The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, after the amendment just adopted, beginning with "the disbursing clerk," on page 3, line 5, down to and including the word "thereof," in line 16, and insert:

The disbursing clerk of the Department of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, to disburse all moneys now and hereafter appropriated as provided in this act for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses. Before entering upon his duties as said disbursing clerk, he shall give bond, additional to the bond already given by him as disbursing clerk of the Department of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, in the sum of $25,000, which bond shall be conditioned that the said officer shall render a true and faithful account to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury quarter yearly of all moneys and properties which shall be received by him by virtue of his office, with sureties to be approved by the Solicitor of the Treasury. Such bonds shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be by him put in suit upon any breach of the conditions thereof. And that for and in consideration of the additional responsibilities and duties imposed upon him, and for the reason that he shall be required to give an additional bond in connection with this office, he shall receive an annual compensation of $1,000 additional to that received by him as disbursing clerk of the Department of the Interior, the same to be paid from the appropriations herein and hereafter provided for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

Mr. COCKRELL. This clerk is the disbursing officer of the Interior Department, and is already a bonded officer, familiar with paying employees, and all that. He can keep the rolls and make these payments a great deal better, more promptly, and in every way with less difficulty in the adjustment of the accounts than any new disbursing officer, and it will be found to be safer in the end. I hope the amendment will be accepted.

Mr. FRYE. Neither would he have so many to pay as an army paymaster.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; not near so many.

Mr. CARTER. I have no warrant from the committee to authorize me to accept the amendment, but I suggest that the Chair take the sense of the Senate upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out, in line 11, page 2, the words "one disbursing clerk."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I likewise suggest that the words "disbursing clerk," in line 21, page 2, be stricken out. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee, not perhaps relative to anything in particular under discussion. Is there any attempt made in this bill to provide that the census shall be published in full at any time during the decade for which it is taken? I was a member of the committee which framed the last census bill. We thought we had provided to that end. The years have rolled by. The publication is not yet fully completed, and in many respects the fruits of the last census are utterly useless for any practical purposes.

Mr. CARTER. I will state to the Senator from Minnesota that the more prompt publication of the census reports was a matter of serious consideration with the committee from the very inception of its work on this bill. In order to attain the end, and the very desirable end, suggested by the Senator from Minnesota, it will be observed that we confine the decennial census proper to inquiries concerning four subjects only, that is, population, vital statistics, mortality, manufactures and agriculture. It is believed that by thus confining the work to the limits to which such work may be confined in the acquisition of information by house to house canvass, we can secure the publication of the reports on these four subjects within two years at least from the date of the enumeration.

Mr. DAVIS. I am very glad to learn that the matter has been considered in that way. I became convinced during the progress of taking the last census that the fault in the preceding bill was the endeavor to cover too much ground and obtain statistics upon too many topics; that an infinite process of subdivision and matter of a comparatively irrelevant character were provided for.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I have examined the pending bill carefully, and with one or two amendments, it seems to me it will become an admirably constructed measure. I for one desire to congratulate the members of the Senate Census Committee for the skill which they have displayed in preparing for the work of the next census. I think, as stated by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] yesterday, and as explained by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] in his very able speech, that it is highly important that the foundations at least of the work of taking the Twelfth Census should be laid immediately. Much of the trouble which has been referred to by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] arose from the delays and changes which took place after the plans for the last census had been carefully mapped out.

Many of the forms were thrown away after they were printed and new forms published. Certain new branches of inquiry were provided for by statute after all the main work of the census had been planned and to some extent entered upon. All this should be avoided in connection with the Twelfth Census. I believe that anyone who examines this bill and compares it with previous census bills is bound to be struck with the marked improvement which it exhibits.

Mr. CARTER. I move that on page 12, line 4, the word "or" be stricken out immediately preceding the word "interpreter," and after the word "interpreter" to insert "special agent or other employee."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In regard to the time which the census is to take, the Senator from Montana gave two years within which to publish it. I say this work can be done in a much shorter time, and it ought to be done in a much shorter time. We do not want the census books published eight and ten years after the date at which the information is obtained and the data given.

With proper arrangements and the assignment of competent officials we ought to have the returns of population and all connected with population, mortality, and all that in a very few months after the 1st day of June, 1900. I do hope that the Committee on the Census will see that in the administration of the work there is absolute promptness and celerity used by the officers and that they have everything prepared in advance, because they will be severely censured if they do not have them prepared and if we do not have the census taken at an earlier date than the last census, which is not yet published.

Mr. MONEY. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. My recollection is that in the last census the agents who compounded the special statistics used almost altogether foreign terms to express, for instance, space or measure, weight, coins, and so on. I ask the Senator from Montana if that is true or not, with a view of offering an amendment that everything submitted by the agents of the census shall be in the English language, and, as far as coins are concerned, in the American language. As a matter of fact, they load up things here with foreign terms that nobody understands. There is no man in the Senate who does not have to go to the dictionary to read one of them, and then has to go to it perhaps a dozen times before he gets through reading one article. As we are publishing the census reports for the benefit of the American people, I do not want anything published in a foreign tongue. I ask the Senator if he has any recollection whether that has been the custom heretofore?

Mr. CARTER. I believe the preparation of the schedules heretofore has been left to the discretion of the Director or the Superintendent of the Census, subject to supervision by the Secretary of the Interior. I am not aware of the unnecessary employment of foreign terms in connection with the preparation of the schedules. It is true that in the electrical work many new and very strange terms were employed of necessity, because the rapid development of knowledge on that subject really led to a system of piracy from all the languages, particularly the Greek language, which I believe contributed rather copiously to the technical terms required in that particular science.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator will pardon me; I did not allude to those terms which are purely technical, but I alluded to common terms. Take, for instance, hectoliter and all that sort of stuff used instead of the American terms or English terms; take francs, marks, groschen, and I do not know what else for dollar, and meters instead of yards and miles, and so on. I mean to say that whenever there is a term in the English language which may carry the idea we should provide that these agents are not to use any other. If they want to say so many hectoliters, or so many meters, or anything of that sort, let them put with it the same term in English, reduced to its English value.

Mr. CARTER. I think that unquestionably ought to obtain as the rule of action, and I have no doubt the director of the census would so prescribe the rule.

Mr. MONEY. I want to offer as an amendment "that all terms expressing weight, measure, distance, or value shall be expressed in terms of the English language as spoken in this country." I allude now to that because we are using English pounds very frequently in the estimates and in the tables. I offer that amendment to the Senate because these books are published for the common American citizen to read, and he can not read them in a foreign tongue. I have found that these agents generally are very proud to display their knowledge of foreign terms by using them instead of the plain terms of their own language for their own people. I move that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The SECRETARY. Insert at the proper place the following:

All terms expressing weight, measure, distance, or value shall be expressed in terms of the English language as spoken in this country.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the Senator from Montana if he will accept that amendment?

Mr. CARTER. I see no objection, if there is any real necessity existing for the amendment suggested by the Senator from Mississippi. I suggest that it be inserted after the word "reports," line 1, page 18.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment as read will be inserted at the place indicated. The amendment is agreed to, in the absence of objection.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, if there is no other amendment pending, I wish to offer one:

I presume it is generally recognized that the first object of a census is with a view to the apportionment for the representation of the States in the House of Representatives, and there should be in every well-taken census some means of ascertaining all the facts necessary with reference to the qualification of voters, so as to be able to ascertain the exact number of voters and the number of any classes that may be excluded from representation, not only in every State, but in every county. I am not sure but that it ought to go further and give it in every division of a county. The last census that was taken was sadly deficient in this respect. During the past summer I entered upon some examination with reference to the last Presidential election and found a very great lack of proper information in the census of 1890. I hope that that will be avoided in the next census.

I have not had time to elaborate the amendment, but I have drawn one hastily. Perhaps some one who has given the subject more consideration than I have will be able to enlarge upon it, but I offer the following, which I ask the Secretary to read, and I suggest that it come in after the word "aforesaid," in line 10, on page 16.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The SECRETARY. After the word "aforesaid," in line 10, page 16, insert:

There shall be a series of separate tables for each State, giving, by counties, the number of male persons below and above the age of 21 years, their color, whether native or foreign born, whether naturalized or not, and their literacy or illiteracy.

Mr. CARTER. The bill provides for this data with reference to counties.

Mr. PASCO. It does, but it makes no provision for arranging this information in tables by counties. I am not sure but that the amendment should go further and extend the tables so as to include the divisions of counties. However, the bill with the proposed amendment will be a great advance upon the last census, as that gave some of these details only by States, and it was of little or no value in making the investigations to find out the number of actual voters in each county or Congressional district.

Mr. CARTER. The bill provides as follows relative to the population schedule. I read from page 16, beginning at line 2:

The schedules relating to the population shall comprehend for each inhabitant the name, age, color, sex, conjugal condition, place of birth, and place of birth of parents, whether alien or naturalized, number of years in the United States, occupation, months employed, literacy, school attendance, and ownership of farms and homes.

I understand the Senator from Florida to desire by this amendment not to increase the information concerning the individuals.

Mr. PASCO. It is simply the arrangement of the desired information in tables by counties.

Mr. CARTER. I presume that probably could be accomplished in the course of tabulation. If, however, the operation of the amendment would lead to different geographical subdivisions of the census work from those that would be found advantageous in submitting territory to the jurisdiction of supervisors, it might lead to very great confusion in the work. For instance, we provide that not to exceed 300 supervisors shall be appointed. That will provide less than one supervisor for each Congressional district in the country. The enumeration districts or subdivisions shall comprise, as near as may be, 4,000 people.

The various districts over which the supervisors exercise control may not in all cases be advantageously adjusted to county lines. There may be, for instance, in the county of New York, there unquestionably will be, a number of supervisors in the same county. If it were required that we adjust the work of the supervisors exclusively and arbitrarily within county lines so as to get this particular class of information, I imagine it might greatly embarrass and increase the work of the census.

Mr. PASCO. I think the Senator from Montana will find that such will not be the case, because the population always has been furnished by counties and also by divisions of counties.

Mr. CARTER. It is a matter of tabulation and compilation after the reports are brought to the office.

Mr. PASCO. But it will not interfere at all with the work of the field agents, by whatever name you call them. They will, in all probability, be appointed without dividing up the counties. During the last census there was one supervisor for the entire State of Florida, but the work was divided up among a number of under officials who made the enumeration by counties and the divisions of counties. The county is the basis for all these investigations, only in tabulating the results of the last census the county returns were not always fully given and some of the results were merely lumped together in the schedules by States.

It has been suggested to me that the amendment would more properly come in after the words "census reports," on the top of page 18. I leave that entirely to the discretion of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. I rather think the amendment is properly placed in the bill in section 24; and inasmuch as possibly the amendment does not, as I apprehended it might, lead to a considerable increase of the work of the supervisors and enumerators, I suggest that it be allowed to go into the bill for consideration, with the understanding on the part of the Senator from Florida that it may be amended in such a manner as not to embarrass or materially retard the work.

Mr. PASCO. I should be perfectly willing to have it amended if it can be improved, but I beg of the Senator from Montana not to give it away.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I do not like the assumption that every bill is going into conference. I take it for granted that the Senate will pass a bill which the House of Representatives will accept as we pass it, as the perfect work of the Senator from Montana and the Committee on the Census, to which I do not now belong, and which, of course, is their misfortune.

I do not understand that there can be any objection to the amendment of the Senator from Florida. The Senator from Montana will allow me to say that it can not be that there will be any division of the United States into districts which will divide counties; and if there is not, of course there can be tables made up showing the population statistics as to every county in the United States. Is there any doubt, I will ask the chairman, on that point?

Mr. CARTER. Unquestionably there may be. For instance, the county of Kings, in the State of New York, will be divided into a number of supervisors' districts, and it is possible that in the vast aggregation of people embraced in what is known as the Greater New York the supervisor's area will in some instances lap over county lines as a matter of ordinary convenience. I am not sure that that will occur, but I suggest that it is possible.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not believe that will be found to be the case. I do not believe there will be any case where the statistics which may be taken can not be aggregated in counties, which is what the Senator from Florida desires. I can not conceive that under any system which will be adopted one county will be so put with another county that the returns can not be separated as to the statistics of population merely. I should suppose that even without this amendment the result which is sought by the Senator from Florida would be obtained by the enumerators and the director of the census.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will not the amendment encumber it very much? How was it taken in the last census?

Mr. CARTER. I am inclined to think that the identical information suggested by this amendment was furnished as the result of the work of the last census. I am so informed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who has examined this particular matter.

Mr. LODGE. The population statistics are certainly divided by counties.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is what the Senator from Florida asks for.

Mr. LODGE. They are tabulated by counties in the present census.

Mr. PASCO. All these particulars are not given by counties.

Mr. LODGE. No, I think not all the particulars you ask for, but a great many of them.

Mr. PASCO. You will find that there is no way, in the last census, of ascertaining the number of voters in each county.

Mr. LODGE. That is perfectly true.

Mr. PASCO. This simply carries the table a little further.

Mr. LODGE. I think the sex and color are given.

Mr. PASCO. Yes; you will find an enumeration of the sex and color of the persons over 21 years of age.

Mr. LODGE. But those are arranged by counties, are they not?

Mr. PASCO. They are. But the other facts are not given, and I have made the table broad enough to cover all.

Mr. LODGE. I see.

Mr. PASCO. It will cost no more to make one in regard to all the details covered by the amendment, and it will give us all this information which is useful when such investigations are made. I understand that the amendment is agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment of the Senator from Florida is agreed to. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope it is there yet. The amendment that I offered yesterday is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 1, after the word "census," it is proposed to strike out "subject to such examination as said director may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, prescribe" and insert "after examination and certification by the Civil Service Commission."

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the words which I have moved to strike out were evidently intended to take the clerical force of the Census Office away from the operation of the civil-service law and to let the appointments be spoils appointments, pure, simple, and unadulterated.

There is no more reason why these employees should be exempted from civil-service examination than all the other employees of the Government. We have a general civil-service law and general regulations, and under those laws and regulations come all the appointments to fill vacancies in the Departments and all increases in the clerical force of the Departments. Now, why shall this force be exempted? Why shall they be appointed without examination or certification? There is no reason on earth for it, and I insist that the Committee on the Census is pursuing a course directly violative of the pledges of all political parties in their last national platforms.

I hope the Senator from Montana will accept the amendment I have offered. It is but just and right. If the Senator is determined to fight to take these offices from under the civil-service law, then I should like to know it. If the Senator will accept the amendment I have offered, it will end the controversy for the present.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the committee placed this particular phraseology in the bill advisedly, placed it there because the committee believed—and in that belief I fully share—that for the census force, which is to be collected together quickly, employed for a short time, and then gradually disbanded, affording for the main body of census clerks on the average probably not to exceed six months' employment—that the civil-service method of selection would be faulty and unsatisfactory. The committee believed, and I believe, careful reflection and investigation will convince the Senate that the director, charged with the responsibility for the execution of this mighty task in a brief time, can and will prescribe a test of fitness more thoroughly adapted to disclose the proper qualifications of the clerks, special agents, and others, than can be or will be prescribed by the civil-service examination.

As suggested yesterday, for instance, three names are certified and one is selected. The one selected possibly will be found to reside at Los Angeles, in the State of California. Such person before accepting the appointment would desire to be assured of the continuance of the work for a definite period of time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Suppose he was assured that no such assurance could be given, he would not then be compelled to accept the appointment.

Mr. CARTER. Not at all; but this question of assurance and reassurance would consume time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all.

Mr. CARTER. It would be almost as well to go out into the field to-day and say we will pick up the army of 200,000 men required in the present war by and through the agency of civil-service examination as to pick up this census force of from three to five thousand people to work a few months, discharge the duties required by law, and then go out into the body of the people again.

In 1890, notwithstanding the very brief time allowed for preparation, the census force became, through the method of selection devised, a most efficient force, and I doubt, Mr. President, whether, selected from the civil service in a general way, you could procure any more intelligent, efficient, or faithful people than operated under the census of 1890.

I think this bill should pass as it stands, Mr. President. In the first place, the work is temporary; in the second place, the character of the work is such as to require in many cases the exercise of personal judgment by the director in the selection of the agents, as well as in inspecting the manner in which the applicant for a place passes the examination.

I know that it is suggested, and that it will always be suggested, perhaps with justice in many cases, these appointments will become in some measure the prey of the spoilsman. I do hope in the taking of this census, upon which we are about to enter, that we will escape, by a course of conduct which will justify us in escaping, criticism on account of any partisanship displayed.

As I have heretofore taken occasion to suggest, this work will evolve results destined to affect for good or ill this country of ours after the parties that are here contending for supremacy shall have passed into oblivion.

The individual who for a pure partisan purpose would tamper with or attempt to pervert the statistical returns of the census for a temporary partisan advantage would be guilty of little less than a crime against his country.

We will expend in the taking of this census and in the compilation of the reports probably from ten to twelve million dollars. The people will surrender that money from the common treasury cheerfully, expecting to be compensated by and through the valuable information concerning the people and their affairs which the census will furnish; and to undertake to taint that information, to undertake to mislead future generations with reference to the facts for the purpose of getting A a job in preference to B, I think would be beneath the dignity of this Administration, and I hope it may never in the future be justly charged to any Administration that this census work drifted down into a mere hospital for old, jaded, and worn-out politicians. I would, however, as soon take the chances of partisan selection as to select from the civil service those people who have been rejected time and again by one Administration after another when their names were certified up for appointment.

There is a vast army of old, rejected people connected with this civil service scheme now here, and if we are forced to examine them—

Mr. LODGE. Their names all go off the list at the end of one year.

Mr. CARTER. And then they go right back again, and, like the poor, they are always with us.

Mr. LODGE. They have to pass an examination.

Mr. COCKRELL. After two certifications that ends them, as the Senator will see if he will look at the rules. There is no such accumulation of old, decrepit people on the list. None over 45 years old can go on the list, and after being certified a certain number of times they are cast away. They are civilly dead, so far as any appointment is concerned.

Mr. CARTER. But they are examined again and placed on the list, and their names certified to somebody else to reject them again. I am delighted to know that the Senator from Missouri has become such an ardent, as I know he is an able, champion of the present civil-service system. I do not wish for one moment to consume the time of the Senate in a controversy with the Senator from Missouri upon that point.

The Committee on the Census, after carefully deliberating upon the subject, determined that the individual charged with the performance of a herculean task in a limited time could select by and through his own method of examination from the body of the American people more effective and satisfactory servants for the performance of the task than he could get by being blindfolded and selecting through chance; and we believe it is better for the census, better for the country, that this provision in the bill should stand unamended and unimpaired.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it was said yesterday in the debate that in order to get persons of high and broad intelligence and great organizing capacity we must not take them from competitive examinations.

Mr. CARTER. From such examinations alone.

Mr. LODGE. That apparently persons of high intelligence and great organizing capacity can not possibly meet the competition; the moment they undertake to meet the competition they are treated unfairly, and we do not get them.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator will permit me, I am quite aware of the fact that he does not wish to treat the discussion unfairly. The statement made upon yesterday, to which the Senator refers, was that there were elements of character, points of industry and capacity, which an ordinary examination would not disclose. Those elements relating to the capacity of a person to organize a force were not disclosed by an ordinary examination absolutely essential in selecting the persons who are to control the census work.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the great mass of the people employed in the census are clerks and copyists. Nine-tenths of them are nothing but clerks and copyists, who are required to perform the duties of clerks and copyists as they are now performed in the Government Departments. We have our Departments filled from civil-service certifications, and very excellent clerks we get. Nine-tenths of the work in the census does not differ at all from the ordinary departmental work. The few persons who have to be experts and in charge of divisions will of course be selected for their peculiar capacity to do certain kinds of work, but the great mass can be taken perfectly well from the existing registers. They can be appointed from the registers as they stand to-day.

If it is seriously proposed that the director of the census shall conduct an examination of his own, you are making a fruitful cause of delay. He can prescribe now any form of examination he desires for the Civil Service Commission to carry out, and they will supply him with the clerks as soon as he calls for them. If he is himself to organize that whole system, if he is to get up his whole system of examinations, he will be obliged to do over again the work which is already done by the present Government machinery.

But, Mr. President, we talk here about character and high intelligence and all that. What is meant by this thing is that these clerks are to be appointed by ourselves and by the Members of the House of Representatives; in other words, we are to have the disposition of these clerical offices, or else we are to put them under a system of examination.

Mr. GEAR. May I make a suggestion to the Senator?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. GEAR. I wish to suggest that the clerks employed in the former census were examined by Mr. Porter, who was the Superintendent.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; and one great reason of delay was the political changes which caused the very inferior character of the work.

Mr. GEAR. I think that any person who was familiar with the work of the last census would say that the appointments were nonpartisan and fairly satisfactory. I heard the Senator from Missouri make that statement yesterday.

Mr. LODGE. I was in Congress at that time, and I saw something of the central office here. I know nothing about the offices outside. I think that the office here was a discredit to the Government of the United States.

Mr. GEAR. My own personal judgment is that Mr. Porter administered the affairs of that office with great ability.

Mr. LODGE. He administered it as well as any man could have administered it under the evil system that was forced upon him. I will take simply one witness. I have here a letter of Dr. John Shaw Billings, the greatest expert on vital statistics in the country, who is known to every Senator to whom I speak, and who had charge of the vital statistics of the Eleventh Census. Here is what he said:

The whole of my work in the census has been done in the face of great obstacles, owing to repeated changes of clerks for political reasons, etc., and I am tired of struggling with the most unpropitious circumstances which have surrounded the work.

That is the fair and disinterested testimony of a man who had no political object to serve, but to whom was committed one of the most important branches of the census. The testimony has been brought in here before—I am not going to go over it—of the effect on the last census of the system then employed.

Here we shall have to appoint a great body of clerks, most of them simply copyists and clerks doing the ordinary routine work of the Departments, and we have got a machinery here with quotas and registers all ready from which these people can be taken, and taken at once, without a moment's delay; and we have an arrangement here proposed in the bill "subject to such examination as said director may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, prescribe."

That is the other system—that is, he is to appoint whom we recommend, and we and the Members of the other House are to run down there and spend our time in trying to get positions for people who can not stand the ordinary, simple examination required for clerks and copyists; and nothing could be simpler or more reasonable than that examination. In all the attacks made on the civil-service system, it has always been admitted that so far as the clerical force was concerned the examination was reasonable and proper.

Mr. GEAR. May I state to the Senator from Massachusetts that the examination laid down by Mr. Porter in the last census was a specific examination, an examination that was absolutely applicable to the position to which a man desired to be appointed, and no man was appointed who could not pass that examination?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator knows as well as I do that it was a pass examination and did not amount to anything.

Mr. GEAR. I can state to the Senator that it was as good if not a better examination than the ordinary civil-service examination.

Mr. LODGE. It was a pass examination, and worthless.

Mr. GEAR. It was an examination which simply pertained to the duties the man would be required to perform, and the Civil Service Commission only examine as to one thing.

Mr. LODGE. There is no secret about the duty required of these clerks and copyists. It does not require any great intelligence or any great knowledge of character, and there is nothing to prevent the persons appointed from being removed if they are not competent. The plain English of it is whether these people shall be appointed by the director of the census after examination or whether we shall appoint them. If the director of the census is going to appoint these clerks, I have not a word to say. I am perfectly willing to leave the appointment of every clerk to the head of the bureau who is responsible or to the head of the Department, and if they were to appoint the clerks there would be no need of a civil-service examination.

Mr. GEAR. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. LODGE. I should like to finish my sentence first.

Mr. GEAR. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. Every one of the chiefs of bureaus and heads of Departments is ambitious to have his bureau or Department well conducted. But that is not what this provision is for. It is to give us the opportunity to appoint these clerks; and we are not responsible for the conduct of the Department or the bureau. We are all anxious to help the people who come to us and want to be helped; and the man who is responsible for the work of the Department has to take them on our recommendation. Those are the two systems; and everybody knows that those are the two systems.

Mr. GEAR. May I suggest to the Senator, as it is a matter of history—and I am not making the statement solely on my own responsibility—that no appointment under the last census was ever made which did not receive the approval of the Superintendent of the Census? No appointment was made merely on a recommendation. Each applicant had to go before a board appointed by Mr. Porter, and had to stand a specific examination in regard to the duties that would be required of him. I know that to be so, for I recommended a man who did not pass the examination, and he was not appointed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, those appointments were made largely on political recommendation. The examination was simply a pass examination. Men were appointed who were recommended. We all of us had that experience.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts, as he has two or three times said that a pass examination is worthless, explain why it is that a pass examination is what he designates as worthless? I, perhaps, will admit, Mr. President, it is not so valuable as the civil-service examination; but that is very strong language to apply to a system of examination under which this Government was conducted for a hundred years and got on very well.

Mr. LODGE. When I say a pass examination is worthless, I do not mean to say it is worthless if it is properly conducted; where a man who does not pass with a certain percentage can not get in, like a college examination, for instance, which is a pass examination; but I mean the pass examination which was used in the Departments amounted to nothing. It was a mere form; and the man was taken who got through anyhow or in any degree, provided he had sufficient political backing.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I beg leave to differ from the Senator. I am not opposed to the existing civil-service system, so far as it appertains to the clerks in the Departments; but having had some observation on the subject, I do not think that was the case. I do not think that the man who was appointed from political considerations always got through the examination or generally got through the examination or ever got through the examination if he was not qualified. Where there is such an examination made by competent clerks in the Departments, questions are put to the applicant which he is required to answer, and they are obliged to certify from those answers that he is competent.

I am not willing to allow to go unchallenged the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts that the examination which took place before the civil-service system was adopted was worthless, or that men passed, if they were appointed from political considerations or by reason of political recommendations, whether they were entitled to pass according to the merit of their examination or not. I believe the contrary to have been the case and that good clerks got into the Departments under the old system.

Mr. LODGE. Of course good clerks got into the Departments under the old system; but that is not the point, nor is the pass examination necessarily worthless. In my opinion—and it is a mere matter of opinion—the pass examination as used in the Departments amounts practically to very little. The only value of the competitive examination was that it prevented the abuses of the old system. There is no magic about a competitive examination.

The whole object of the thing is to provide some machinery other than appointments by Senators and Representatives, and if this provision in the bill stands as it is, all of these appointments will be thrown into our hands. If it is not left as it is, but the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is adopted, then clerks will be furnished from the ordinary civil-service registers and quotas, and they will go into the Census Office and do the work there just as well as the work is done in every one of the great Departments of the Government. We shall then be relieved from what I think is at least a very unattractive kind of work and a very burdensome kind of work which we can not possibly escape if they are to be appointed as proposed by the bill.

It seems to me that it is to the interest of the public service to have a force in the Census Office, selected in this way, who would not be shifted and changed all the time. The clerks in the Census Office were shifted and changed even when the force was being decreased; when the clerks were going off the roll the shifting and changing was still kept up to make a place here and there for somebody who required a position, and we have the testimony of the Commissioner of Pensions before the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Civil Service. He testified that the worst clerks in his Bureau were the ones who had the most influence, because, as he very justly said, the good clerks do not seek influence and do not need it; but the people who are inferior clerks and ought not to be in the employment of the Government are the ones with enormous influence.

Mr. CARTER. Does that occur under the civil-service system?

Mr. LODGE. He referred to those who asked to be retained. Of course some poor clerks come in under the civil-service system. There is no magic about it. Poor clerks come in under any system; but he said the clerks who had the most influence, whether they came in under the old system or the new, were the poorest ones.

Now, we are proposing to construct a great department to run two or three years to furnish statistics of population upon which we apportion our representation, and we propose to fill it by political influence. It seems to me it would be a great deal better if we could get that body of clerks who will be engaged in that work out of politics and allow them to be appointed by the ordinary machinery which is sufficiently good to furnish us with clerks in all the great Departments. It is for that reason, Mr. President, that I hope the amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be adopted.

This is not a case where men can not be examined. There is no difficulty about examining a clerk. You can test a man's ability as a copyist; you can test his handwriting by this examination perfectly well. If he is not a good clerk he can be removed; there is nothing to keep him in office; but we do get a body of men who are selected by the people responsible for the operations of the office. In this case, however, as it is arranged here, we leave the director of the census to have a large body of clerks thrust upon him by a force that he can not resist, by men who are not responsible for the conduct of the office or the results of the census.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I am almost persuaded to agree with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], although we have widely differed in the past upon the method of conducting what is known as the civil service.

I am not, perhaps, as bad a spoilsman as the Senator from Massachusetts may think. I have been inclined to believe that perhaps the employees and clerks in the various Departments in Washington City might be very properly classified or placed under the civil-service regulations. The great trouble in this contest seems to be that a late President of the United States for three years and a half made all the appointments in the Departments that he could, and then promoted those persons, not so much upon their examinations as upon their punctuality and attendance, and then placed the classified service over them all. Now the Civil Service Commission control all of those, and they are endeavoring to grab almost everything else in sight, if I may use an expression of that character.

What I complain of is not that I will be perhaps annoyed by those seeking clerkships for the taking of the census, because I happened to be in Congress with my good friend from Massachusetts when the last census was taken, and, whether fortunately or unfortunately, I did not receive a single appointment in that Bureau. Perhaps that was due largely to the fact that my constituents were so far away from me that they could not get here. Be that as it may, I do not complain of it in the city of Washington, but what I do complain of is the method and manner of conducting the civil service in the several States.

I think that the Civil Service Commission is notoriously and grossly negligent. As the Senator says, the lists are already prepared. As I understood his language, it was that the lists are already prepared.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I said the census force could easily be taken from the existing registers of clerks and copyists.

Mr. WILSON. Not one of those clerks has been examined in any way or in any manner for these special duties, but for ordinary clerkships. It so happened that a few days ago we desired a clerk in the land office in the State of Washington.

I had occasion to examine the papers, and in that examination I ascertained that not a single question of any kind or character was propounded which had any bearing whatever upon the duties he was to perform. I went carefully through all the papers to see if he knew anything about a quarter section of land or townships or ranges or plats or anything of that character which might fit him for duties in a land office, and not a single question was propounded to him for that purpose. And yet, under this rule, under this species, I may say, of tyranny which has crept into our politics and into our daily life, I was compelled to take one of those clerks for that position.

So it is with Indian farmers. I had to have an Indian farmer the other day. It so happened, why I do not know, whether it is due to the fact that we have no examinations or whether our people do not pass, or whether they are not certified, that it became necessary to go into another State to secure an assistant farmer for the Tulalip Indian Reservation, and in the examination it was not proved or demonstrated that he had ever had anything to do with farming, or that he knew anything about sowing or reaping or harvesting or how to teach anybody to do anything of that kind, that he had ever plowed an acre of land in his life.

Mr. CHANDLER. What was he examined in?

Mr. WILSON. He was examined in arithmetic, geography, and that sort of thing. He was asked by and through what States the Ohio River flowed.

Mr. CULLOM. Did he answer it?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir. That is the character of it. We are spending thousands and thousands of dollars of the people's money every year, it is costing the people of the United States over $500,000 to take these civil-service examinations, not one of whom is ever certified for appointment. Of course I want to elevate the service. I am not a spoilsman of the kind characterized by a late Senator in this body, Mr. Carl Schurz. I have profound respect for his opinions. I only want those things that my people want. I only want the people of my State to have that which belongs to them. I do not want to go outside. I feel they should have an opportunity. I feel that every man in this Republic should have an opportunity to serve his Government, whatever may be his station.

I feel that if he desires to be a blacksmith upon an Indian reservation he should have that opportunity, and if he knows how to take a piece of iron that is cold and put it into hot coals and form it into a horseshoe, he is competent to be a blacksmith upon the Indian reservation, notwithstanding he may not have passed one of these civil-service examinations upon geography and the lost tribes of Israel. Yet when we come to Washington, as was said with much force by the Senator who through a long series of years has been engaged in an earnest and sincere effort to elevate the civil service, those appointments ought to come from the classified service.

I do not want them to come from the list which these gentlemen down here have prepared in advance. I do not think anybody else does, and I think we had better get back possibly somewhat to the old-fashioned way. I rather apprehend that the government of Washington and the government of Jackson and the government of Lincoln are about as good as the government of Garfield or the government of McKinley or the government of Grover Cleveland. Therefore I say give them all an opportunity. I will not have anybody from the State of Washington in the bureau, because they will not go that far. We are too remote.

All we want is what is confined to the geographical area of that State, and we will try to get along with it. We do not want anybody here. I agree with the Senator, and I am glad to do it for once, that so far as most of these appointments in Washington are concerned, the Civil Service Commission controls them. It is not the Senate, not the House of Representatives, not the President of the United States, not the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of War, but just this commission. Whenever you want anything, you will walk up to them and they will ask you in their dreamy, sleepy way, "Have you passed an examination?"

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Washington, of course, understands that this amendment applies only to clerks in the city of Washington. It does not include the enumerators and special agents employed in field work, who constitute the great mass.

Mr. CHANDLER obtained the floor.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President—

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. TURPIE. I am much obliged for the courtesy of the honorable Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. I trust that the Census Bureau will not be put under the civil service in relation to appointments. The census has never been under the civil service. It has always been especially excluded from it, and certainly former censuses have shown at least an average of competency and an approach to perfection which I do not think would be aided or reinforced by putting this census under the conditions of the civil service. I had something to do officially with the last census, having served for some time as chairman of the Committee on the Census. I do not believe, with respect to the clerical work of that census, the handling of cards, the making up of tables, the additions and the classifications, that any work was ever done better or more rapidly, that any work was ever done more swiftly and more in accordance with the instructions of the superior officers who superintended the labors of the Bureau.

That work was done by a large class of appointees who were, if I may so say, political selections. They were political in the sense that it rested upon the personal discretion of the Superintendent of the Census, now called the Director, and the joint judgment and discretion of Senators and Members of the other House in making those appointments. There were very few bad appointments made. When such an appointment was made, it was discovered within twenty-four or thirty-six hours and the party was dismissed from employment. The great mass of the work suffered nothing from such disappointments or from the few imperfect appointments that were made under that system.

Mr. President, I think it is a great deal to say that appointments of that kind are made by parties not responsible. Every Senator and every Member of the House is personally and officially responsible for the success of this census, as he was responsible for the success and perfection of the last census, and I do not think any of us would even make a recommendation for appointments prior to examination, even giving a person a chance for appointment, who was not known to us to be personally competent and in every way fit to discharge the duties, such as they were, of the position which he sought. That is one of the reasons why I vastly prefer that these appointments shall be made without the recommendation or action of the Civil Service Commission.

When we turn them over to the Civil Service Commission we lose our personal connection and interest in the work entirely. None of the appointees will be known to us. Nothing will be known of their character or position. The local apportionment of appointments into States will be totally lost sight of. The whole clerical force will be cast into the wheel of civil service and will be appointed by lot, without any respect to the State for which the work is to be done or the district for which the tabulations are to be made.

Mr. President, it is a very great assistance, it is a very great aid, even to the most competent director or superintendent of the census to have a clerk appointed from a State or district in which the classifications of the work are to be made, one who knows what the cities are, what the towns are, possibly what the leading manufactures are, who is there to correct mistakes, to correct exaggerations, and to supply deficiencies. He has that close intimate relation, connection, and acquaintance in all branches of the country's work which a person appointed merely by lot, a person appointed merely by accident never can have. And he never can have the opportunity of applying to the work that close acquaintance which a clerk appointed under the system of the last census had. That is one of the reasons why the Civil Service Commission in this instance ought to be excluded.

We shall get better clerical work, considering it as merely clerical, and we will have besides the fact that these laborers will have a personal relation to the location to which the labor is to apply and will have a personal and intimate acquaintance with the tabulations and classifications of the different States and districts for which the appointments under our system will be made. I therefore hope that the recommendation of the committee will be retained in the bill and that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be defeated.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana before he takes his seat whether there is any provision in the bill to prevent the appointees from being exclusively of one party?

Mr. TURPIE. Yes, sir; we inserted by agreement the provision which I had the honor to submit to the Senator from Maryland the other day.

Mr. GORMAN. Ah! I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, my views upon the pending question are not very positive nor are they extreme. Therefore perhaps I ought not to discuss the subject. But inasmuch as I shall vote for the clause as reported by the committee, I take occasion to say a few words.

I had the honor to succeed as chairman of the Committee on the Census the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], who has just addressed the Senate. When the time came to prepare a bill for the Twelfth Census, the Senator from Indiana insisted that the force to be appointed to conduct the inquiry should not be selected according to the ordinary civil-service rules.

The Senator avowed that he believed it to be a wise plan to have side by side here in Washington work going on conducted by one department or branch of the Government with a force selected according to civil-service rules, and in contrast work going on conducted by another department or branch the force of which should be made up in the old way and not according to civil-service rules. The Senator from Indiana having convinced me that such was a wise course, this bill as it was first reported to the Senate contained substantially the present provision. The bill was afterwards recommitted in another Congress—the present Congress—to the new Committee on the Census, and from that committee it is now before this body for action.

Mr. President, I think it would be wise to try the experiment which the Senator from Indiana advocates, and to see whether the work of the next census, carried forward by an administrative and clerical force selected according to the discretion of the director of the census, with such examination of the employees as he may see fit to prescribe, will or will not compare favorably with the work done in the other Departments in Washington organized under civil-service rules. With this idea I shall vote for the proposition of the committee.

Mr. President, I am not against the system of selecting clerks according to civil-service rules. I had the honor to be connected with one of the Departments of this Government when the civil-service system was first put into operation, and being called upon to express my opinion a short time after the system had been in operation, I stated that it had worked favorably in furnishing the new clerks which were called for by the Department of which I had control, and that there were to be observed special benefits growing out of the relief which had been given to Senators and Members of Congress and to the heads of Departments from the importunities that pertain to the ordinary patronage system.

In that view I have ever since been willing to see the additions to the ordinary clerical force of the Department obtained from the Civil Service Commission. It is easy to examine and ascertain whether a particular man or woman is competent to do clerical work—desk work, work not technical, work not professional, work not scientific, but merely the clerical work which it is the function of four-fifths of the employees of the Government to perform. Therefore I did not think that the original civil-service system was a bad one. I do not think it is a bad one to-day, and I should not be willing to vote wholly to destroy it. But having said so much I am compelled further to say that I think the extensions of the system which have been made have been injudicious.

They have been calculated to injure the system in the estimation of the people of this country. There were two directions in which the authors of the system did not intend to have it extended. They did not intend to have it carried above the ordinary $1,800 clerks, and they did not intend to have it carried below the lowest grade of clerks, neither above nor below the four classes of clerks; and yet in the progress of time, there being something fascinating about this notion of having a bureau in Washington to furnish the material for all the appointments under the Government, the commission has succeeded in elaborating a system of examinations under which not only the $1,800 clerks, the highest grade of ordinary clerks, are to be supplied from competitive examinations conducted by the commission, but also the chiefs of divisions and the various chief clerks, going up until the Presidential appointees in the Departments are reached, who must be nominated to the Senate, are to be supplied by the Civil Service Commission. I think this extension is a mistake. I think it creates a system that will not long be tolerated by the people of the United States.

Again, it was a mistake to undertake to have the Civil Service Commission furnish technical employees of the Government, professional employees of the Government, men who must have special attainments for the work they are to do. When you undertake to examine a person to ascertain whether or not he understands, we will say, the working of steam machinery, or whether he understands astronomy, it is necessary to provide an examining board composed of experts in steam machinery or composed of experts in astronomy; otherwise the examination is a mere farce; and when you try to install in power in Washington a Civil Service Commission whose business it is to call into existence these technical boards to make these technical examinations, you have created a power that is above the executive government, that is above the Government itself, and you have extended upward into the realm of government the civil-service system much further than it was ever intended that it should be carried.

Mr. President, on the other hand, going downward, no such absurd rules were ever anticipated as those which the Civil Service Commission has prescribed. The law explicitly excluded laborers and workmen from appointment through the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mechanics.

Mr. CHANDLER. "Laborers and workmen" is the expression of the statute, I think.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mechanics.

Mr. CHANDLER. My colleague says mechanics. If my colleague will examine the statute, I shall be glad to make my statement accurate on this point, but I think it was mere laborers and workmen. That reservation was a very proper one. It was not deemed necessary in order to determine whether a laborer, a man who was to do manual work in one of the Departments of this Government, was competent that he should be examined by a civil-service board here in Washington or anywhere else. It was thought that the Secretary or Assistant Secretary or the head of a Department or bureau or office could find out whether a man was fit to drive a wagon or sweep a floor or do errands, and that it would not be necessary to have the power to appoint this class of servants taken away from them.

Yet the Civil Service Commission went on to classify various kinds of laborers. I can not give the various names which they gave to those laborers in order to avoid having them called mere laborers. Some of them they classified as messengers and assistant messengers. A messenger or assistant messenger is a laborer. He is nothing else. He is not required to have one particle of that knowledge which characterizes a clerk, except that he should have that knowledge which is required by law of every American citizen—the knowledge how to read and write.

They classified the messengers and assistant messengers. They found men driving carriages, and they said, "They are not laborers merely." So they made a class of drivers. They found watchmen guarding the various Departments, and they classified those laborers, who were acting as watchmen, and made them a class in the civil service; and finally, for fear that somebody should be left not appointed by this universal and magnificent power of the Civil Service Commission, they classified nearly everybody else as a "helper," so that helpers have to be so appointed; and, of course, a helper under the fraudulent classification is in fact nothing in the world but a mere laborer. Thus the Civil Service Commission went on its way both downward and upward until now there is almost no opportunity for admission to the civil service of this country under the National Government short of a Presidential appointment except through the omnipotent Civil Service Commission.

I have high respect, Mr. President, for the members of the commission. They are my personal friends. They are engaged in good work as a whole, but they have undertaken—such is the weakness of human nature—so to magnify their offices by grabbing above and grabbing below that if they keep on grabbing, sooner or later their whole structure of the civil-service system will be torn down by the American people. I wish to save the system—what there is valuable in it—and I do not wish to have it so abused that it will be destroyed utterly by such enemies of the scheme as my colleague from my own State and the Democrats of this country who will continue to be its enemies when they once outgrow their temporary spasm of pretended affection for the civil service.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether he would not prefer to conclude to-morrow.

Mr. CHANDLER. I prefer to conclude now.

Mr. GORMAN. We ought to have an executive session.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will not take a great while, and I prefer to go on now unless it would disoblige the Senator.

Mr. GORMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is only one other point which I wish to present. I consider it an important one. Because we do not want the mere clerical force of this Government to become the football of politics, to be the subject of the arts of mere patronage, and therefore wish to sustain a rational civil-service system to be conducted by the Civil Service Commission, we ought to be careful not to establish too much caste and too many specially favored classes in the community. That is the tendency of the present system.

The country is now full of men who are in the service of the Government practically for life, who can not be reached for removal by any ordinary process. They are more powerful than Senators and Representatives in Congress. We are here for a little time, and then we return to the body of the people, but they go on forever, and you feel, Mr. President, every day in this Chamber the power and influence of these different classes or castes in the community.

There are the postal clerks on the cars. They constitute a body of very able young men engaged in the performance of a hazardous duty, for whom it has been my privilege to do some service. But, Mr. President, they constitute a class in the community who are holding their offices for life, and who sooner or later will have their life pensions either granted to them by the Government or established under a law of Congress from portions of their own salaries, which of course come out of the public Treasury.

There are the letter carriers in the cities. They constitute a vast class in the community, a popular body, a body of most excellent young men all over this country; but they are in office for life, and they can make and unmake Senators if they choose to do so.

So it is with the clerks in the post-offices. They constitute another powerful class. And, Mr. President, all through the civil service are growing up these bodies of men, who go on forever, and who in the course of time will have life pensions, as they become old and unfit to do the work of their calling.

Mr. President, if we establish these classes, if we keep in these officials for life, when they grow old and are unfitted for any other work except work for the Government, we can not refuse to grant them pensions. Thus there is danger that we shall gradually change the whole theory and spirit of our Government, and make it one whose officials have life tenure instead of one whose officials are appointed from time to time, and after a suitable period go back to private life and mingle with the masses of the people.

But it was clearly not the intention of the framers of this republican government to create an aristocracy, to create any life officials whatever except in the Army and Navy.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I wish to ask the Senator if the feature he is now commenting upon does not apply with equal force to the clerical part of the force in the Departments, which he in the former part of his remarks stated he thought should be under the Civil Service Commission? I am not speaking of the pension feature, in which I quite agree with him. I wish to know, however, if instead of limiting it to the particular class of employees he is speaking of, the criticism he is now making should not be extended so as to embrace all kinds of employees who are not under the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. CHANDLER. There is much to be said in support of the Senator's criticism. I would, however, be unwilling, I think, to reestablish the principle that the great mass of the clerical force of the Government, now reaching up to seventy or eighty or one hundred thousand, more or less, should be subject to the changes of party politics. I shall not undertake to say that; but I do say that nothing outside of that force, whether above the $1,800 clerks and reaching up into this vast domain of important special employees, and nothing below the lowest clerk, reaching down into the messengers and laborers of the Government, should be included in the classified service, because of the tendency to build up castes and classes in a republican government.

Mr. President, because I am not willing to go too far in the direction of civil-service classification it must not be understood that I am willing to tear down the existing system. But the rule of the American Republic is rotation in office. I call the attention of the junior Senator from Massachusetts, who, having seen the evils of the patronage system, is an ardent advocate of civil-service reform, to a clause in the constitution of Massachusetts which shows the idea I have in mind:

In order to prevent those who are vested with authority from becoming oppressors, the people have a right at such periods and in such manner as they shall establish by their frame of government, to cause their public officers to return to private life; and to fill up vacant places by certain and regular elections and appointments.

That is in Poore's Charters and Constitutions, constitution of Massachusetts, 1780, page 958, article 8, and I ask that the Secretary will read similar provisions in the constitutions of Pennsylvania, Vermont, and Virginia. The clauses from the constitutions of Massachusetts and Virginia show what were the notions of the great founders of the American Republic.

The Secretary read as follows:

Constitution of Pennsylvania, 1776, page 1541, Article VI:

"That those who are employed in the legislative and executive business of the State may be restrained from oppression, the people have a right, at such periods as they may think proper, to reduce their public officers to a private station, and supply the vacancies by certain and regular elections."

Constitution of Vermont, 1777, page 1859, chapter 1, Article VII:

"That those who are employed in the legislative and executive business of the State may be restrained from oppression, the people have a right, at such periods as they may think proper, to reduce their public officers to a private station, and supply the vacancies by certain and regular elections."

Constitution of Vermont, 1786, page 1868, chapter 1, Article VIII:

"That those who are employed in the legislative and executive business of the State may be restrained from oppression, the people have a right, by their legal representatives, to enact laws for reducing their public officers to a private station, and for supplying their vacancies in a constitutional manner, by regular elections, at such periods as they may think proper."

Virginia bill of rights, 1776, page 1909, section 5:

"That the legislative and executive powers of the State should be separate and distinct from the judiciary, and that the members of the two first may be restrained from oppression, by feeling and participating the burdens of the people, they should at fixed periods be reduced to a private station, return into that body from which they were originally taken, and the vacancies be supplied by frequent, certain, and regular elections, in which all or any part of the former members to be again eligible or ineligible, as the law shall direct."

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, there is the fundamental idea that prevailed with the framers of the Massachusetts constitution and the Virginia constitution and the Vermont constitution. The same idea is to be found to some extent in the other constitutions; so that it was intended that there should be in America very few life officials, as few as possible, because the idea was that when men continued long in office, they acquired a habit in some way of oppressing the people.

The doctrine of rotation in public office was thus distinctly expressed by the founders of this Republic. Mr. President, that is the true idea to-day. It is not the theory of the American people at this moment that outside of a limited clerical force, a body of clerks engaged in performing routine duties, there shall be any life offices in this Republic except those of the Army and the Navy.

Mr. HOAR. And the judiciary.

Mr. CHANDLER. The senior Senator from Massachusetts suggests the judiciary. It was, it is true, the tendency of these same republican founders of the Constitution, acting in a conservative spirit, to have a judiciary appointed for life. That tendency is still observable, although in the Western States and the Southern States, more than in other sections, there has grown up the custom of electing or appointing judges for only a limited period of time. It is suggested to me that very few States have a life tenure for judges.

But on the whole I think that the sentiment of the American people to-day is exactly what it was when those constitutions were framed, and that among our civil-service reformers there is too great a tendency toward establishing aristocracies with life tenure in the United States. I take occasion in an humble way to warn the Civil Service Commission and the friends of genuine civil-service reform, who properly wish to keep the great body of the clerks of the Government under the existing system, that in seeking to extend the system upward until it reaches every appointee of the Federal Government who is not now required by the Constitution or law to be nominated to the Senate and confirmed by the Senate and to extend the system downward so as to take in substantially all the laborers of the Government they are making themselves the foes of real and genuine civil-service reform and making such blunders as will eventually bring their whole elaborate system to destruction.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to ask the Senator if it has not been his observation that the Civil Service Commission have been more interested in extending the service than in perfecting that which they already have?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not want to say that. I have said that I respect the members of the commission. I do not think they are aware that in the extraordinary extensions upward and downward which they are making of their scheme they are absolutely undermining a system to which they are devoted, being, of course, themselves in office for life under the operations of their plans.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to make a brief reply to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], if it will not be disagreeable to the Senate. I shall not speak more than five or six minutes.

Mr. GORMAN. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to engage in the general discussion. What needs to be said has been said with great clearness and force by my colleague [Mr. LODGE]. But as this matter has been discussed, especially by the Senator from New Hampshire, I wish merely to bear my testimony, as a person who well recollects the facts, to the intolerable abuse of the old system of appointments, which the system known as the civil-service reform has supplemented and terminated.

It was a condition of things which the founders of the Republic, to which my friend from New Hampshire alluded, would have looked upon with horror. There were many utterances of those men, notably Mr. Madison and Mr. Jefferson, to the effect that a President who should pursue the course which became the policy of all our Presidents in regard to the removal and appointment of officers for political purposes would be deserving of impeachment. The appointment of officers on political grounds solely and to have the appointments urged upon the appointing power because of the service of the candidate to the dominant political party became the system.

The appointments to the civil-service offices in this country were made political and rested upon the devotion of the persons appointed to the fortunes of powerful and unscrupulous political chieftains. Each prominent member of Congress in the Senate or the House had his band of devoted followers whom he expected should be rewarded at the public cost with public office, and the time which belonged to legislative duty was expended by members of the Senate and the House in visits to the Departments for the sake of getting offices every time there was a change in the Administration.

Mr. President, we have all of us felt the burden, and the welcome and honorable burden, one we are glad to bear and to carry, of presenting the desires of our fellow-citizens in the different States, eager and emulous to devote their lives to the military service of the country in the war, making their applications for commissions and to seize upon opportunities. Nobody begrudges it. Yet it is the duty which almost makes the ordinary devotion to our legislative duties impossible, as every Senator knows. After a vacation of three weeks I endeavored to get a meeting of the Judiciary Committee last Monday. Gentlemen came in just before the time of the session of the Senate, an hour or an hour and a half after the meeting was called, saying that they had been compelled to be in attendance at the Departments in the interest of the quota of their States in the war, and it had been impossible to attend to that duty.

I do not see how any person who remembers the shameful and degrading experience of former days can fail to be thankful that that condition of things is over. I happened, by mere accident, when searching for another matter ten minutes ago, since my colleague ended his remarks, to hit in an old scrapbook upon a debate which took place between myself and my colleague, Mr. Dawes, then the leader of the House of Representatives, just coming toward the close of his eighteen years' service there. It was before the civil-service reform movement began, and Mr. Dawes stated the existing facts.

There was a proposition which I made on an appropriation bill to admit women to an equal opportunity with men in the clerical service of the Government, and to provide that female clerks who had a less rate of compensation might be employed for such duties, at the discretion of the Department, as they were found equally able to perform. The amendment was defeated that year by reason of Mr. Dawes's opposition, who was chairman of the Appropriations Committee, but I secured the adoption of it in the next Congress. Now, here is what Mr. Dawes said. I will read two or three of the sentences uttered by Mr. Dawes upon the then existing condition. I read it as the testimony of the most experienced man, not specially a reformer by nature, but a conservative man, not likely to be welcoming new and Quixotic ideas. He said:

Now, my colleague, if he was not quite so fresh here, would know that the chief staple of influence at home with most of us is that we are backed up by those who bring in their accounts for services rendered, to be paid in the end by places under the Government. They are to be paid for in some way, and most generally are paid for in that way only.

He says women can not stand the competition of these hungry officeholders who are demanding payment from the Congressmen.

Mr. CHANDLER. In what year was that?

Mr. HOAR. That was in the year 1869 or 1870. I can find the date in a moment. I have no doubt it was in 1870, because Mr. Dawes in the next Congress was chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. Then I interrupted:

Mr. HOAR. Does my colleague [Mr. Dawes] propose to say that fact is true in regard to himself or in regard to others?

Mr. DAWES. I do not stand here to say that I am any better than any other member on this floor. I have no idea that I am any better. I hope I am about as good as the average. But I have a single remark to make, and if my colleague thinks it is not true, it is because he has not mingled in the politics of the country as much as he will have done when he shall have occupied a place here with honor to himself and his constituents ten or fifteen years. Then, unless there comes a revival, a revolution, a moral reform in the politics of the country, he will know what is the chief staple of trade among little politicians all over this country. Then he will know the bills of accounts which are brought in against members. Then he will know why it was that the avenues to the Departments were, for a month succeeding the 4th of last March—

That was in March, 1860. Undoubtedly this was in the winter of 1869-70—crowded with men who swarmed more thickly than did our soldiers when they returned from the war, and who were there claiming their reward at the hands of members of Congress—claiming their reward and "refusing to be comforted" unless they could go home with their commissions in their pockets as compensation for services they had rendered to members of Congress. If my colleague did not experience something of this last spring during the first month of his service here, then he has reason to thank God that he for one escaped that malaria which pervaded the atmosphere here and which was fatal to any such thing as independence of action or opinion in this House or in the other branch. We were made slaves to the vile politicians from all parts of the country, who came here at that time and who during the last few months have been clamoring for an increase of the salaries of those very offices which they crawled on their knees to obtain during the first month of this Administration. Gentlemen must bear in mind that it is against such competition women must contend if the salaries of their offices be increased in the manner proposed.

Mr. President, that was the testimony, uncontradicted by anybody in the House, of a moderate man, careful in his statements of a present fact, which everybody on both sides of the House knew to be the existing fact and not to be in the least exaggerated; and I affirm on my personal recollection that there is not a particle of exaggeration in that picture.

The politics of my own State, certainly as pure and upright as the average of States—I make no special claim in that respect for her—were debauched by the infamous principle "to the victors belong the spoils," which was at that time sapping and rotting the whole civil service of the country. It is that that the present policy and scheme have displaced—not perfect, nothing human in the way of political administration is perfect, but infinitely, a million-fold, preferable to what we escaped. It is from that that we have been rescued by the movement known as civil-service reform.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maryland will permit me, before this matter passes from the Senate, I desire simply to state that I interrupted my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] to say that the exemption in the civil-service law was of laborers and mechanics. My colleague said it was "laborers and workmen." I desire to say that my colleague was right and I was wrong. The words are "laborers and workmen."

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 8, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 7, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read, corrected, and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 10565. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 104) to increase the pension of Lucretia C. Waring, had requested a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. SHOUR, and Mr. MITCHELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 1118. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Chamberlain;

S. 1181. An act granting a pension to Adonia Huard, of New Orleans, La., widow of Hypolite Huard, deceased;

S. 1472. An act granting an increase of pension to Bettie Hord Brown;

S. 1481. An act granting an increase of pension to Halbert E. Paine;

S. 3553. An act granting a pension to Bvt. Lieut. Col. Amos Webster;

S. 3660. An act granting a pension to Thomas Edsall; and

S. 4676. An act for the protection of homestead settlers who enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4707. An act to provide for the compensation and expenses of special counsel for the Government in prize cases;

S. R. 172. Joint resolution authorizing the President in his discretion to waive the one-year suspension from promotion and to order reexamination of officers of the Army in certain cases; and

Concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed of the History of the Red Cross, authorized to be prepared and printed under joint resolution of Congress, approved August 2, 1883, and thereafter printed under the direction of the Secretary of State, together with the report on America's relief expedition to Asia Minor, under the Red Cross, 65,000 copies, of which number 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 10,000 for the House of Representatives, and 50,000 for the American National Red Cross, to be distributed by Miss Clara Barton, president. The copies herein provided for to be distributed by the president of the American National Red Cross shall be transmitted through the mails free of postage when contained in a wrapper bearing the following inscription: "Public Document. History of the Red Cross. Free."

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 5006. An act to increase the pension of Edward Starr;

H. R. 4488. An act granting an increase of pension to Peter Castle;

H. R. 378. An act granting a pension to Lowell H. Hopkinson;

H. R. 1801. An act granting an increase of pension to Catherine Clifford; and

H. R. 8428. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes.

RETURN OF FLAGS TO STATE OF OHIO.

Mr. BROMWELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 95) instructing the Secretary of War to return to the State of Ohio the flags of certain regiments of Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, instructed to return to the State of Ohio the regimental flags of the Twenty-first, Fifty-eighth, and Sixtieth Regiments of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, upon request of the governor of said State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. DOCKERY. Is the resolution in conformity with the usual practice?

Mr. BROMWELL. Entirely so.

Mr. CANNON. If this is to take no time, I make no objection. There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The following amendment, reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, was read, and agreed to:

Add to the bill the following:

"That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to turn over and deliver to the State of New York the flag now in his custody that was carried by the One hundred and thirteenth New York State Volunteer Infantry (Seventh Heavy Artillery), that was raised and enlisted in the United States service from the State of New York during the rebellion."

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution instructing the Secretary of War to return to the State of Ohio the flags of certain regiments of Ohio Volunteer Infantry; also to restore to the State of New York the flag carried by the One hundred and thirteenth New York Volunteer Infantry."

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended as recommended by the committee.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. BROMWELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to make a privileged motion. I desire to call up House bill No. 10565, making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898. This bill has just been returned from the Senate with amendments. I desire to submit the motion which I send to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the House agree to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 3.

That the House agree to amendment numbered 4, with amendments as follows:

On page 6 of the bill, after line 6, insert the following:

"PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

"For printing and binding for the Navy Department and its bureaus, to be executed under the direction of the Public Printer, $30,000.

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

"ENGRAVING AND PRINTING—

"For labor and expenses of engraving and printing: For salaries of all necessary clerks and employees other than plate printers and plate printers' assistants, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $30,000.

"For wages of plate printers, at piece rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants, at $1.25 a day each, when employed, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $12,000.

"For engravers', printers', and other materials, except distinctive paper, and for miscellaneous expenses, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $18,000."

On page 1, after the word "ninety-eight," in line 7, insert the words "and for other purposes;" and amend the title so as to read as follows: "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes."

Mr. CANNON. The motion which I make looks to the disposition of the Senate amendments. A part of my motion is to concur in the last amendment of the Senate with an amendment embracing two urgent items, which, if not adopted upon this bill and sent back to the Senate for its concurrence, would necessitate to-day the introduction of another urgency bill covering $70,000.

The amendments of the Senate follow substantially the House bill, except that one of those amendments involves an appropriation of $100,000 for printing for the War Department, which is immediately necessary.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I think that the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] are entirely proper and that they ought to be agreed to. They have had our careful examination.

Mr. CANNON. I move to concur in the Senate amendments with the amendments indicated in the paper which has just been read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the question will be put.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois state the motion?

Mr. CANNON. My motion is to concur in the Senate amendments with the amendments indicated in the paper which has just been read.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

EXAMINATION OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin—
Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that unless he has something which will not take up much time—

Mr. LACEY. I do not think this will take two minutes.
Mr. GRIFFIN. I wish to advise the gentleman from Illinois that we do not anticipate that this will take three minutes. It is merely to suspend the operation of a certain provision of law.

Mr. CANNON. Well, with the understanding that it does not take time. It is not before the House, is it?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Not yet. I was recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I have a conference report on the sundry civil bill that I want to dispose of as early as practicable, but I will not insist.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I move to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution No. 172, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 172) authorizing the President in his discretion to waive the one-year suspension from promotion and to order reexamination of officers of the Army in certain cases.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That during the existing war the President may, in his discretion, waive the one-year suspension from promotion and forthwith order the reexamination provided in certain cases by the third proviso of section 3 of the act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army and to regulate promotions therein."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. DOCKERY. Reserving the right to object, we should like to have the report read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri reserves the right to object, pending the reading of the report.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I will say that there is no report accompanying this. It was reported in the Senate and passed yesterday, and comes over this morning. It has been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House. I will say briefly that it provides for suspending the provision of the act of October, 1890, which requires a year to elapse after an officer has been examined for promotion before he can have a second examination. Now, as to those officers who were examined prior to the existing war, they are obliged to remain in that condition of suspension for a year before they can have another examination. In many cases that is doing a great injustice, in view of the fact that a large number of officers are being added to the line of the Army. In order that justice may be done them, this resolution provides for the suspension of that provision, and thereby they will be permitted to have another examination at any time that the Secretary of War or the President may order it. That is all there is to it.

Mr. STEELE. I will ask the gentleman if the War Department has recommended the passage of this measure?

Mr. GRIFFIN. It has.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not object to the consideration of this bill, but I desire to ask if there is a report accompanying it. Under the rules, there ought to be a report accompanying every bill. I was not exactly able to hear all that the gentleman said because of the conversation going on around me. I should like to have him again state some reason for the passage of this bill, and especially some emergent reason, if there is one, why it could not have waited until to-morrow, when we could have a printed report in the case.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I will say that this bill was considered by the Committee on Military Affairs this morning.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But I understood you to say that no report had been made upon it.

Mr. GRIFFIN. There is no report made by that committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How do we know—

Mr. GRIFFIN. The committee authorized me to call it up from the Speaker's table when it came in from the Senate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Without any report, though.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Now, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the act of October, 1890, provides as follows:

Provided, That should the officer fail in the physical examination and be found incapacitated for service by reason of physical disability contracted in line of duty, he shall be retired with the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted.

The second clause of that proviso is the one to which this measure is directed, and it is as follows:

But if he shall fail for any other reason, he shall be suspended from promotion for one year, when he shall be reexamined, and in case of failure on such examination, he shall be honorably discharged, with one year's pay, from the Army.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to officers who were examined four or five months ago, before this war was upon us, they are obliged to remain one year in a state of suspension before they can have another examination, whereas they may be able to-day to pass a creditable examination and retain their rank and their order of promotion. I say that that is a great injustice, and in view of the large number of officers who are being added to the Army these men should have a chance under that provision of law to be reexamined, and if they are not fitted for duty upon the second examination they will be retired permanently. That is all that this resolution proposes to do. It suspends the operation of the provision which requires a delay of one year.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. First, the proposed measure applies only to officers of the Regular Army?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. Secondly, if the officer should fail upon his first examination, he will still remain in the service—

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes; those hereafter examined.

Mr. SAYERS. Under the present law, will he remain in the service for a year?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. As other officers of the Army?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Certainly.

Mr. MARSH. It does not make any change in that.

Mr. HULL. It makes no change in that law.

Mr. GRIFFIN. No change whatever. It merely reduces the time within which they may have a reexamination.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not propose to object to it, but I think this bill affords an opportunity for a lot of officers to be promoted. Possibly that is all right, but if I understand the bill that is the effect of it. We might as well understand that. Let us not pass the bill under a misapprehension.

Mr. HULL. I should like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GRIFFIN] if it is not true that if the officer taking the reexamination is not promoted some other officer would be promoted, so that it makes no additional promotions. Is not that true?

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is true. That is a fact.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am not complaining of the bill at all, but I merely desired to know the facts about it.

Mr. CLARDY. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARDY. I should like to ask the gentleman if these examinations are not to be made at the instance of the Secretary of War or the President?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. CLARDY. The President or the Secretary of War must order the examination before it can be made?

Mr. GRIFFIN. The examinations are ordered by the President or the Secretary of War, certainly.

Mr. CLARDY. That is the provision of this bill which you propose now to pass?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Certainly. These examinations are conducted strictly according to existing law, with this difference, that the time is reduced from one year to a time which shall meet the pleasure of the President or the Secretary of War. It reduces the time, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. CLARDY. It simply gives the President or the Secretary of War authority to order a reexamination at once?

Mr. GRIFFIN. To order a reexamination at once, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] has suggested. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRIFFIN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4 to the bill (H. R. 10565) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4043) granting to the Kettle River Valley Railway Company a right of way through the north half of the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3596) to ratify the agreement between the Dawes Commission and the Seminole Nation of Indians, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a conference report on the sundry civil bill, and I ask that the reading of the conference report be omitted and that the statement of the House conferees be read.

[The conference report will be found in the Senate proceedings, page 6194 of the RECORD.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the reading of the conference report be omitted, and that the statement of the managers of the House be read. Is there objection?

Mr. MAXWELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the conference report ought to be read.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. CANNON. Who objects?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman from Nebraska does not understand the scope of the report. It is quite lengthy, and under the rule of the House the conferees on the part of the House are required to make a statement of the conference report, and it is the only intelligible paper to be read.

Mr. MAXWELL. All I ask, Mr. Speaker, is for a statement of the reasons.

The SPEAKER. Objection is withdrawn. The Clerk will read the statement.

The statement was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1899 submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report on each of said amendments, namely:

On Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 12: Appropriates for public buildings as proposed by the Senate, as follows: For completion of a one-story annex to the temporary post-office building at Chicago, $20,000; for completion of immigrant station at Ellis Island, N. Y., $134,150, with the requirement that $100,000 of said sum shall be paid from the immigrant fund; $2,500 for out-building for toilet-room purposes for post-office at Jacksonville, Fla.; repeals the law requiring sale of old post-office building in Detroit; and strikes out the appropriation of $45,000 proposed by the Senate for necessary repairs to mint building at San Francisco, Cal.

On Nos. 19 and 21: Appropriates $3,200 additional, as proposed by the Senate, for improvement of wharf and pier and for a contagious-disease hospital at the quarantine station at Tortugas, Fla., and $3,700, instead of $3,620, as proposed by the Senate, for quarantine station at San Francisco, Cal.

On No. 23: Appropriates $100,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $125,000, as proposed by the Senate, for heating apparatus for public buildings. On Nos. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, relating to light-houses, beacons, and fog signals: Appropriates as proposed by the Senate, as follows: Sankaty light station, Massachusetts, $500;

Plum Beach light and fog-signal station, Rhode Island, $0,000; Hart Island fog-signal station, New York, $2,500;

Hooper Island light and fog-signal station, Maryland, to cost not exceeding $0,000, $30,000;

Cape Fear light station, North Carolina, to cost not exceeding $70,000, $35,000;

Edmont Key light station, Florida, instead of $2,000, as proposed by the House, $3,500;

Red Fish Bar light station, Texas, $5,000;

Grand Traverse light and fog-signal station, Michigan, $5,500;

South Milwaukee light station, Wisconsin, $7,500;

Tail Point light and fog-signal station, Wisconsin, $7,500;

Depot for the Ninth light-house district, Michigan, $15,000;

Toledo Harbor light and fog-signal station, Ohio, to cost not exceeding $75,000, $37,500;

Cheboygan river front range-light station, Michigan, $1,750;

Lake St. Clair light and fog-signal station, Michigan, $20,000;

Mud Lake light station, Michigan, $3,500;

Head of St. Marys River range-lights, Michigan, $1,000;

Depot for Eleventh light-house district, $15,000;

Point no Point light station, Washington, $6,000;

Relief light vessel for the Fourth and Fifth light-house districts, $95,000; and strikes out the following appropriations proposed by the Senate:

Whitehead light and fog-signal station, Maine, $3,400;

Boon Island light station, Maine, $3,400;

Cape Elizabeth light station, Maine, $2,000;

Pollock Rip light and fog-signal station, Massachusetts, to cost not exceeding $80,000, $40,000;

Hog Island light and fog-signal station, Rhode Island, $35,000;

Cape May light station, New Jersey, $4,000;

Point Brown beacon light and fog-signal station, Washington, $6,000;

Battery Point light and fog-signal station, Washington, $6,000;

Relief light vessel for the Twelfth and Thirteenth light-house districts, $95,000;

Cape Lookout Shoals light vessel, North Carolina, $95,000.

On Nos. 66, 67, 68, 69, and 70, relating to the Light-house Establishment: Appropriates $425,000, instead of $400,000 as proposed by the House and $450,000 as proposed by the Senate, for supplies of light-houses; $800,000, instead of $675,000 as proposed by the House and $650,000 as proposed by the Senate, for repairs of light-houses; strikes out the provision authorizing the construction of auxiliary structures at a cost not to exceed $30,000; appropriates $720,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $730,000, as proposed by the Senate, for salaries of keepers of light-houses, and authorizes the lighting of Indian River, Florida, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 71 and 72: Makes the appropriations for pay of crews and surfmen employed at life-saving stations available, as proposed by the Senate, for the Life-Saving Service building at the Omaha Exposition, and authorizes the establishment of a life-saving station at or near Nahant, Mass., as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 77: Appropriates $2,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the purchase of eophones for the Revenue-Cutter Service.

On Nos. 78, 79, 80, and 81, relating to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing: Appropriates $475,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $455,000, as proposed by the House, for labor and expenses of engraving and printing, and $575,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $560,000, as proposed by the House, for wages of plate printers, and inserts the following provision:

"Provided further, That hereafter all bonds, notes, and checks shall be printed from hand-roller presses."

On No. 82: Appropriates $50,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $45,000, as proposed by the House, for the Bureau of American Ethnology.

On Nos. 83 and 84: Appropriates $165,000, instead of $160,000 as proposed by the House and $170,000 as proposed by the Senate, for preservation, etc., of collections in the National Museum, and limits amounts to be expended for drawings and illustrations to $5,500, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $3,500, as proposed by the House.

On No. 85: Appropriates $65,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $60,000, as proposed by the House, for the National Zoological Park.

On Nos. 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, and 96, relating to the Fish Commission: Appropriates for personal services at the respective stations as proposed by the Senate, and appropriates $140,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $132,500, as proposed by the House, for propagation of food fishes; strikes out the special appropriations proposed by the Senate for the stations at Leadville, Colo., and Woods Hole, Mass., and appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $4,818 for completion of the station at Erwin, Tenn., and $1,390 for the purchase of additional land for said station.

On No. 100: Appropriates for the Interstate Commerce Commission in the terms proposed by the Senate.

On No. 107: Authorizes the purchase of books for the law library of the Internal Revenue Bureau, and limits the cost per annum of all books and periodicals for said Bureau to $100.

On No. 108: Appropriates $20,000, as proposed by the Senate, for expense of transporting minor coin to applicants therefor.

On No. 109: Limits, as proposed by the Senate, the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department over public buildings to those outside the District of Columbia and military reservations.

On Nos. 105, 106, 107, 108, and 109: Appropriates, as proposed by the House, for an inspector of furniture at $2,500, and limits his expenses to not exceeding $1,000 per annum, and provides for a general inspector under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be appointed by the President, at $3,000 per annum and not exceeding $1,000 for actual necessary expenses.

On Nos. 110 and 111: Appropriates $20,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $25,000, as proposed by the House, for operation of pneumatic tubes.

On No. 112: Authorizes, as proposed by the Senate, the payment of $1,000 per annum to the collector of customs at Port Townsend, Wash., out of the appropriation for the enforcement of the Chinese exclusion act.

On No. 113: Appropriates $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, for numbering and adding machines for the Treasury Department.

On No. 114: Authorizes, as proposed by the Senate, the Secretary of the Interior to exchange certain property owned by the United States at Meridian Hill, in the District of Columbia, for certain property in the subdivision called Woodley Park, for the purpose of opening Cathedral avenue in accordance with the highway extension plans.

On Nos. 115, 116, 117, and 118: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, as follows: To provide flags for the center of the Capitol, $100; for cleaning and repairing works of art in the Capitol, $1,500; for repairs and improvements to the heating and ventilating apparatus of the Senate, $4,859; and authorizes the use of unexpended balance, $2,173.54, of appropriation for ventilation of the Senate for a ventilating exhaust fan for the attic story near the Supreme Court, in the Capitol.

On Nos. 119, 120, and 121: Makes verbal corrections in the text of the bill, and appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, for salaries and commissions of registers and receivers of two additional land districts in Alaska.

On No. 123: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $1,000 for maps of public-land States.

On No. 129: Strikes out the provision inserted by the Senate with reference to the publication of monthly reports filed by the mineral-land commission.

On Nos. 130, 131, 132, and 133, relating to the survey of public lands: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate as to surveying lands under land grants to the several States, said surveying to be secondary to the survey of townships occupied in whole or in part by actual settlers, etc.; and authorizes the payment of exceptional rates for surveying in the State of Nevada, as proposed by the Senate, and strikes out the limitation proposed by the Senate on the amount to be expended for examination of public surveys.

On No. 134: Inserts the provision with reference to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, which is fully set forth in the conference report.

On Nos. 135, 136, 137, and 138: Appropriates in the aggregate for the work of the Geological Survey $657,100, instead of $641,100 as proposed by the House and $673,100 as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 139 and 140: Authorizes, as proposed by the Senate, the use of $1,000 for the purchase of books and periodicals for the Government Hospital for the Insane, and inserts the provision proposed by the Senate regulating the custody and disbursement of funds in the hands of the superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane by or for the use of patients.

On No. 141: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate relating to the board of directors of the Columbian Institution for the Deaf and Dumb.

On Nos. 142, 143, 144, and 145: Appropriates in the aggregate $33,000 for the Howard University, instead of $35,000 as proposed by the House and $35,100 as proposed by the Senate; and requires that not less than $1,500 shall be used for normal instruction.

On Nos. 146 and 147: Appropriates $4,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $3,300, as proposed by the House, for the Yosemite National Park, and makes the appropriation available for protection as well as improvement.

On Nos. 147 and 148: Strikes out the appropriation proposed by the Senate of $4,000 for the Sequoia National Park, and $2,000 for the General Grant National Park.

On No. 150: Appropriates $25,000, as proposed by the Senate, for relief of the Des Moines River lands settlers.

On No. 151: Appropriates $4,000, as proposed by the Senate, for a pedestal for a statue of Daniel Webster.

On Nos. 152, 153, 154, 155, 157, 158, 159, 160, and 161, relating to armories and arsenals: Makes appropriations as proposed by the Senate, as follows: At the Rock Island Arsenal, for machines for the manufacture of siege carriages, $28,000, for extending electric-lighting plant, $8,450, and for improving the water power, $45,000; at the Frankfort Arsenal, $2,400 for electric lighting and workshops; and at the Springfield Arsenal, $3,000 for electric light and workshops; and strikes out the following appropriations proposed by the Senate: Twelve thousand five hundred dollars for new hospital building at the Rock Island Arsenal, and $12,500 for office building at the Watertown Arsenal.

On No. 156: Strikes out the appropriation of $1,800 proposed by the Senate for a dental pathologist for the Army Medical Museum.

On No. 162: Appropriates $2,000, as proposed by the Senate, for paving E street through Judiciary Park.

On No. 163: Strikes out the appropriation of $2,500 proposed by the Senate for a portrait of ex-President Cleveland.

On Nos. 164 and 165: Makes verbal corrections in text of the bill, and strikes out both House and Senate provisions concerning letting of contracts for electric lighting of certain parks and the Executive Mansion and Monument Grounds.

On No. 166: Strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate relative to the audit of accounts for telegraphic service.

On No. 167: Appropriates $491,163.20, as proposed by the Senate, for pay of the two additional artillery regiments authorized by the act of March 8, 1898.

On Nos. 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, and 175, relating to military posts: Appropriates $900,000, instead of $420,000 as proposed by the House and $920,000 as proposed by the Senate, for construction of buildings at and enlargement of military posts; authorizes the use of $50,000 of said sum for purchase of building sites; limits the cost of buildings at one-battery posts to $90,000, and for each additional battery to $30,000; appropriates $40,000 for the military post at Spokane, Wash., $30,000 for the military post at Fort Meade, S. Dak., and $30,000 for the military post at Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., and reappropriates for the fiscal year 1899 the appropriation of $40,000 made in 1898 for the military post at Bismarck, N. Dak.

On Nos. 176 and 177: Appropriates $40,000, instead of $95,000 as proposed by the House and $50,000 as proposed by the Senate, for improvement of the Yellowstone National Park, and strikes out the specific provision proposed by the Senate for a wagon road in said park from Gardiner to the Golden Gate.

On No. 181: Appropriates $60,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $75,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the Gettysburg National Park.

On Nos. 182, 191, 192, and 193: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate, diverting to specific objects appropriations for the Ohio, Mississippi, and Missouri rivers.

On Nos. 195 and 208: Appropriates, as proposed by the House, $225,000 for the Deep Waterways Commission, with a provision that the board shall report to Congress at its next session the progress of the work, and shall submit in their final report the probable and relative cost of 21 feet and 30 feet depths of said waterways.

On Nos. 196 and 197: Makes a verbal correction in the text of the bill and appropriates $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, for improving Oak Hill Cemetery, at Evansville, Ind.

On No. 198: Appropriates $3,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the Antietam battlefield.

On Nos. 199 and 200: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, for isolating buildings for minor contagious diseases, as follows: For Providence Hospital, $32,000, and for Garfield Memorial Hospital, $33,000; and repeals the appropriation of $30,000 made in 1897 for two isolating buildings in the District of Columbia.

On Nos. 201 and 202: Makes a verbal correction in the text of the bill, and appropriates $1,800, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $600 as proposed by the House, for rent for the offices of the Official Records of the Rebellion.

On Nos. 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, and 220, relating to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, for the Northwestern Branch at Milwaukee, $3,000 additional; for the Eastern Branch at Togus, $1,000 additional; for the Southern Branch at Hampton, Va., $3,000 additional, and for the Western Branch at Leavenworth, Kans., $13,000 additional, and strikes out the appropriation of $22,500 proposed by the Senate for an additional barrack at said Branch; makes the appropriation of $3,500 for quarters for women at the Pacific Branch at Santa Monica, Cal., available for alterations in the hospital buildings, and makes $25,000 of the appropriation for current expenses at the Danville Branch immediately available.

On No. 223: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, that hereafter all supplies for the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall be purchased, shipped, and distributed as directed by the Board of Managers.

On No. 225: Appropriates $500, as proposed by the Senate, for improvements in the office of the Register of Wills in the District of Columbia.

On Nos. 226, 227, and 228: Makes verbal corrections in the text of the bill, and appropriates $10,000, instead of $4,000 as proposed by the House and $14,000 as proposed by the Senate, for punishing violations of the intercourse acts and frauds.

On No. 229: Makes available for the fiscal year 1899 the unexpended balance of the appropriation for 1898 for defense in Indian depredation claims.

On No. 230: Appropriates $500, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,000, as proposed by the House, for counsel for Mission Indians.

On No. 231: Requires, as proposed by the Senate, that the printing of the opinions of the Attorney-General shall be done in accordance with section 383 of the Revised Statutes.

On No. 232: Appropriates to pay the widow of the late Justice Samuel F. Miller, $7,419.

On Nos. 234 and 235: Appropriates $60,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $50,000, as proposed by the House, for assistant district attorneys in special cases, and provides that $10,000 of said sum may be expended in the discretion of the Attorney-General.

On No. 236: Strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate to pay clerks of courts in South Dakota, Montana, and Washington the same fees and compensation as provided by law to similar officers in Idaho, North Dakota, and Oregon.

On No. 237: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate relative to the commission appointed by the President to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States.

On No. 238: Appropriates $100,000 for rent of court rooms instead of $90,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 240: Appropriates $215,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $220,000, as proposed by the Senate, for miscellaneous expenses of United States courts.

On No. 241: Authorizes, as proposed by the Senate, the payment of the clerk to retired Justice Stephen J. Field during the months of December, January, and February last.

On Nos. 243, 243, 244, 245, and 246: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $473,150.25 for payment of the Bering Sea awards; $5,000 for the International Industrial Conference, and $2,000 for temporary typewriters and stenographers in the Department of State, and provides that the members of the Nicaragua Canal Commission shall receive such compensation and allowances as the Secretary of State, with the approval of the President, may deem proper, and that the Army engineer member of said commission shall receive the same pay and allowances as the other two members.

On Nos. 248, 249, and 250: Appropriates $3,000, as proposed by the Senate, for repairs to buildings and grounds of the United States at Bismarck, N. Dak., and strikes out proposed reappropriation for fiber investigation in Department of Agriculture.

On No. 251: Strikes out the appropriation proposed by the Senate of $25,000 for a new edition of Charters and Constitutions.

On Nos. 252, 253, 254, and 255: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, to pay $5,000 to the heirs at law of the late Senators George and Harris, respectively, and provides for payment of a clerk to a Senator from October 3 to December 6 last.

On Nos. 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, and 270: Appropriates $3,392,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,992,000, as proposed by the House, for public printing and binding for Congress and the several Departments of the Government.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree upon the following amendments of the Senate:

No. 11, extending limit of cost of public building at St. Paul, Minn., by $250,000;

No. 13, appropriating $130,000 for public building at Annapolis, Md.;

No. 14, appropriating $50,000 for public building at Butte, Mont.;

No. 15, appropriating $37,350 for marine hospital at Chicago;

No. 16, appropriating $8,000 for marine hospital at Cleveland, Ohio;

No. 17, appropriating $18,625 for marine hospital at San Francisco;

No. 18, appropriating $5,700 for quarantine station, Delaware Breakwater, Delaware;

No. 20, appropriating $1,000 for quarantine station at San Diego, Cal.;

No. 23, appropriating $30,000 for establishing a quarantine station at Astoria, Oreg.;

Nos. 64 and 65, appropriating $35,000 each for a light-house tender for the Third Light-house district and one for the Great Lakes;

Nos. 73, 74, 75, 76, relating to the Revenue-Cutter Service, authorizing the appointment of a naval constructor for the Revenue-Cutter Service, the creation of a clothing fund, and the construction of two revenue cutters at $45,000 each, for use at Boston and Philadelphia, respectively; two revenue cutters at $160,000 each, one for service in the Gulf of Mexico and one for service at Charleston, S. C., and a revenue steamer, to cost $250,000, for service in the vicinity of the Columbia River Bar, Pacific coast;

Nos. 97, 98, and 99, establishing fish-cultural stations in the States of North Carolina, Georgia, and Washington;

No. 101, appropriating $19,398.95 to reimburse the Quandt Brewing Company;

Nos. 122 and 123, striking out the provision proposed by the House, that agents of the Land Office to prevent depredations upon public timber shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior;

Nos. 124, 125, and 126, appropriating $60,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $75,000, as proposed by the House, for protection of forest reserves, and striking out the provision proposed by the House that forestry agents shall be designated by the Secretary of the Interior;

No. 127, suspending the Executive orders and proclamations relating to forest reserves;

No. 149, to pay certain Indians of the Seminole tribe for alleged outrages committed upon them;

No. 170, for improving the harbor of Wilmington and Christians River, Delaware;

No. 180, appropriating $40,000 for additional land for the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park;

No. 182, appropriating $125,000 for the improvement of Providence River and Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island;

No. 183, relating to the Bridgeport Harbor, Connecticut;

No. 184, relating to Oakland Harbor, California;

No. 185, relating to the protection of the Sacramento and Feather rivers, California;

No. 186, appropriating $100,000 for improving Yaquina Bay, Oregon;

No. 187, relating to the improvement of the harbor at Coos Bay, Oregon;

No. 189, authorizing the construction of a high bridge across Rock River, on the line of the Illinois and Mississippi Canal, in Illinois;

No. 190, diverting $6,000 of the appropriation for improving the harbor at Cleveland, Ohio, for the repair and extension of the levee on Muskingum River, at Zanesville, Ohio;

No. 194, appropriating $30,000 for Mobile Harbor;

Nos. 221 and 222, authorizing the establishment of a sanitarium for disabled volunteer soldiers at Hot Springs, S. Dak., to cost $100,000;

No. 224, appropriating $15,000 to the heirs of those who were killed by an explosion at the torpedo station, Newport, R. I., in 1863;

No. 226, preventing payment of district attorneys appointed under section 767 and the act of February 27, 1897, beyond the period of the session of the Senate next succeeding the date of their appointment;

No. 239, for payment of expenses of district judges holding court outside of their districts;

No. 247, providing for the Paris Exposition;

No. 271, to acquire additional land for an addition to the Government Printing Office; and

No. 272, relating to the bringing of suits against the Government by officers of the United States.

The bill as it passed the House appropriated $45,445,273.31.

As it passed the Senate it appropriated $50,873,148.72, an increase of $5,428,875.41.

By the action of the conference committee the House will accept $2,537,940.48, and the Senate will recede from $1,054,520 of said increase, leaving $1,834,414.95 involved in the amendments upon which the conference committee have been unable to agree.

J. G. CANNON,

WM. A. STONE,

JOSEPH D. SAYERS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, there is one matter of correction in the report that I desire to make. There is a reported agreement as to the Paris Exposition. It was not agreed to and I want to report that as a disagreement. The conference report is right, but the report made by the House managers, under the rule, is the one that should be corrected.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the conference report be adopted.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois, before the vote is taken, whether the Northern Pacific matter, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE], was substantially accepted or not?

Mr. CANNON. There is an agreement touching the Northern Pacific grant. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, and the member from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE], formerly on the Committee on Public Lands, but now on the Committee on Appropriations, took the matter into consideration and the House conferees followed their judgment about it, and we were able to make an agreement touching the Northern Pacific grant.

Mr. LACEY. One other question. Was there an agreement reached as to the forest-reserve matter?

Mr. CANNON. There was no agreement reached on the forest reserve. I will say to my friend that last winter, or at the last session of the last Congress, this whole matter of forest reserve was legislated about upon an appropriation bill on a Senate amendment. The matter was referred by the Committee on Appropriations informally to the Committee on Public Lands and legislation was agreed upon, and an agreement worked out, as we supposed, and as Congress supposed at that time, that would settle the whole matter touching forest reserves. The Committee on Appropriations in that matter followed the House Committee on Public Lands.

Now, then, the Senate amendment touching the forest reserves, as I understand it, practically repeals that legislation and annuls entirely the Executive order issued by the late Administration touching forest reserves.

Mr. LACEY. Being substantially the proposition of the Senate in the last session; they are going back to that same proposition.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. This matter will come up afterwards. It has nothing to do with the motion to adopt this conference report?

Mr. CANNON. No; there is no agreement on that matter.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The legislation enacted in June, 1897, by the special session of this Congress did provide, it is true, for the forest acts to be performed, but there was only a suspension of these forest reserves for one year under the expectation and hope that the Interior Department would modify the line of this forest reserve, because in some of the States great outrage has been done by putting into forest reserve whole counties, towns, and farms, to the extent in one instance of 10,000 people. It seems to me that there ought to be some way to eliminate from the forest reserve such land, so that the people can have a proper local government.

Mr. CANNON. There is no agreement on the Senate amendment as to forest reserves. That matter is not involved in my motion to adopt the conference report. The gentleman is at liberty later on to make such motion as he may desire touching that matter.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; I will hear what he has to say.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Does the gentleman's motion comprehend all the amendments suggested by the committee, or does it give an opportunity for the House to vote upon the Senate amendments separately?

Mr. CANNON. The conference report, if the gentleman has followed it, absolutely agrees to and settles the matters of differences between the House and the Senate, at a rough estimate, on three-quarters or four-fifths of the matters of difference. We have reported back matters that we were unable to agree to. Now, if the gentleman has any particular matter in his mind, I can tell him the situation of it.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I desire to know what disposition was made of the fish station on Puget Sound which was in the bill?

Mr. CANNON. There is a disagreement upon that.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. There is a provision which the conferees of the House and the Senate disagree to—establishing a certain fish hatchery in Georgia. Is that embraced in the gentleman's motion?

Mr. CANNON. There is a disagreement as to the fish hatcheries in Georgia, one in North Carolina, and the one in Washington. They are not affected by my motion to adopt the conference report. Now, if there is no other matter, I move to adopt the conference report on the amendments we have agreed to. Those that we have disagreed to will come up later.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments specified, upon which there was no agreement, and agree to the request of the Senate for a further conference.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, there are several gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber who desire separate votes upon certain of the amendments, and it seems to me that we might expedite the passage of the bill by calling up the amendments serially.

Mr. CANNON. I will agree to that unless gentlemen are prepared to specify what amendments they want separate votes upon. Then they can have separate votes on those amendments, and the remainder can be disposed of together.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I want a separate vote upon the Senate amendment 194.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, if we are to have separate votes upon the several amendments, it seems to me that they ought to be taken up in their order.

The SPEAKER. They will be taken up in their order.

Mr. CANNON. I am quite content that the first amendment should be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment. Amendment No. 11 was read, as follows:

For the post-office, court-house, and custom-house, St. Paul, Minn.: The limit of cost of building, including heating and ventilating apparatus, fire-proof vaults, elevators, and approaches, complete, is hereby extended $250,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to contract for the completion of said building as aforesaid, within said limit of cost, in accordance with amended plans of said building to be prepared by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to cause suitable accommodations to be provided in said building for all officials of the United States located in said city who are entitled to quarters in public buildings.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to this amendment and concur in it.

Mr. CANNON. I will make a brief statement, and then the gentleman can pursue what course he chooses. I will yield to him if he desires time.

The amendment to which he refers extends the limit of cost for the public building at St. Paul by $250,000. About 1890 this public building was authorized, the cost not to exceed $800,000. The work has progressed, but it has not been completed. Since this building was authorized there has been something of growth at St. Paul, as elsewhere throughout the Northwest, and this amendment is an effort to increase the limit of cost, as I have said, by $250,000. The reasons for this proposed increase the gentleman from Minnesota can explain as he sees proper. There are several public-building items on this bill, some for an increase of the limit and two or three to authorize public buildings outright where there has never been any legislation touching the subject.

Now, if the gentleman desires to insist upon his motion that the House recede, I will yield to him. How much time does he desire?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Ten minutes, I think, will suffice.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will yield the gentleman five minutes; and if he wants more time, I will give it to him.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I will hurry on; I have no desire to occupy time needlessly.

Mr. CANNON. All right.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, this amendment to increase the limit of cost of the St. Paul public building was adopted by the Senate, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as an emergency amendment, designed to protect the property of the Government and to facilitate its business. The original appropriation was $800,000, and the city of St. Paul at that time, as a condition of getting that appropriation, made a gift to this Government of a block of land situated in the center of the city and valued probably at a quarter of a million dollars.

The plan of that building was designed somewhat after the Washington post-office. It was hastily and crudely made, and not adapted to the business of the Government desired to be placed in that building. As the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has stated, the business of the Government to be transacted in that building has grown very fast. As a consequence of this, numerous changes had to be made in the building; parts of it had to be torn out; other parts replaced; so that a very large amount of money has been wasted—practically wasted—in changing that building. And under the law as it stands, no further changes can be made. The result is that to-day the building not only can not be completed within the limit of cost, but even if completed would not be nearly sufficient for the wants of the Government.

The Treasury Department sent a special agent to St. Paul to investigate this matter. He made a report, which has been printed and is a part of Senate Document No. 141 of the present session. The Treasury Department also made a report in February last to the Senate, quite an elaborate report, embracing the results of considerable investigation and stating in detail the condition of this building. In addition to this, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department appeared before the Senate Committee on Appropriations and made quite an elaborate statement as to the condition of affairs. These different reports and this testimony state substantially this: That this building now is in such a condition that it can be finished at the cheapest possible expense and at the same time have an enlargement, without any waste to the Government; but if an attempt be made to finish the building under the present limit of cost, specifications would be made for only the cheapest kind of soft-wood finish; and even if this were done, there would not be sufficient funds on hand to finish the building.

Again, these reports state that there is not sufficient vault room in this building. Now, it should be remembered that this Federal building is not designed as a local building, but it is to accommodate, in the first place, the post-office of St. Paul, which has a revenue of about half a million dollars annually. It is to accommodate the United States Railway Mail Service of the tenth division, extending from the upper peninsula of Michigan away through the northern border to the Cascade Mountains, in the State of Washington.

It covers all the customs receipts of the State of Minnesota (there being but one customs district), except a small portion of the northeast border. It covers all the internal-revenue receipts, there being but one internal-revenue district of the State of Minnesota. It covers the United States circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, one of its sessions being held in St. Louis, the other in St. Paul. This business embraces all the States from Minnesota on the north to Arkansas on the south and Colorado on the west.

Of all this immense business—nearly one-third larger than that of any other circuit in the United States—one-half should be done in this building. It covers all the circuit court business of the State of Minnesota, there being but one judicial district in the State. It covers all the business of the district court. It covers also the weather bureau, the land office, and the surveyor-general, the surveys covering nearly 3,000,000 acres of our public lands.

It is to accommodate also the supervising inspector of steam vessels, both of the lakes and the river, extending west as far as Montana; the secret service, the civil service commission, the immigration bureau, the pension bureau, the United States engineering office, having jurisdiction of the improvement on the Upper Mississippi, extending down as far as Rock Island and covering all of the large reservoirs holding the immense bodies of water in the Upper Mississippi, designed to afford protection from floods; the agricultural bureau, the inspectors, and those engaged in microscopic work. Thus it will be seen that the business to be done in this building is immense.

Now, this report further shows that if this building were completed to-day there would be a deficiency of 8,546 square feet. So there is a necessity for an enlargement immediately. It further shows that the vault room in the local post-office department is insufficient to keep even the stamps. So that with half a million dollars of revenue derived from the local post-office, there is not room enough in the building to protect the stamps that afford this revenue.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question right there?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Has the work on this building been commenced?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Oh, yes; the walls are up.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, the limit of cost having been fixed in 1890 at $800,000, I will ask my friend whether, under the plans which were adopted and in view of the work which has been done, this building can be completed for that sum?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. No, sir; the Supervising Architect has informed the Senate Committee on Appropriations that it can not be completed even in the cheapest possible manner for that amount of money.

Mr. CANNON. That was my recollection. Then I will ask my friend further—he has full knowledge of the facts, and I know will answer frankly—whether, if this limit be not broken, the building will stand incomplete and unoccupied until it is broken?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I will answer that question frankly. I do not know. This would be the trouble: The building can not be completed for that amount of money, and if the Department should proceed to let contracts for finishing the building as far as possible in view of the amount of money at its disposal, it could finish a part of the building in the cheapest kind of soft-wood finish, leaving a part of the building unfinished. It could not provide the needed vault room; it could not provide sufficient accommodations for the public service.

The result would be that the cheap finish would be worn out in a public building of this kind, and would have to be torn out and replaced; so that thus there would be a large waste of money which the Government might as well throw into the fire so far as any practical utility is concerned. So that it would seem to me to be good business policy that this building should be completed in the cheapest possible way at once, so that the rent which the Government is compelled to pay, which amounts to five or six thousand dollars a year, may be saved, while at the same time the building would last for a long term of years and accommodate the business.

Now, if this amendment is adopted, it carries no present appropriation. All it provides is that the limit of cost shall be fixed, that the plans may be changed, that these vaults may be enlarged, that additional floor space, aggregating about 15,000 feet, may be provided, and that would accommodate the business of the Government for about twenty years. That is what this amendment does. No money is appropriated by this amendment. It is designed that the most careful consideration shall be given to the changes, and that no more improvident construction shall be adopted, but that the changes shall be made as soon as possible and the money not made available until the appropriations for 1900 are made.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if my friend will allow me, I am quite content to say, concerning this Senate amendment, that St. Paul is a real city, with a real business, and it has a real necessity for a great public building. The country, the city, and the business are growing all the while. I want to say further that I have no doubt that if the Supervising Architect had made plans to make this building a substantial fireproof building, without something of ornamentation, $800,000 would have made a first-class building; but from a revival of my recollection by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] and from a little investigation I have given along the same line while he was talking, I understand the condition to be that the Supervising Architect and his assistants have laid out a building, apt enough in itself if it had not exceeded the limit, that can not be completed except under the terms of the Senate amendment.

Now, it is not as bad a case as the Omaha case. That was the worst one I ever knew, except here in the city post-office in Washington. You will recollect that three or four years ago, with a law upon the statute books that no plans should be made that would exceed the limit of cost, they deliberately went to work and outside of the limit of cost changed the finish from stone to marble, on the request of three or four people, and while that was done in the teeth of the law by the Treasury Department, it made it absolutely necessary that we should appropriate $200,000 in addition to the limit, as I recollect it. We did that. The same thing was done in the city post-office building here on the Avenue. We have broken the limit, and broken the limit because the Supervising Architect under the late Administration did not obey the law.

Now, there is the condition as I understand it, and it is for the House to say, as this building has been authorized, as the site has been donated, as the work is progressing and can not be finished, whether it is wise to break this limit. Your committee, acting for you, did not agree to this amendment because we felt it was a matter of which the House should be advised, when it could take such action as it saw proper. So far as I am concerned, I am ready for a vote.

Mr. OTJEN. How much will this increase the limit?

Mr. CANNON. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment, as follows:

For post-office at Annapolis, Md.: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to select, designate, and procure, by purchase or otherwise, a suitable site, and to commence the construction of a fireproof post-office building thereon, in the city of Annapolis, Md., said site to contain at least 18,000 square feet of ground, and to leave an open space around the building to be erected thereon, including streets and alleys, of 40 feet, $120,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment.

Mr. MUDD. I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk. I believe that motion takes precedence.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves to recede and concur with an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 13, and concur therein with the following amendment:

Strike out the words "to commence the construction of" and insert in

Now thereof the words "to construct;" strike out all after the word "Maryland" to the end of the paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred thousand dollars;" strike out the word "post-office," in line 9, and "post-office building," in line 12, and insert in lieu thereof the words "public building for post-office and custom-house."

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD].

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, the object of my motion is to provide an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of constructing a building for the joint purposes of a post-office and custom-house in the city of Annapolis, Md. The amendment which I offer changes the proposition of the Senate in some respects, which I will explain. The Senate provided for an appropriation of $120,000, and I will state here in that connection that if my information is correct, the proposition was adopted unanimously by the Senate.

The Senate proposition also provided certain minimum dimensions for the lot upon which the building should be erected. If the appropriation shall be reduced to $100,000, it is possible that the provision for the dimensions of the site ought to be stricken out and that matter left entirely discretionary with the Treasury Department.

I have also changed the proposition in another and very material respect, in that I provide for the erection of a "public building" to serve both for a post-office and custom-house, instead of a "post-office building."

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a meritorious proposition. A bill for the construction of a post-office building or a general public building in Annapolis has passed one House or the other, with the exception of the last two or three Congresses, in nearly every Congress for the last ten or fifteen years. In the Forty-ninth or Fiftieth Congress a bill for the same amount—if I am correctly informed—which I provide for here passed both the House and Senate, but was vetoed by President Cleveland.

I need not remind members that Annapolis is the capital of the State of Maryland. It was for a short time the capital of the United States. In addition to that, it is also a port of entry and has, or rather ought to have and wants to have, a custom-house. It is true that it is not a very large city, but I apprehend that there are but few, if any, of the capitals of the older States in the United States that have not public Federal buildings. As the House will remember, Annapolis is the seat of the Naval Academy. It has several colleges, academies, and seminaries. With the permanent population and this transient population and that of the outlying and contiguous country, not included in the census as a part of the total population of the city, I think I am safe in saying that the persons for whom postal facilities are necessarily provided number 20,000 or upward.

Now, the conferees reported against this proposition which was put on by the Senate, because, as I understand, they say, or they think, that this is not a post-office building year. If the city of Annapolis ought to have a public building, it is just as well that we should give it to her now as at any other time. My district and the capital of my State should not suffer because I and those interested with me may have been more vigilant than others, and have succeeded in having this appropriation put on in the Senate. I am not the only member of the House who has to go to the Senate occasionally to get consideration for propositions that we can not have considered here, because of the greater strictness of our rules.

I could not offer this amendment to the sundry civil bill in the House, as our rules would not allow it. It has been unanimously put on by the Senate, and I do not believe there is a member of this whole House who will say that the city of Annapolis ought not to have a public building for its post-office and custom-house jointly. I hope that the House will not turn down this proposition merely because it is offered in a year in which members generally can not get public-building bills considered. I hope that the House will manifest a broader and a better public spirit than that.

Mr. LITTLE. I should like to know if this bill has been reported by the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. MUDD. Not this year; but it has been reported in many Congresses previous to this, and the bill has never been submitted without being favorably reported and, if I am correctly informed, unanimously reported.

Mr. LITTLE. Can you state why the bill has not been reported at this session? We have been sitting now for a number of months.

Mr. MUDD. One of the reasons why it has not been reported is because it had not been offered in this Congress. The bill has not been introduced; and if you want to know why it was not introduced, I will answer that it was not introduced because it was well understood in the House that no such bill would be considered during this session.

Mr. LITTLE. Why did you assume that it would not be considered, and why was it not introduced?

Mr. MUDD. The gentleman has asked me a conundrum which

I hardly think I ought to be expected to answer. I hope the gentleman will throw himself upon the very intelligent judgment and wisdom of the unanimous Senate upon this proposition and not press questions of that kind as to why the House has not done certain things.

Mr. LITTLE. Has not the House an organized committee on this subject?

Mr. MUDD. I believe that goes without saying.

Mr. LITTLE. I should like to have a minute or two on this proposition.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I have no purpose to oppose the equities of the amendment in the interest of my friend's city; but I think that this House ought to be able to take care of itself for a little while. It is a matter of common knowledge in the House that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has not had a business session during this session of Congress. There are to-day resting in that committee, I think I can safely say, fifty bills—I know I can say many bills—with just as much justice and necessity for them as there is for this measure. Why, there are comparatively great cities in this country without a custom-house and post-office building.

As a member of that committee I protest against this manner of proceeding. Every member of this House who represents a city that is entitled to a building of this character ought to have the right to be heard in the regular channels of legislation, and we ought not to be asked to adopt a bill as an amendment upon the sundry civil bill, a new proposition, when other members of the House have not taken advantage of that mode of procedure, if they could. Now, it is just simply a question whether the House is willing to treat itself in this sort of a way. It is not a question whether this building ought to be had or not.

I have no doubt it ought; but there are many in the same situation, and whenever the powers that rule this House agree that we have reached a time when the country can have these public buildings, I am ready and anxious that a reasonable number should be constructed, wherever they are necessary. But I do think that the House ought not to agree to this proposition. It ought not to put the members of the House in the position of passing a bill here for one public building when they themselves have had no opportunity to present their own measures. I protest against it, and I say that the House ought not to agree to it. It raises the question whether the other end of the Capitol is to do the legislating or not. We are met here with the statement that this bill has not been introduced in the House—and I know gentlemen who have introduced bills and who have sought to have them considered in the committee and have not been able to do so for six months.

A MEMBER. Six years.

Mr. LITTLE. Six years, as gentlemen around me suggest. I have been undertaking it myself, but I would not take advantage of this situation. I would not, in the face of the existing conditions, undertake to embarrass my associates here by pressing a bill in the Senate for a building in my district and thereby gain an unfair advantage over them. I believe when we undertake to legislate on that subject we ought to legislate in a legitimate channel; we ought to go to the committee and there secure from that committee a report; and when the majority of this House is willing to act we can do it, and if it is not willing to do it, we must abide our time. But that is no reason why we should submit to this piece of partial legislation in favor of one small city and neglect many larger cities in the United States.

Mr. HANDY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from Delaware?

Mr. LITTLE. I will.

Mr. HANDY. I understood the gentleman to say that he had no doubt this was a worthy amendment put on by the Senate?

Mr. LITTLE. I presume the building is needed.

Mr. HANDY. Then when you come to face the proposition you will concur in the Senate amendment. If you think it is worthy, would you vote against it because some bill touching the same general subject had been improperly kept from consideration?

Mr. LITTLE. I will answer my friend candidly. I would, especially under the conditions which surround us here. The House has a regular, organized committee for the consideration of these matters. It has many bills absolutely demanded by the necessities of the public service of the country—custom-houses, post-offices, and buildings of that character—and every one of them sleeps in the bosom of that committee, which has not had a meeting in this session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter in which I have no especial interest; but it seems to me that if the gentleman from Arkansas had kept pace with past legislation in regard to public buildings he would have found that for years it has been the custom to authorize an appropriation for a public building at the capital of a State where there is no public building. I think each State has a public building except the State of Maryland.

Mr. LITTLE. Has the State of Utah any public building?

Mr. SAYERS. I expect so; we have been erecting a good many buildings in Utah. The gentleman from Utah can state as to that. If the State of Utah has not a public building it is because it has not been asked for. Now, the merit of this amendment lies in the fact that it is necessary. In the second place, the capital of Maryland is the only State capital, so far as I know, that has not a public building, and it has been the custom for years past to appropriate money for constructing one in capitals where there was none.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I want to say that the State of Washington was denied one in 1890.

Mr. SAYERS. Has it not one now?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. No.

Mr. SAYERS. Then probably the Senators from Washington have not asked for it.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. They have been derelict in their duty.

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, no; I would not say that.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. We have been denied what has been given to the capital of every other Western State.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the question now before the House, I think, very fairly illustrates the folly of our method of procedure in the selection of sites and the expenditure of public money for public buildings. In my humble judgment, there is no more wasteful, and there has been no more wasteful, exhibition of the expenditure of public money than in the erection of public buildings throughout the country. We always pay for more than we get, and we always get more than we need. We have fallen into the habit of spending thousands every year for the purpose of "architecture," for the purpose of "preserving art," for the purpose of "educating our people in art," with these abortions of art that are scattered all over the country, called public buildings. Instead of pursuing a sensible course, erecting a public building of utility, business buildings, we spend untold millions, or have, in trying to erect things of so-called beauty.

Now, this illustrates well the procedure. Here is a proposition to appropriate $100,000 for the erection of a custom-house and post-office. I have before me a table showing a statement of the custom business for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897. In the list I find Annapolis, Md., and not one dollar of customs revenue was collected at Annapolis in that fiscal year. That was last year; not a dollar. Yet the table shows that there were two persons employed there to collect that nil dollar, at a cost of about $1,000 to the Government. Now, it may be that no customs were collected there because there was no custom-house in which to collect them. The gentleman ought to remember that when he makes his argument. Again, it is a town of perhaps 10,000 inhabitants. The gentleman says 20,000 with its suburbs. It has a post-office. They have a delivery system there, have they not?

Mr. MUDD. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Wherever there is a delivery system, there is a removal of the necessity for spacious buildings for the post-office purposes, at least in part.

Now, let me represent, if I can, what would be an infinitely more sensible course for us to pursue. We have a building in the city of Chicago, an immense building at the present authorized cost of $4,000,000. We are building that on a block of ground which I was informed a few days ago by a competent authority was worth $6,000,000. We tore down a building to make room for the new one that has cost the Government of the United States more than four and a half million dollars, and upon which we put improvements in the form of a lean-to addition that four or five years ago cost $250,000.

But for this building before it is completed, as every gentleman knows, with the railroading process and in the combinations that are made in regard to buildings of this kind, there will be an increase of appropriation, so that the Government will have invested in land and buildings $12,000,000; and yet it is true, I think, that of the million or more of people in the city of Chicago not one in ten ever visits that building for any business purposes. I have been informed, and I have made diligent inquiry, that the cost of these magnificent modern buildings in the city of Chicago has been less than a million and a half dollars. No one of them has cost more than a million and a half dollars, and yet there are buildings there that will have a floor space largely exceeding that of the $6,000,000 building when we have it completed.

How much better it would have been, how much better it would be, Mr. Speaker, if instead of lavishing our money in this ruthless way we were to build a better building than any of the modern buildings in the city of Chicago at a cost of a million and a half upon a quarter of the land, or at a total expenditure of $3,000,000 for land and structure, and save the $9,000,000 to the United States. If we want to lavish that money in expenditure, how much better it would be to take of that saving $10,000 and build a $10,000 building in 900 of the towns where there are second and third class offices. Instead of throwing away our money in abortive art, instead of giving these great advantages to a certain part of the cities, let us pursue the sensible course of building business buildings, such as business men would erect, and then we shall have the means of scattering all over this country visible monuments of the Government that we have in post-office buildings for all Presidential offices.

I think instead of this logrolling process, instead of these combinations that are made to give extravagant buildings to certain particular favored places, it would be wise to pursue the course of sensible business men, giving to every large city all that it needs in a business building and then let us use that surplus that we have saved in building these other erections all over the country. In that way the benefits would be distributed.

I insist that a comparatively commodious building is more of a necessity in second, third, and some fourth class post-offices than in some of the great cities. In the city of New York there are hundreds and thousands of men, I undertake to say, who have never visited the post-office or the custom-house in their lives. Such buildings in the large cities serve the convenience of comparatively few people, the greater number being accommodated in other ways.

What I have said now is not particularly in opposition to the proposition of my friend from Maryland [Mr. MUDD]; for if the policy urged upon us is to be pursued, I admit the force of much that he says, and that the capital of his State, with others, should be provided with public buildings. But my object is to make a mild protest against the resumption of this method of combining to get millions out of the Treasury of the United States for a few cities, leaving all the rest to wrestle with the proposition of postal facilities as they can. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word further, and then I will ask for a vote.

There are on this bill two propositions for the construction of public buildings—one at Annapolis and the other at Butte, Mont. Now, I do not know that I care about discussing the general policy of the erection of public buildings. I concur in much that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has said. I have nothing to say in defense of Chicago. I have abused that city in my mind very often; but it never did any good. [Laughter.] She kept on growing until she has nearly 2,000,000 people; and last year the customs revenues were over $5,000,000, the postal revenues about the same amount, saying nothing of the internal-revenue collections, which, according to my recollection, were over $10,000,000—ten or twelve million dollars.

The truth is that it is the great trading depot for the great West and Northwest. It is true, we had to tear down a building there and put up another; but I want to correct the notion of my friend here that the building now being erected is to cost more than $4,000,000. It is the one great building—the only one within my knowledge—the plans for which are complete and the contracts for which are being made inside of the limitation. It will cost no more than $4,000,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to say to the gentleman that $250,000 more than the estimate has already been expended in fixing the subfoundation.

Mr. CANNON. I say that the subfoundation and all of the structure will not cost to exceed $4,000,000. I do not care about defending its merits or attacking its shortcomings; but I want to say to my friend that there are people in Illinois, in public life and out of public life, who have determined that this building shall not cost more than the amount authorized; and it will not, if I am reliably informed.

Now, touching the pending amendment, the amount proposed, as modified, is $100,000 for a public building at Annapolis. Last year the postal revenues at Annapolis were $10,000. How much of that amount was due to the immediate presence or vicinity of the Naval Academy I do not know. Annapolis is an old town. It is the capital of Maryland. But the great city, the commercial city, the business city of Maryland is, of course, Baltimore. Now, we have authorized over $1,000,000 of expenditure for public buildings at Annapolis this session.

We are going to have a most magnificent outfit for the Naval Academy there—authorized upon the naval bill under the leadership of the chairman of the Naval Committee and the honored gentleman from New York. I am not here to discuss that matter. That is behind us, and the buildings which are to be erected are before us. It is not necessary that this sum of $100,000 should be expended this year to give employment to people living in Annapolis, because they are going to be quite well employed in the construction of the improvements connected with the Naval Academy.

My objection to this paragraph and the next one I will state. These are Senate amendments authorizing public buildings not now authorized by law. In the present condition of the Treasury it was the deliberately adopted policy of this House that this session of Congress should not be a public-building session. I have had to wait in regard to a public building at Joliet. That city has postal revenues amounting to fifty or sixty thousand dollars annually; it has a large population. A delegation from that city was down here and said to me, "Why, Mr. CANNON, there can be no trouble about Joliet getting a public building; you are chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and you can get whatever you want." I said that I would have to take "pot luck" along with my brethren, and that even if this were a public-building session, the bare fact that I was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations was bond and security that Joliet could not get a public building.

Now, there are fifty or sixty or seventy-five gentlemen, vigorous representatives of cities where they need public buildings quite as much as they do at Annapolis, and, I dare say, as to most of them, a great deal more. Now, I want the House to act advisedly about this matter. If in our action on this amendment of the Senate and the next one in regard to public buildings we are to depart from the policy we have adopted, well and good. That is for the House to say. But if the House should vote down the motion of the gentleman from Maryland to concur with the Senate amendment, then I shall have every confidence when we go back into conference that the Senate will be compelled to recede, as the body which proposes legislation is always compelled to recede if the other body will not accept it. I ask for a vote.

Mr. MUDD. Will the gentleman yield to me a few moments?

Mr. CANNON. I have already yielded to the gentleman. I want to be just to him.

Mr. MUDD. Very well. If the gentleman declines to yield, I will move to strike out the last word and take the floor in my own right.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to my friend two minutes.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, we are not asking this public building at Annapolis for the sake of giving employment to the people of that city. Nor should we be deprived of what are the just dues of the State of Maryland, as the gentleman from Illinois seems to argue, because the United States Government maintains a Naval Academy at that place.

Mr. Speaker, all the argument that has been made against this proposition is based upon the general objection to extravagance for post-office buildings. That should be no argument in this particular case. The gentleman from Texas has stated, and stated more strongly than I could, that, with the exception of two or three States recently admitted into the Union, there is no State in this country whose capital city has not a public Federal building. If we are entitled to an appropriation for such for post-office and custom-house purposes in the city of Annapolis, it is for the House to say whether $100,000 is an extravagant appropriation for such a building as we ought to have.

The amendment provides for an iron, fireproof structure. We ought to have a satisfactory and suitable building or we ought to defer the construction of one until we can get such a building. If we can not have a good building, we ought not to have any. The propriety of this principle has been exemplified, Mr. Speaker, more strongly than in any other case of which I have knowledge in the case of the Naval Academy.

In that instance, in response to just such arguments as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has been pleased to make here in opposition to this motion, the Government erected cheap structures for the Naval Academy, just such as the gentleman would advise us to erect now at Annapolis. The result has been that those buildings have become so worthless and insecure that we have been obliged to make large appropriations for the erection of new structures to take the place of those that have to a great extent been tumbling down, though erected in the last ten or fifteen years, because of the cheap and haphazard system of construction that some gentlemen seem to think it the part of wisdom to apply to public buildings in which they may happen to feel no especial concern.

There is no economy to the Government in cheap and carelessly constructed buildings. The State of Maryland ought not to be discriminated against in this matter. A measure of this kind, I repeat, has been reported time and time again unanimously, and has been acted on favorably by both Houses of Congress. There is no reason in the world why this proposition should be voted down except such as may be based upon the bald contention that my State ought not to have this building because other States and districts can not get their buildings at this session.

Mr. CANNON obtained the floor.

Mr. LITTLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether it is in order to amend this amendment by a provision for an additional building.

The SPEAKER. At Annapolis?

Mr. LITTLE. No, sir; at another point.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman might offer such an amendment as he wants, but I will be entirely frank, and say to him that I shall be compelled to make a point of order on it.

Mr. LITTLE. And I will be frank in saying to the gentleman that I think none of these buildings ought to be constructed in this way; but if we are to have them at certain points, then justice ought to be done to other places.

Mr. CANNON. There is great force in what the gentleman says.

Mr. LITTLE. If it is in order, I will offer my amendment.

The SPEAKER. Upon the statement of the gentleman, the Chair would say that his amendment would not be in order.

Mr. LITTLE. My proposition is for the construction of a building at another place.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman had offered his amendment, I should have been compelled to make a point of order against it.

Mr. LITTLE. I felt pretty sure of that.

Mr. CANNON. I now ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MUDD, that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment, it was rejected; there being on a division (called for by Mr. MUDD)—ayes 26, noes 65.

The motion of Mr. CANNON that the House further insist upon its disagreement was agreed to.

Mr. HARTMAN. Is that amendment 13 or 14?

The SPEAKER. Thirteen.

Mr. HARTMAN. I want to be heard on amendment 14.

The SPEAKER. That has not yet been reported. It will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read Senate amendment 14, as follows:

Page 4, after line 5, insert:

"To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to select, designate, and procure, by purchase or otherwise, a suitable site for a public building in the city of Butte, Mont., there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000. Said site shall contain at least 16,000 square feet of ground, and shall leave an open space around the building to be erected thereon, including streets and alleys, of at least 40 feet. The appropriation herein made shall be available during this fiscal year for the purchase of said site."

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman desire to submit a motion?

Mr. HARTMAN. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to recede and concur.

Mr. CANNON. Now, does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. HARTMAN. Very briefly.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, the proposition to construct a public building at the city of Butte naturally involves the inquiry as to what is the size of the town and the necessity for such a building. The town has about 40,000 inhabitants, and the record presented by the Post-Office Department shows that in 1881 the receipts from the post-office alone were $3,738. In 1891 they had increased to $35,618. The net receipts in 1881 were $4,678. In 1891 they had increased to $23,036, while for 1895 the receipts amounted to $38,976.66.

In addition to the necessity of the post-office, requiring a public building, there is a United States court held at that place, and there is also a district for the collection of customs receipts. The United States marshal also has a suboffice at that place, and there are many requirements of the Government which demand the construction and maintenance of a Government building there. Of the $2,700 per year that is paid for rent for the post-office alone in Butte, $1,800, or two-thirds of it, is paid by the citizens of the town, only $900 being paid by the Government of the United States.

There is a rapidly increasing business in the town, dependent largely upon the production of copper. Something like 120,000,000 pounds of copper were produced in that city in the year 1896. It has 5 railroads, and the railroad business for the year 1895 amounted to 3,000,000 tons. There are 15 churches; a $100,000 public library, with $50,000 worth of books; a $140,000 court-house; 15 miles of electric street railroads, also a cable-car line; 6 smelters; 5 quartz mills, containing 350 stamps; 2 daily and 4 weekly newspapers; 1,500 patented mines; waterworks that cost $1,500,000; 6 hospitals; 12 schoolhouses, most of them large and handsome brick structures, costing $500,000; over 4,500 pupils and nearly 100 school-teachers; a city tax roll of $15,000,000, with a county tax of $22,000,000, and street improvements which have cost the city over $300,000; a splendid system of sewerage, and an electric-light system costing $200,000.

It is probably the best business town on earth in proportion to its size. I do not think there is any question but what that is true.

Mr. BURKE. Does the gentleman state that there are six hospitals in the town?

Mr. HARTMAN. That is true.

Mr. BURKE. Six hospitals?

Mr. HARTMAN. That is true; and I will explain to the gentleman the necessity, because I understand the insidious purpose of the question. There are six hospitals there for this reason: Seven thousand men are employed in the mining industry. These men work beneath the surface of the earth, in shafts, tunnels, and all the underground work of the mines. It is a dangerous occupation for any man to be engaged in. I say it is a credit to the city that it has prepared hospitals for the care of men who are unfortunate enough to be injured in these works.

Mr. BURKE. I agree with the gentleman fully. I did not understand the situation.

Mr. HARTMAN. That is the situation. It is exclusively a mining town, the greatest mining town on earth, and the greatest business town on earth in proportion to its size.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that nothing that any man can say will carry this amendment. It is like talking to a jury the verdict of which is already made up. I move to concur, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana moves to recede and concur.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House insist.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HARTMAN) there were—ayes 53, noes 43.

Accordingly the motion of Mr. CANNON was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, amendment 15 relates to the marine hospital at Chicago, 16 to the marine hospital at Cleveland, and 17 to the marine hospital at San Francisco. I should like to know if a separate vote is required on those.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to have a separate vote on amendment No. 16.

Mr. CANNON. It is quite evident that there are a good many of these amendments which will not require separate votes.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote required on any of the remaining amendments?

Mr. ADAMSON. I should like a separate vote on amendment No. 98.

Mr. STROWD of North Carolina. I should like a separate vote on No. 97.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. And on 194.

Mr. HANDY. I should like a separate vote on amendment 176.

Mr. DE VRIES. And on amendments 127 and 185.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I desire a separate vote on 99 and a couple of others which are not numbered in the bill which I have in my hand. They refer to fog signals and light-houses.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] give the numbers?

Mr. CANNON. I do not find them.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I think the numbers are 58, 59, and 60.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote is desired on amendments 58, 59, and 60.

Mr. BURTON. On Nos. 16 and 190 and the amendment to provide for a light-house tender on the Great Lakes. I am not able to give the number, as it is not printed in the bill as originally reported.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois give the number?

Mr. CANNON. I am trying to find it.

Mr. TONGUE. I wish a separate vote on amendment 186.

Mr. ELLIS. And on No. 23.

The SPEAKER. Are there any other separate votes desired?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. On 194.

Mr. CANNON. Sixty-five is the light-house amendment.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote is desired on that.

Mr. HILBORN. I wish a separate vote on amendment 184.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire a separate vote on amendment 273.

The SPEAKER. Is that all?

Mr. CANNON. My colleague [Mr. PRINCE] wants a separate vote on 189.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Will the chairman of the committee [Mr. CANNON] allow me to ask him a question for information? I desire to ask if the gentleman desires the House to disagree to amendment 70, on page 27?

Mr. CANNON. What amendment is that—for the revenue cutter?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The revenue cutter.

Mr. CANNON. We recommend disagreement on the amendments relating to revenue cutters.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I desire a separate vote on No. 70.

Mr. CANNON. Is a separate vote desired on 99?

The SPEAKER. It has been requested.

Mr. CANNON. My colleague [Mr. WHITE of Illinois] wants a separate vote on 15.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the numbers of the amendments on which separate votes have been requested: 15, 10, 22, 58, 59, 60, 65, 70, 97, 98, 127, 176, 184.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. And 99.

The SPEAKER. Also 127, 176, 184, 185, 186, 189, 190, 194, 273.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Is No. 99 included?

The SPEAKER. No. 99 has been included. The question is on insisting on the disagreement of the House to the other amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the fifteenth amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For marine hospital at Chicago, Ill.: For invalid elevator, including dynamo, $2,350; for new building for boiler and power plant, isolation ward, stable, and laundry, $26,000; in all, $27,350.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote is desired.

The Clerk read as follows:

For marine hospital at Cleveland, Ohio: For boiler house, stack, and new boilers, $3,000.

Mr. BURTON. I move that the House recede and concur.

Mr. CANNON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, this is the oldest marine hospital on the Great Lakes. It was completed and opened in 1852. The immediate occasion for repairs upon it is that for a little more than twenty years it was leased to a private corporation for a hospital in the city of Cleveland—from 1875 until the 1st of April, 1896, when the Government took possession again. It was found after the twenty years' lease of the building it was in very bad repair. There is a special need of new boilers and a boiler house, and other repairs more extensive than those which could be carried on under the general appropriation.

In the official report of the Surgeon-General, on page 44, he states, speaking of the time when it was returned after the expiration of the lease, the 1st of April, 1896:

The building was found to be in very bad state of repair in all of its departments, and the Inspector from the Supervising Architect's Office was detailed to make an examination of its condition and report upon the improvements immediately necessary to place it in condition for occupancy, and his report places the estimated expenditure at $3,000.

This is a small sum compared with the original cost, which was about $120,000, but this expenditure is necessary to make the building convenient and suitable. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, there are many appropriations that under proper conditions would be apt, and there are many that are absolutely necessary, and that is especially so in these war times. Now, the Marine-Hospital Service is a valuable service, but after examination and cross-examination of the chiefs of that service it will be seen that this bill carries a great increase in appropriations for the Marine-Hospital Service. Two or three times we were in consultation with the Surgeon-General and asked him again and again to revise his estimates from the standpoint of those absolutely necessary and those that were desirable and those that could wait.

Now, there are many appropriations that for the service are more necessary than this appropriation the gentleman asks to have adopted. That same thing is true of Chicago Marine Hospital. We have just voted to further insist upon our disagreement as to that. The truth is that both of these matters, at Chicago and Cleveland, can wait, and the service will not suffer by their waiting until we get through with the extraordinary expenditures we are now making.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is a vast difference between the Chicago hospital and the Cleveland hospital. In Chicago the greater part of the expense is for the new building—$25,000 is for new construction—while this is for necessary repairs. There are about the same number of patients in the two hospitals from year to year.

Mr. CANNON. At all of these hospitals there is a general fund appropriated for repairs. Heretofore there has been appropriated for that general fund $30,000 only, but we took the time into view, and when we made the appropriation for the repair of hospitals we increased it, the general fund, to $50,000, almost doubled it, for repairs. I will say to my friend that from that general fund absolute, necessary repairs can be made in Cleveland as well as at any other place. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURTON) there were—ayes 22, noes 41.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion to insist.

The motion to insist was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For quarantine station, Astoria, Oreg.: For the establishment of a quarantine station at or near Astoria, Oreg., and for the maintenance of said station, $80,000.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

In regard to this amendment I will say that this is substantially the embodiment of a bill that has already passed the Senate. It has been reported favorably to the House and is now on the House Calendar, having received the unanimous report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The city of Astoria is near the mouth of the Columbia River. There is no quarantine station on the south until you reach San Francisco, and no one that can be reached on the north unless you go to the extreme northern limit of the State of Washington, pass through the Straits of Juan de Fuca, and go into Port Townsend. There is an immense amount of shipping carried on there, and it is one of the largest ports on the Pacific coast. I have had recently telegrams from ship owners there and letters as to the trouble they are put to about quarantine.

It is necessary, if they are put in quarantine, that they should go south to the quarantine station at San Francisco or else north to Port Townsend, and takes up much of their time and puts them to a great deal of trouble to meet the requirements of the law. This bill has the unanimous report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. In their report they say:

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill as amended.

The Secretary of the Treasury and the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service have recommended the establishment of this station, both in the interest of commerce and the protection of the health of the people from the invasion of pestilential disease, and their communications were submitted to and printed with the report of the Senate upon said measure, to which reference is made.

The Secretary of the Treasury says:

I am of the opinion that a properly equipped quarantine station at or near Astoria, Oreg., is necessary to prevent the United States from the invasion of pestilential disease, and also in the interest of commerce, by furnishing necessary facilities for the prompt treatment and discharge from quarantine of vessels subject to such restraints.

The Supervising Surgeon-General Marine-Hospital Service says:

Reports received in this office show a marked increase in the commerce entering the Columbia River from foreign ports. Cholera, smallpox, and plague are almost constantly prevalent in the several ports of China and Japan, and to such an extent that this service has been compelled to station a sanitary inspector at the port of Yokohama, where all vessels from the Orient touch before proceeding to the United States. The constantly increasing and rapid communication between the Orient and the Pacific Coast, and the present prevalence of contagious diseases in the far East, make necessary greater vigilance with regard to the importation of infection than has ever before been exercised.

I earnestly recommend the passage of the bill in its amended form.

Respectfully, yours,

WALTER WYMAN,

Supervising Surgeon-General Marine-Hospital Service.

The Honorable SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Now, I will say that it is no infrequent occurrence for vessels to come in infected with disease, and under the existing conditions it is necessary to send them south 700 or 800 miles or send them north 800 or 400 miles, subjecting them to great expense, great injury, as well as delay and trouble. In addition to this, the railroads are reached by a large number of passengers from ships landing there, and if any should be overlooked who have any contagious or pestilential disease, it would carry it broadcast through the land. I think this is a necessary provision, and it has the unqualified indorsement of the Department. There are large numbers of vessels coming from Japan and China and the countries of the Orient where they have contagious and pestilential diseases, and it is necessary that this country should be protected by a quarantine establishment such as is contemplated in this bill. I earnestly hope the House will recede and concur in this amendment.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in addition to the remarks made by my colleague that the business of the Pacific coast with the Asiatic countries has increased to a remarkable extent during the last two or three years. In 1895, for the year ending June 30, the imports were $3,906,840. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, it had increased to $11,934,433, nearly four times as much. The exports for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, were $4,684,717. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, they had increased to $13,255,478.

These exports very largely consist of wheat and flour, and at the present rate of increase the exports to Asiatic countries will absorb the surplus agricultural products of the Pacific coast. Our vessels are trading between those countries that are subject to contagious diseases, and it is necessary that we should guard against them. I think, Mr. Speaker, this amendment ought to pass, and I sincerely hope it will.

Mr. CANNON. One word, Mr. Speaker, and I am ready for a vote. The buildings for marine-hospital purposes, like public buildings, are authorized by law before they are in order upon appropriation bills. This has never been authorized. The Senate, however, puts on amendments with great facility—I am not criticising the Senate at all, but referring to it as a fact—and has put on this amendment for the quarantine station at or near Astoria.

I have no doubt it would be a good thing to have such stations at a dozen places on the Pacific coast and a dozen more on the Atlantic. But we can do very well without them this year. The fact that the proper committee has not pushed this matter, which was favorably reported, shows to my mind that it is not a crying necessity now. I think, with the facilities already provided, we shall be able to take care of all the disease that may come to the Pacific coast from Asia during the coming year. There is an epidemic fund of $250,000; and we are going to report in the deficiency bill an appropriation of $200,000 more, so as to be sure to have enough.

If trouble should break out on the Pacific coast, we would have this fund to resort to in addition to other provisions. It seems to me that as the station proposed in the amendment has not been authorized by legislation, the appropriation ought to wait until it is authorized. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur therein, it was agreed to; there being on a division (called for by Mr. ELLIS)—ayes 41, noes 30.

On motion of Mr. ELLIS, a motion to reconsider the vote just taken was laid on the table.

Amendment 65 was read, as follows:

Tender for the Great Lakes: For constructing, equipping, and outfitting, complete for service, a new steam tender for buoyage, supply, and inspection on the Great Lakes, $85,000.

Mr. BURTON. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to this amendment of the Senate and concur in it. Mr. Speaker, this light-house tender, to cost $85,000, was recommended by the Light-House Board. The recommendation is to be found on page 187 of the annual letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. The statement is:

This tender is needed to take the place of an old iron screw steamer which has too little power to do the necessary work of the district.

I presume it will be unnecessary for me to make any remark upon the enormous increase of traffic upon the Great Lakes. Not only is the extent of that traffic almost beyond comprehension, but a more striking feature still is the constant increase in its volume and importance. So that any appropriations made for lights on the lakes or for the improvement of channels will be of very great benefit, not alone to that locality, but to the development of the resources of the whole country.

There is a peculiar reason why this amendment of the Senate should be adopted and this tender built. Several years ago a new system began to be in vogue for lighting on the Great Lakes, a system which has now in part superseded other kinds of lights. This system involves the use of gas buoys, which are much more economical in use and make it possible to have the lighting more elaborate than was formerly practicable.

The light-house tender at present used for the location of these buoys and for carrying supplies to them and for carrying supplies to the light-houses is utterly insufficient in the later part of the year, when the ice begins to gather; so that the danger of disaster during the latter part of the season is very much increased, because there are no facilities for properly maintaining that light-house service. For a considerable time private lights were maintained at private expense, simply because it was absolutely necessary that this should be done in order to make navigation safe in the autumn.

Again, these lights, with numerous stakes, are removed in the autumn and replaced in the spring, and in order to do this work well it is necessary that there should be a boat having greater power than the present tender. It is also true that the work will be done much more economically if a tender of a different quality—a tender of a larger size, greater power, and able to plow through the ice—should be substituted for the one now in use.

It seems to me that in view of this greatly increased traffic on the lakes, the greatly increased efficiency in the service, and the necessity of avoiding disasters which will otherwise arise, this amendment should be adopted and the appropriation made.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want the attention of the House for about three minutes, and then I shall be ready for a vote.

There is no country on the earth, as I am informed, that has so good a light service as the United States. Now, this bill carries the largest appropriation for the Light-House Establishment and the whole service that has been carried for twenty years.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] desires to have built another light tender. There were two on the bill, one for the Atlantic coast and one for the lakes. We disagreed as to the one for the Atlantic coast, and now the gentleman moves to concur as to the lake tender. That provision I am perfectly sure can wait for another year, and ought to wait, and for this reason: There are already thirty-eight tenders in commission. We are getting along pretty well this year with that number, as we did last year; and we ought to get along with them for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. MAHANY. I know that the gentleman from Illinois is candid about these matters, notwithstanding his economic desire to keep down appropriations, and I will ask him whether it is not true that light-house facilities have by no means kept pace with the increasing lake traffic during the last twenty years?

Mr. CANNON. On the contrary, the light-house service on the lakes and on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts is the best on earth—

Mr. MAHANY. That does not answer my question. Has it kept pace with the growth of American lake commerce?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know what the gentleman means by "keeping pace." If we had a thousand million dollars' worth of commerce on the lakes this year which could be properly lighted at a given expense, and if we should have two thousand million dollars' worth of commerce next year, it would not imply that next year we should have double the lighting facilities, because the same lights, if sufficient in number, would suffice as well for two thousand million dollars' worth of commerce as for one thousand million dollars' worth.

Mr. MAHANY. But have they been "sufficient in number?"

Mr. CANNON. Well, the gentleman lives on the lake. He represents in part the commercial interests of the lake; I represent in part the great commercial interests of Illinois and the lake. I do not blame him; I do not blame myself; I do not blame any gentleman here for wanting good light service on the lakes. But I was trying to show wherein this service can wait another year for an additional light-house tender.

One other consideration, if I may be permitted. We have been investing in a good many ships lately. We have been buying them abroad.

Mr. MAHANY. All the more reason why we should have an improved light-house service to stimulate commerce, whose returns will contribute to meet these expenditures.

Mr. CANNON. Let me make my statement. With all respect to my friend from New York, we have been buying them abroad, all kinds of ships.

Mr. CUMMINGS. And sinking some of them.

Mr. CANNON. And lately we have undertaken the inner defense business and have appropriated $3,000,000 for that purpose. We are buying up the tugs and all that kind of thing now. When this cruel war is over we shall have ships to throw at the birds for the Revenue-Cutter Service and for the service upon the lakes. I am in hopes the war will not last through this coming fiscal year. If it does last, we have got enough light-house tenders to perform that service for the coming year. If it does not last, we shall have more than enough ships, that are now engaged in doing something else, to take care of the light-house service and the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit an interruption?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMPSON. I sailed on the lakes a good many years myself and know something about the conditions. I fear the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] did not make it clear when he said that recently they have adopted a new system, and that is of lighting buoys. Take the harbor of Toledo, for example. They have to go a good many miles out there through a channel which is lighted by buoys on either side at night. It used to be that they could not go out of or into Toledo at night. The same thing was true of other harbors. Under the new system they light these buoys, so that vessels going into or coming out of these harbors can see the buoys on either side, let the night be ever so dark. This new system has doubled the work in connection with attending to these buoys and the lights on them. I think that is what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has reference to.

Mr. BURTON. And the same thing is true in many other harbors all over the lakes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, let me see how completely I can answer the gentleman. The system of lighted buoys is being quite generally used. It is a very good system. I have no doubt, and cheaper than light-houses. But at Toledo, the very place the gentleman from Kansas talks about, this very bill provides for a $75,000 light-house. So you can go from point to point, and at various points on the lakes you will find provision made for light-houses.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman from Illinois will not feel it to be an interruption—

Mr. CANNON. I do not.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will make a suggestion with regard to two or three of these matters.

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Formerly the harbor of Toledo was not navigable in the night, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] has said; but by a change in its channel, which is called the straight channel, we made an improvement by which the harbor could be entered by day or by night. Now, in order to have the benefit of the night traffic we must have additional buoys or additional lights in the harbor. The same is true of the Hay Lake Channel in the Sault River. Formerly vessels getting into Sault Ste. Marie later than a certain hour had to stay there over night. Now they travel at any time of night and all night. That condition requires more harbor lights and more buoys along the channel than were required before.

Mr. SIMPSON. And what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has said is true, that late in the fall, when the ice begins to run, it often runs over these buoys and puts out those lights, and we want a tender that can run through the ice. It seems we have no light-house tender fit for that service now, and therefore we want one for that particular service.

Mr. CANNON. Each individual connected with the public service—unless he has exhaustively examined the whole subject—necessarily magnifies his specialty. Now, how about the gas buoys? The gentleman says that late in the season, when the ice forms, the water comes over, freezes them out, and puts out the lights. Why, they are taken up entirely during the winter season.

Mr. SIMPSON. If the gentleman will allow me, they are not taken up until after the 1st of December, and the season of navigation does not close until after the 1st of December.

Mr. CANNON. But when the season of navigation closes, or before it closes, late in the season, they are taken up.

Mr. SIMPSON. The ice begins to form in October on the lakes sometimes.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, this is not an appropriation for a boat to break the ice. It is an appropriation for a light-house tender.

Mr. SIMPSON. A light-house tender that can break the ice if it is necessary.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no, it does not say that, and I do not understand that it freezes much in October on the lakes anyhow. But let that be as it may, I call the attention of my friend from Ohio again to the fact that here is a $75,000 appropriation for a light-house at Toledo, on account of that straight channel. We had before us the officer in charge of the service, and examined him at great length. I tried to make him say that the gas buoys, being much less expensive than a light-house, would be sufficient at Toledo; but he stuck to it and said that he wanted a light-house, and here it is.

So you can go on from point to point, and I know that we are all glad now to have our various interests taken care of that we represent, directly and indirectly. But deliberately measuring my words, I do not believe that this service will suffer if we fail to build these light-house tenders or these five revenue cutters. A little later on they can be cared for quite well, from the service they can get from a great many ships that we believe will be relieved before a great while from other service.

Mr. BURTON. Has the gentleman from Illinois completed what he has to say?

Mr. CANNON. I will yield to the gentleman. I have the right to close.

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] would like to be heard.

Mr. CANNON. I hope this will not be unnecessarily prolonged.

Mr. SIMPSON. If the gentleman will yield to me a couple of minutes—

Mr. CANNON. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I have had some experience on the lakes, and I know that the Government never has kept its appropriations for the light-house service up with the very rapid development and improvement of the harbors and the increase of commerce. There is no doubt of the fact which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has mentioned, that this new system of lighted buoys in the channels requires a vessel suitable for that particular business. In the first place, it requires a boat of light draft, that can go into the shallow water where the buoys are located.

Buoys are located on the banks of the channel, and not in the channel. It requires a boat which can stand the ice that gathers on the lakes in the fall of the year. Anywhere above Lake Huron the ice begins to form in October. In the old days boats would not go to Lake Superior after October, but now they run very much later, and along the Sault River, which is now so completely buoyed and provided with these lights, the ice which is swept along by the swift current is very apt to carry these buoys out of their places, and this may result in the loss of ships and of a great deal of property.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, how many light-house tenders are required now on the lakes?

Mr. SIMPSON. I have no information as to that.

Mr. CANNON. And how many are there on the lakes?

Mr. MAHANY. Not as many as are required, according to the testimony of the communities interested.

Mr. CANNON. I am asking if my friend from Kansas knows.

Mr. SIMPSON. I have not informed myself in regard to the number, but if, as is stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], there is no such boat as is now demanded for this work, why, certainly it ought to be built.

Mr. CANNON. My friend does not make that statement.

Mr. BURTON. There are at present on all the lakes only four light-house tenders.

Mr. SIMPSON. But those are unfitted for this new service. We need a boat for this new and particular service, a boat that can attend to these buoys and lights late in the season, after the ice forms. I think it a very necessary appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to call attention to the fact that this bill carries, for light-house, etc., $552,000, the largest amount ever carried, and for the Light-House Establishment $3,000,000, the largest amount ever carried. This bill has been liberally made up. I hope the gentleman's motion will not prevail.

Mr. BURTON. Is it not true that the increase in light-houses and lights makes it necessary to have more light-house tenders and other facilities to take care of them, and that the increase in light-houses is an argument for this appropriation rather than against it?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, we have got thirty-eight light-house tenders, and, in my judgment, they are quite sufficient. I will ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURTON) there were—ayes 33, noes 84.

Mr. BURTON. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused, 10 members, not a sufficient number, rising in support of the demand.

Accordingly the motion to recede and concur was lost.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House further insist.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote is desired.

The Clerk read as follows:

For constructing a revenue steamer of the first class, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for service on and in the vicinity of the Columbia River Bar, Pacific coast, and on Puget Sound, $125,000; and the total cost of said revenue steamer, under a contract which is hereby authorized therefor, shall not exceed $250,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I move that the House recede and concur.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Washington, that the House recede and concur.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that this is an item recommended not only by the Secretary of the Treasury, but by the under-Treasury officials, particularly by those who are located on Puget Sound. There is a special reason for this recommendation, which I state to the House and which, I am sure, will appeal to the business sense of the House. There is expected about $30,000,000 of gold from Alaska between now and the 1st day of September. There is a very general fear prevailing throughout the coast that these vessels from Alaskan shores will not come down because they have no protection.

In the Associated Press dispatches sent out from the West we see it stated that the miners who come down from Alaska report that those holding gold would not trust the cargoes to the vessels because the United States had fully absorbed all of its protecting fleet for use in defense in our Spanish-American war. The Treasury Department reports that in the meantime vast smuggling goes on, exceeding the power of calculation or the ability to approximate; that it has been increasing with such rapidity that it is impossible to detect or prosecute them. The revenue cutters previously in existence there in the service have all been taken off and impressed into the general war service. There on Puget Sound is a greater need for revenue-cutter service than in any other part of the United States.

Now, this is recommended for the protection not only of vessels bringing down the gold from the Alaskan shores, but for the protection of commerce and to prevent smuggling. I am very anxious, Mr. Speaker, that this recommendation by the Treasury Department be coincided in, because the Treasury and the custom-house officials of Puget Sound have informed me that without some revenue-cutter service they are wholly unable to compete with the smugglers or to defend the coast. It is impossible for me to add anything on my own authority that could strengthen this recommendation of the Department. Upon that recommendation the Senate put in this amendment, and I am unable to advise you of any condition of facts that will militate against the recommendation, or to say anything more in its favor. If the gentleman from Illinois has any such reasons, he will give them to the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it is necessary to speak about this matter. Long before this $250,000 ship to be built for a revenue-cutter service can be completed we all confidently expect the war will close, and then there will be a half a dozen vessels, if they were needed, that would be good enough for that service or the Revenue-Cutter Service anywhere.

The Revenue-Cutter Service is under the command of the Treasury for the purpose of helping to collect the revenue. The Revenue-Cutter Service, so far as smuggling is concerned, or so far as the service as a whole is concerned, was never so well carried on as it is now with the great number of ships policing the coast. I hope this amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make an observation at this point. It seems to be cheaper to build our vessels that we use in the war than it is to go into the market and purchase them. As some evidence of that, I beg permission to read an editorial from the New York World of June 6, 1898:

"KIND-HEARTED" SPECIAL AGENTS.

The glorious exit of the Merrimac from the United States Navy should not distract attention from its anything but glorious entrance.

A year ago the Merrimac, then the Norwegian tramp steamer Solveig, was bought for $48,000. She was rebuilt, and this brought her total cost up to $192,000. She was offered to the Government early in April, but was rejected by the board on auxiliary cruisers.

Then she was sent to Baltimore, and at the request of a politician "special agents" from Washington came down and bought her for $342,000.

Cost of Merrimac	$192,000
Price the Government paid.....	342,000

The Government swindled out of..... 150,000

And she was selected as Cervera's cork out of all the fleet of transports because she was worthless to the Navy in every other way.

This is the most conspicuous but not the first public example of the business side of a "kind-hearted" war.

Mr. SIMPSON. Those are the boats they are going to throw at the birds?

Mr. GAINES. It seems in this case that we are the "birds" they throw money at in buying this vessel.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, the gentleman is so anxious to make a little partisan advantage and throw a stone at somebody that his words darken counsel. This is not a war ship. It is a proposition to build a revenue cutter when, in my judgment, we do not need it. The economist from Tennessee and the economist from Kansas—and God knows the gentleman from Kansas never got here in any other way except as a supposed representative of the economists; and he does not posture much in helping along with the appropriations for the business interests of the service, in my judgment—I yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee because I thought he wanted to talk upon the pending subject. I have no reply to make.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I hope these belligerencies will not affect the virtue or propriety of my amendment.

Mr. GAINES. It will never affect my esteem for the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LACEY). The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to further insist.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 36, after line 14, insert:

"For the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of North Carolina, purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment of same, $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That not more than $1,000 of said sum shall be used for the purchase of a suitable site for the purposes of said station."

Mr. STROWD of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur. I ask that the document which I send to the Clerk's desk be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES COMMISSION OF FISH AND FISHERIES,
Washington, D. C., March 15, 1898.

DEAR SIR: In response to your request of this date I inclose a copy of a letter written by Commissioner J. J. Brice relative to the establishment of a fish-cultural station in North Carolina. In view of the fact that fish-cultural operations on a large scale had been conducted on the Albemarle Sound by the United States Fish Commission and the commission of the State of North Carolina from 1874 to 1881, and as the steamer Fish Hawk had been utilized as a floating station in the same waters during the past spring, when 27,000,000 shad eggs were collected, it was not deemed necessary to make the usual preliminary investigation. There is no doubt but that a suitable site can be found at the head of the Albemarle Sound, not only for the propagation of the shad and striped bass (rock fish), but it is also hoped that the necessary ponds for the cultivation of the basses and crappie will be provided in connection with the shad station. The fisheries of North Carolina are, as you well know, the most important in the South Atlantic region, and no other State in that section possesses such natural advantages for the prosecution of this important work.

Should a sufficient appropriation be made at the present session of Congress for the establishment of this station, there is no doubt that a site could be selected and the station gotten ready for active work by the spring of 1899. In considering the question of an appropriation for a station of this character it should be borne in mind that, in addition to the usual buildings, such as a hatchery, superintendent's residence, and ponds for bass and crappie, it will also be necessary to provide a suitable steam launch to be used in the collection and distribution of shad eggs.

Yours, respectfully,

GEO. M. BOWERS,
Commissioner.

HON. MARION BUTLER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES COMMISSION OF FISH AND FISHERIES,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1898.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of February 8, transmitting the proposed amendment by Senator BUTLER, providing for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in North Carolina, and appropriating $25,000 therefor. In response I have the honor to state that, in the opinion of this commission, the establishment of a station in North Carolina is desirable, as the shad fisheries of that State are the most important of any of the South Atlantic group except Virginia.

Yours, respectfully,

J. J. BRICE, Commissioner.

HON. GEORGE C. PERKINS,
Chairman Committee on Fisheries, United States Senate.

Mr. STROWD of North Carolina. I rest the case on those official statements, Mr. Speaker, unless somebody else from North Carolina wants to speak on this subject.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, this is a proposition to authorize and construct a fish station in North Carolina. Later on in the bill there is a proposition to construct a fish station in the State of Washington; there is one also (which, I suppose, might be arranged in conference) for a fish station in Georgia. The latter was authorized a year ago by law. It is not on all fours with the North Carolina station and the Washington station, because there is law for it; and there is no law for a new station in North Carolina or in Washington. I want to be entirely frank. We have already twenty-two fish-culture stations.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Where?

Mr. CANNON. Scattered all over the country—in Maine, Ohio, Iowa, Vermont, California, the District of Columbia, Maryland, and so on.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Do not leave out New York.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Are there any of these stations in "so on?" [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir; there are several in "so on."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is there not a vast section of country that has none of these stations?

Mr. CANNON. These stations in different parts of the country number in the aggregate twenty-two. I have given some attention to fish-culture stations. For many years I have helped to prepare the bill that carries these appropriations. These fish stations and the Fish Commission carry on a good work. But I feel that I speak truthfully when I say that if we were rid of one-half the stations we have, the service would be better than it is now and more economical; because while these fish stations are being established in different parts of the country it becomes a fashion to have them. There is one station in the United States—I will not mention the name—where they have to heat the water! Some of these stations are out in the mountainous country.

Now, the object of these fish stations is to hatch the fish, and it is much easier, when a station is properly located, to put the fish on a fish car and send them where they are needed than to have fish stations scattered all over the country here and there.

Mr. STROWD of North Carolina. The Fish Commissioner says that the station named in this amendment is the most important on the whole Atlantic coast.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not think the Fish Commissioner meant it if he said it. We know that fish commissioners and officials generally (I speak from my own experience) when Senators and Representatives approach them, are like Crockett's coon—they "come down" pretty easily.

Mr. STROWD of North Carolina. But this is a matter of record. Officials do not generally go on record unless they mean what they say.

Mr. CANNON. Well, after all, the Committee on Fish and Fisheries has never thought well enough of this station to report a bill to establish it.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. STROWD of North Carolina, that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the amendment, it was disagreed to; there being on a division (called for by Mr. STROWD of North Carolina)—ayes 40, noes 52.

The motion of Mr. CANNON that the House insist on its disagreement was agreed to.

Amendment 98 was read, as follows:

Page 36, after line 14, insert:

"For the establishment of a fish-cultural station at Cold Spring, Mertyweather County, in the State of Georgia, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment of the same, $15,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That the site for the same, to be selected by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, consisting of about 16 acres, shall be donated to the Government for the purpose of the said station before any expenditure hereunder."

Mr. ADAMSON rose.

Mr. CANNON. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] that in my judgment his best course would be to let this item go back to conference, where its verbiage can be somewhat changed—put in shape. This is unlike the North Carolina case and the Washington case, because there is a law for the establishment of this station. There has already been an appropriation and a site has been purchased. I suggest that my friend assent that the House further insist; and I apprehend the matter can be put in shape in conference.

Mr. ADAMSON. On that statement of the gentleman from Illinois it is perfectly agreeable to me that this matter take the course he suggests.

The question being taken, the motion of Mr. CANNON that the House insist on its disagreement was agreed to.

Amendment 99 was read, as follows:

Page 36, after line 14, insert:

"For the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Washington for the propagation of salmon and other fishes, and construction and equipment of station, $10,000: Provided, That the site for the same, to be selected by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, shall be donated to the Government for the purpose of the said station before any expenditure hereunder."

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the amendment; and I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield me a few moments.

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I gather from the observation made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] that he has some particular reason for opposing both the provision for the North Carolina station and that for a station in the State of Washington.

I have observed—and I sadly make the observation here—that nothing has been presented in this House for the benefit of the northwestern part of our country that has not found opposition from my distinguished friend from Illinois—starting with their mining interests, then applying to their agricultural interests, then to the improvements in their towns, subsequently opposing their harbor improvements and coast fortifications.

Now, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding we have had two matters recommended by the ministerial and executive departments of the Government, such recommendations seem not to have weight enough to overbalance the objections of my friend from Illinois. We people out in the State of Washington are not seeking much from this Government. We are seeking absolutely nothing that we are not entitled to. It may be, as the gentleman said a while ago, that our State is young and new, and for that reason that not so many things are needed there. But in that respect I beg to differ with the gentleman. We have our rights, however far distant we are; and when provision for those rights has been officially recommended, we feel that they ought to be respected. And I charge that the gentleman from Illinois has some other reason than mere public weal for his constant opposition to my section.

If I may digress a moment, I compare the predicament of the State of Washington to that of the unhappy Irish sailor who on his trip across the Atlantic became seriously afflicted with what we call the mal de mer; and while he was pouring out his libations to Neptune in a very saddened condition a good friend came along in the form of the captain of the vessel, and feeling it his duty to console the dejected fellow in the very moment when consolation is least gratefully received he said to him, "I see you have a weak stomach." "What is that?" said the Irishman. "I see you have a weak stomach," repeated the captain. "Well," said the Irishman, "I don't know about that; I seem to be throwin' about as far as the rest of 'em." [Laughter.]

Well, Mr. Speaker, the State of Washington in many respects, as compared with other States, may have many qualities of weakness, and politically, as my friend suggests, grows weak in digestion; but in respect to her commerce, her produce, her resources, and in many other respects she insists that she throws her light as far as, and that she deserves as much as, the rest of them.

[Laughter.]

A MEMBER. And so with her statesmen.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. And the gentleman kindly suggests "her statesmen." I am too modest to disagree with him on that point. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I think this honorable House ought to respect the recommendation of the Fish Commission. In 1896 we sent out Mr. A. B. Alexander, who made an examination and full report, reporting among other things that Puget Sound particularly was a depot in which there should be a fish station, not only because such provision had before been—inadvertently I trust—omitted, but because there was out there a species of fish which it was necessary to understand something about, and for the cultivation of which there should be a station there.

At that time the Pacific waters had not been explored, and there was much to be learned in that line. After this event Messrs. Alexander and Cox went out there and made further examination. Subsequently, with Prof. B. W. Everman, they made a third trip. When they returned to the Department and made their report, they made a particular and distinguishing exception in behalf of Puget Sound, placing their recommendation upon the ground that at that time that particular part of the country needed experimental stations for the benefit not only of the Pacific coast, but of the United States in general.

They laid much stress upon a point which I desire to impress upon the House—that we were wholly and completely without a station. Yet the species of our piscatorial growth attracted the attention of all scientists and naturalists.

An experimental station was started there eight years ago—all its expenses have been borne by private citizens—conducted by Hon. George H. Stevenson. In consequence of the flood of the river and other circumstances that station has been washed out of existence. At Celilo another was attempted, but for want of funds was abandoned. My friend from Illinois, I have not a doubt, is laboring under the impression that the station still remains.

I take this occasion to inform him of the fact—and I call his attention to page 27 of the report of the Commissioner of Fisheries as verifying my statement—that that community is now wholly and completely without any station at all. In view of the recommendation of the Department, in view of the necessity for experiments to meet the needs of our people, in view of the right which that State is entitled to demand of this House, of equal recognition with other parts of the country, I respectfully ask this House to concur in the amendment of the Senate, not as a favor to the State of Washington, but as according that State the rights of a State of the Union.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] if he knows whether any recommendation has been formally presented to Congress during the present session in regard to this station?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I answer the gentleman from Texas by saying that I do not know if any recommendation has been formally presented to Congress. I take pleasure in referring the distinguished gentleman from Texas to the suggestions and recommendations in the report.

Mr. SAYERS. The report for what year?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. 1897.

Mr. SAYERS. That is the general report?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Yes; it is the general report; and together with the letters I bring from the Commissioner and the extract from the Smithsonian report are irrefutable testimony in my behalf.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman will bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that the Committees on Appropriations of the two Houses generally make up their appropriation bills upon estimates received from the different Departments.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. But there is where I complain. No estimates are ever submitted by the Department in behalf of Puget Sound.

Mr. SAYERS. Speaking for the Committee on Appropriations of the House, I can say that there has been no estimate whatever on this subject through the regular channels from the Fish Commissioner. We have had no information whatever upon this subject.

Now, I speak generally upon the subject, Mr. Speaker, but my understanding is that the home of the salmon is in the Columbia River. Is it true?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Very largely in the Columbia River, and in Puget Sound and its tributaries, the waters of that portion of the State of Washington, as well as of Oregon.

Mr. SAYERS. Congress makes an appropriation every year for the protection of salmon in the Columbia River, and it seems to me that with that appropriation and the Government doing all that it can to protect the salmon it is not necessary to make an artificial pond for the purpose of propagating them.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Does my friend from Texas suggest that the salmon is the only fish to be propagated in those waters?

Mr. SAYERS. That is the principal fish. The amendment mentions salmon, and others were just thrown in to round out the amendment; that is all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the gentleman from Texas allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What is the nature of the protection that the United States Government now furnishes to the salmon in the waters of the Columbia River?

Mr. SAYERS. Well, I can not tell. I know we make an appropriation for it, and I know we have inspectors there.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would say to the gentleman from Texas that the protection which the salmon receive in the Columbia River comes not from the United States Government, but from the State of Washington.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The State of Washington furnishes that protection, and has for ten years, by her legislature, borne the expense alone.

Mr. SAYERS. Entirely?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I believe entirely.

Mr. SAYERS. Then our appropriation is wasted.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I was waiting the opportunity to correct the gentleman. He is laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. SAYERS. I believe, if I am not mistaken, we do make an appropriation.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. For Oregon.

Mr. SAYERS. For the Columbia River.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Not in the State of Washington.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman from Texas is this much in error, that an appropriation is made for the Columbia River and elsewhere, but the expenditure is principally on the coast and north to Alaska.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. We in no wise get any of the benefits.

Mr. SAYERS. I was speaking of expenditures being made in the State of Washington.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. In the State of Washington they receive nothing from the United States Government in this direction: The late Oregon Senators were too adroit for us in that respect.

Mr. SAYERS. But the expenditure is made to take care of the salmon in the Columbia River and elsewhere on that coast.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the United States has ever spent a nickel in protecting the salmon on the Columbia River, I have yet to hear of it, and I have been in a pretty good position to hear of it. The State of Washington spends a great deal of money in that way, but I never heard of the United States Government spending any money for that purpose there.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The State of Washington has passed special enactments for that purpose.

Mr. SAYERS. It makes no difference. We have no estimates for this appropriation. It seems to have originated with the gentleman [Mr. LEWIS] and one of the Senators from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, it is well known that the salmon industry of the State of Washington is one of the most important piscatorial interests in the United States. Millions upon millions of salmon are taken out of that stream every year, and in order that the streams may not be depleted and the supply of salmon greatly reduced it is an absolute necessity that millions of young salmon should be put back into the water every year to compensate for those taken out. The State of Washington is spending all the money that it can afford to in this direction. [Applause.] I am highly gratified at the fact that I am pleasing my friends in the back part of the Chamber, but I would ask them to kindly withhold their applause until I conclude my remarks.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the State of Washington is spending every cent that it can possibly afford in an endeavor to prevent the depletion of the waters of the Columbia River by the taking out of millions and millions of fish annually. This industry is not alone in the interest and for the benefit of the State of Washington, but it is for the benefit of the whole nation. There is no State in this Union that does not derive more or less benefit from the propagation of the salmon in that river. And unless means are taken to see that the salmon are not depleted the Columbia River will very shortly become less prolific by a great deal than it has been in the past. We have already felt to some extent the effect of the diminishing number of salmon which come into the stream from year to year. It seems to me if there could be a wise expenditure of money anywhere, it is in the direction of protecting the salmon industry of Puget Sound and its tributary waters and the Columbia River. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. I want the attention of my friend from Washington a moment. There is a general appropriation for the maintenance of the work done by the Fish Commission, and the late Fish Commissioner and, as I understand it, the present Fish Commissioner have found less and less use for permanent fish hatcheries. They go up the Columbia, and if they want to catch the fish and get the eggs and hatch the fish, they make a temporary station, but it does not follow that they will want the same station next year. Under different conditions they may want the station perhaps a hundred miles or five hundred miles away. The same is true on the Atlantic coast, that the best work that is done in fish propagation is through the temporary stations.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Has there ever been any of that temporary-station work done in the State of Washington? The experience of that State is that it needs an establishment in the same place year after year and every year.

Mr. CANNON. I have no doubt that wherever this station might be located it would be a matter of gratification, but that it would be a matter of permanent use to the Fish Commission I doubt. Now, there are two or three stations in California and one at Clackamas, wherever that is. I believe it is in the State of Oregon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And that has been of great benefit to us.

Mr. CANNON. It is on a tributary of the Columbia or Willamette. Now, if any two things are plentiful in the State of Washington and all along the Pacific coast and clear up to Alaska, they are fish and statesmen. [Laughter.] There is any amount of each. By and by the supply may fall off.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let us save the fish anyhow.

Mr. CANNON. And if the supply of fish and statesmen ever does fall off, then it will be time enough to go to hatching them artificially. Nature furnishes plenty now. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. LEWIS of Washington and Mr. JONES of Washington) there were—ayes 58, noes 50.

Mr. CANNON. I call for tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Tellers were refused, 32 members, not a sufficient number, rising in support of the demand.

Accordingly the motion to recede and concur was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LEWIS of Washington, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The announcement of the result was received with applause.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, line 13, after "dollars," insert: "Provided further, That the Executive orders and proclamations dated February 22, 1897, setting apart and reserving certain lands in the States of Wyoming, Utah, Montana, Washington, Idaho, and South Dakota as forest reservations, be, and they are hereby, suspended, and the lands embraced therein restored to the public domain the same as though said orders and proclamations had not been issued, but nothing herein contained shall be construed as abridging in any way the right of the President to set apart and reserve forest reservations as provided by the act approved March 3, 1891: Provided further, That the provisions of the 'Act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes,' approved June 4, 1897, authorizing the settler or owner of land included within the limits of a public forest reservation to select other land in lieu thereof, are hereby extended and made applicable to any State or Territory to which public lands have been or shall be granted, reserved, or pledged for the use of schools, colleges, or other purposes therein, wherever such lands or any part thereof, either before or after being surveyed, are included within any forest reservation and to the Yosemite, Sequoia, and General Grant national parks; and other public lands of equal area are hereby appropriated and granted and may be selected by such State or Territory in lieu of such lands so included within such forest reservation.

"That section 8 of an act entitled 'An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1891, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows: 'That it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior to grant permits, under the provisions of the eighth section of the act of March 3, 1891, to citizens of Idaho and Wyoming to cut timber in the State of Wyoming west of the continental divide, on the Snake River and its tributaries to the boundary line of Idaho for agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, and to remove the timber so cut to the State of Idaho.'"

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement.

Mr. DE VRIES rose.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman want to be heard?

Mr. DE VRIES. I only desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Since asking for a separate vote on the amendment, I have been informed that the portion of it in which I am interested—that which makes the sundry civil act of 1896 apply to the Yosemite and Sequoia and the General Grant national parks—is not objected to by the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Where does that appear?

Mr. DE VRIES. On page 70, line 13, down to and including line 4, on page 71, eliminating lines 20 to 25.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman from California that, so far as I am concerned, I have not examined with great particularity this amendment as put on by the Senate. It may be possible that there ought to be some modification of the law as the gentleman indicates. The House conferees substantially took the position that this legislation repealed the Executive orders, or orders setting aside a reservation by the late Administration, and proposed to change the law as it was made a year ago, and we met the Senate by saying that that was legislation and we would not take up the question of legislation touching that matter. As to the particular matter the gentleman referred to, I can not say about it, so far as I am concerned, without further examination. I will say to my friend that very largely the House conferees have relied on the Committee on Public Lands and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE], who is on the Appropriations Committee, touching these matters.

Mr. DE VRIES. I will say that, being interested only in that portion of it which extends the provisions of the act of 1896 to these different parts of California, I shall make no motion respecting the amendment, for I am informed by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands that he deems it to be desirable legislation, and that there are letters on file with that committee and a recommendation by the Secretary of the Interior that this provision be extended to those parts. There are only 586 acres included within it. The people have bought the land and paid their money and been deprived of possession of the land.

Mr. CANNON. It is possible some agreement may be arrived at, but I do not know. The truth is, the amendment is put on an appropriation bill, where it ought not to be, and if perchance the Senate shall say that it will not legislate at all unless we take their whole provision, it may be that the whole matter might be eliminated and so reported to the House. But the House always has it in its power to take such action as it sees fit touching these matters.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. It is the policy of the House conferees to do nothing affecting land legislation until the matter has been considered by gentlemen on the Committee on Public Lands; and, unless they have the indorsement of those gentlemen, they prefer to bring the matter back to the House so that the House can act upon it independently of other amendments in the bill. In other words, we do not undertake to legislate in regard to our land system without the assistance of either the House itself or the Committee on Public Lands to aid us in reaching a proper conclusion.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Does this proposition come within this rule? This amendment does not affect the land system; it is simply a proposition to compensate people who bought public lands in a township that was afterwards set aside as a national park or forest reservation. They are denied the use of the land, compelled to quit it after they have paid their money for it, and they should certainly be compensated.

Mr. SAYERS. The question is not as to the point referred to by the gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE]. I agree with him that they ought to be compensated. If the Government is going to maintain a system of exclusion, building a wall, as it were, around the lands that are embraced in forest reservations, then the Government undoubtedly ought to compensate those who own tracts of land within such inclosure or to permit them to locate elsewhere.

Mr. DE VRIES. That is all we ask in this case.

Mr. SAYERS. But the question is this, whether the Senate will agree to such legislation as that desired by the gentleman from California without forcing the House to legislate further in regard to the policy of the reservation. That is the trouble.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Can we not accept this proposition in the Senate amendment and deal with the other separately?

Mr. SAYERS. It seems to be a part of one proposition.

Mr. DE VRIES. While they are connected in such a manner, they are distinctly divisible.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes; but they are all in one amendment. If the Senate conferees will agree to consider solely and exclusively the proposition suggested by the gentleman from California, there would, I suspect, be no trouble in regard to it.

Mr. McRAE. They are inconsistent propositions. The first part of the amendment seeks to destroy the reservation, and the other seeks to compensate settlers who reside in them.

Mr. SAYERS. The amendment must be considered in its entirety.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Texas will allow me, it seems to me that the House had better further insist on its disagreement and let the matter go to conference, because, as the gentleman indicates, if the Senate will be inclined to take this provision and assent to putting it in shape, it ought to be plain sailing; but we might as well understand now if there is to be an insistence on the Senate amendment, otherwise your conferees would not agree to it at all.

Mr. MAGUIRE. The conferees, as I understand it, have jurisdiction to segregate these independent parts of the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; we have complete jurisdiction over the whole subject-matter.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman from California does not seem to appreciate the trouble in the way. It is not the point referred to by the gentleman from California, but it is rather the remaining portion of the amendment that gives us the trouble.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I understand that perfectly.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to insist on the disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to postpone the further consideration of this bill until to-morrow, and call it up as soon as it is convenient at that time. It is evident that we can not complete it to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the further consideration of the bill be postponed and that he may bring it up to-morrow.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why can it not be finished to-day?

Mr. CANNON. One reason is, I have a little headache, and another is that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] has a special order to-day, and he feels as if he were not being treated right about it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; and if it is not taken up to-day the special order will lapse.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Speaker, I could not hear what the proposition was of the gentleman from Illinois, and I was interested in hearing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois desires to postpone the further consideration of the bill now under consideration until to-morrow.

Mr. HANDY. I have no objection, except that I am interested in the next amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

VOTING BY SOLDIERS IN CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. LACEY. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill which now comes up as a special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10650) to enable volunteer soldiers during the war with Spain to vote at Congressional elections.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any Congressional election shall occur during the existence of the present war and any State shall fail to provide a method for taking the vote of its soldiers in the field, the vote of the members of any regiment or battery in the United States Volunteer service shall be taken in the places and manner hereinafter provided, only such elections being held under this act as apply to members of Congress.

SEC. 2. That every lawful elector of any State duly qualified to vote under the laws thereof at a Congressional election at the time of his muster into the military service shall be entitled to vote, whether at the time of voting he shall be within the limits of the State or not, or whether at such time he be within the United States or not: Provided, That such elector shall be at the time of such election enlisted in the military service of the United States and engaged in such service, or shall be at such time a commissioned officer therein: And provided further, That any such soldier who would have been a qualified voter at the time of his said muster but for his age, and who shall at the time of such election have arrived at lawful age, shall also be permitted to vote.

SEC. 3. That each elector voting under the provisions of this act shall be considered as voting in the Congressional district, county, and place of his residence, and shall have the same right to vote for Representative in Congress that he would have had if he had not entered the military service, and his ballot shall accordingly be counted.

SEC. 4. That the election shall be held on the same day as the election for Representatives in Congress in the State from which such elector entered the military service. The requirements of the State laws as to registration and places of election shall not apply to such electors.

SEC. 5. That any detached company, battery, or regiment from any State serving in the military service during said war shall, at the time fixed for such Congressional election, be authorized to open a poll and hold an election for Representative in Congress, and the electors of such regiment, battery, or company shall choose from their number three judges of election from the qualified electors present, whose duty it shall be to act; and in choosing such judges they shall, if practicable, be selected so that they will not all belong to the same political party. Any company or detached portion of a regiment may, if not practicable to vote together, open a separate poll, and the electors present shall, in like manner as aforesaid, choose from among their number three judges of election, whose duty it shall be to act as herein provided. It is the purpose of this act that every regiment, battery, or detached company shall have the opportunity to enjoy the privilege of voting for Representative in Congress at each Congressional election during the present war. The judges of election shall appoint two clerks of such election, such clerks to be of different political parties, if practicable.

SEC. 6. That each judge and clerk of election shall take oath to impartially perform his duties and to endeavor to prevent fraud or deceit in conducting the same. Such oath may be administered by any commissioned officer present with such regiment, battery, or company, who is hereby empowered to administer oaths for such purpose. Such oath shall be entered and signed in the poll books. The polls shall be opened at 9 o'clock a. m. and closed at 6 o'clock p. m.

SEC. 7. That the ballots may be printed or written and shall otherwise conform substantially to the laws of the State of the elector's residence, as far as practicable, and shall show the Congressional district in which they are cast.

SEC. 8. That the judges of election shall make their returns, and shall seal and transmit the same with the poll books by mail, registering the same if practicable, to the governor of the State, who shall deliver the same to the proper canvassing officers of such State, who shall canvass the said returns in connection with the other returns of such Congressional election. Where, by virtue of any State law, sufficient time shall not elapse to transmit and deliver such returns to the proper canvassing officers, such officers shall be authorized to adjourn the canvass as to Representative in Congress a sufficient time to receive such returns: Provided, That such delay shall not be sufficient to prevent the certification of the Congressional election within the time provided by law.

SEC. 9. That no mere informality in the manner of carrying out or executing the provisions of this act shall invalidate the election held under the same or authorize the rejection of the returns. The laws of each State, so far as practicable, shall be observed in the manner of holding the election and certifying the same; but where any State shall have enacted a law for holding an election for the casting of the ballots of such soldiers for Representative in Congress while absent in the military service, then this act shall not apply thereto.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, section 1, strike out the words "with the Kingdom of Spain."

In line 11, page 3, after the word "that," insert "the electors in."

Also, at the end of section 8, add the following words: "and the officers of such regiments, batteries, and detached companies are hereby directed to afford all possible facilities for carrying out the purposes of this act."

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] has charge of this bill on behalf of the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress. He has temporarily left the House. With the consent of the House, I desire as a member of the committee to take charge of the bill in his absence, turning it over to him on his return.

Mr. HITT. The bill is all right, and we are all ready to vote for it.

Mr. POWERS. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] who introduced the bill such time as he may desire.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether this bill will meet with any opposition from any part of the House. It is a wholly nonpartisan bill, in the passage of which people in all parts of the Union are interested. The report of the committee is unanimous. Consequently I will assume, until I hear to the contrary, that everybody in this House desires the enactment of this bill or something carrying out its purposes, unless the question may be raised as to whether or not such a bill can be constitutionally enacted. Upon that question, which I regard as the most important one arising in connection with the measure, I will ask the attention of the House.

During the war of 1861-1865 the legislatures of various States made provision for holding elections in the field. They did not all make such provision, but many of them did; and when those laws were enacted they especially provided for the election of all classes of officers, from the President of the United States down to coroner. I recollect that I cast my first vote for President of the United States while serving as a soldier in Arkansas, and I voted for Abraham Lincoln and Robert Miller—Lincoln for President and Miller for coroner. My recollection is that I voted the straight Republican ticket clear through.

A MEMBER. As you have done ever since.

Mr. LACEY. I have been keeping up the practice with regularity ever since.

Gentlemen of opposite views to mine also carried their political convictions with them into camp, and exercised accordingly their right of suffrage.

Congress has no power to legislate upon this question except in one respect, and that is as to the time, place, and manner of the election of Congressmen.

Mr. BAILEY. The time, place, and manner of holding elections.

Mr. LACEY. Yes; of holding elections. Section 4 of Article I of the Constitution provides:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to places of choosing Senators.

In other words, the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Representatives in Congress are prescribed by the legislatures of the States, and such regulations, if the State does not prescribe them, may be made in the first instance by Congress, or Congress may alter such regulations after they have been made by the States.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wish to inquire of my friend from Iowa whether there is anything in this bill which is intended to have the effect, or which can have the effect, of suspending the State registration laws and the State provisions as to the qualifications for the exercise of the right of suffrage?

Mr. LACEY. In express terms; yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then in passing such a bill will not Congress go beyond the line which the gentleman has drawn?

Mr. LACEY. I will discuss that question farther on. This bill provides that State requirements as to registration shall not apply to the voting at elections in the field by soldiers for Representatives in Congress. This provision, of course, raises the constitutional question whether registration creates a qualification for voting or whether it is not simply a requirement as to the manner or method of holding elections.

The question, in other words, is whether a man's qualifications as an elector depend upon regulations of this kind—whether he is not to be permitted to vote under the Federal Constitution unless he complies with all the requirements of the State constitution and laws of his State on the subject. But I submit that as to the exercise of suffrage there are two things involved—first, the right to vote; second, the time, place, and manner of exercising that right. Besides prescribing the qualifications of the voter, the State adopts special requirements for the purpose of securing to the voter the exercise of his right—for protecting the purity of the ballot. If a man has the right to register, if he is of lawful age, if his citizenship is of such a character as to entitle him to vote, then registration becomes a part of the method of holding elections; and it may be prescribed by the State, subject to the control of Congress, because it is merely a part of the manner of holding the election.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the gentleman from Iowa mean to say that the courts have held that registration is not a part of the qualification of the voter, but is a question affecting merely the time, place, and manner of holding the election?

Mr. LACEY. It is a regulation; it is a question affecting merely the time, place, and manner. Let me illustrate. Suppose my friend is absent from the town of his residence on the day of registration; and having failed to register, he does not vote. He is a qualified elector, but he has failed to comply with the requirements of the law of Texas so as to enable him to exercise his function as a voter.

Mr. BAILEY. I venture to say—

Mr. LACEY. And yet the voters might elect him to Congress, notwithstanding the fact that he had not been placed upon the registration list.

Mr. BAILEY. And yet, while I could be elected to Congress by other people who could vote, I still could not vote to elect anybody else to Congress. The qualifications of a Congressman and the qualifications of an elector might be very different.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly they might.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, though I have not examined that question in some time, I venture to say to the gentleman from Iowa that he will find the decisions almost unbrokenly to hold that registration affects the qualifications of the voter.

Mr. LACEY. It affects the right of a voter to cast his ballot.

Mr. BAILEY. And if it does, the gentleman from Iowa will admit that it is beyond the power of Congress to suspend that.

Mr. LACEY. If the registration is a part of the qualification, it is of course not a part of the manner or method of holding the election, and Congress could not change it.

Mr. HANDY. Registration is a constitutional requirement for voting in the State of Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Registration may be a part of the manner of determining who shall vote, but it can not be a part of the manner of holding the election. It is a thing which precedes the holding of the election.

Mr. LACEY. It is a preliminary step. It is one of the proceedings in relation to the holding of the election. It is a step leading up to the election. It therefore becomes a part of the election proceedings.

Mr. HANDY. What would the gentleman from Iowa do with this view of the matter, that in my State registration is a constitutional qualification?

Mr. LACEY. That does not make a bit of difference. The constitution of the State does not control the subject at all.

Mr. HANDY. Oh, I thought it did.

Mr. LACEY. I mean as to Congressional elections. The constitution of a State might in express terms provide that certain men should not vote at all, but that would only apply to the voting for State officers and not for members of Congress.

Mr. HANDY. Is there not a provision in the United States Constitution that the qualifications of electors for members of Congress shall be the same as those of electors for the most numerous branch of the State legislature?

Mr. LACEY. And there is a provision in the Constitution of the United States that the legislature of the State may fix the time, place, and manner of holding elections of members of Congress.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me my friends are getting a little confused about the language of this bill. This question that is raised as to the requirement of registration is fully covered by the second section of the bill, which provides that every lawful elector of any State fully qualified to vote under the laws thereof may vote if he happens to be in the field. Well, now, the registration of a voter, I agree, is a qualification that he must comply with before he could vote at home. So that if a soldier in the field is registered at home, as he can be, he can vote. His presence at home is not necessary in order to enable him to be registered.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I did not make any statement about what the bill provided. I merely asked the question as to what its provisions were.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Section 4, beginning at line 20, reads in this way:

The requirements of the State laws as to registration and places of election shall not apply to such electors.

Mr. POWERS. The gentleman probably is correct about that, but that can be removed by a slight amendment.

Mr. MAGUIRE. The State of California will have 1,200 or

1,400 citizens in the Philippine Islands. Our registration commences in August next. It will be impossible for any of those citizens to register.

Mr. POWERS. Their friends can register for them.

Mr. MAGUIRE. They can not do so under our law. Again, let me ask: Is it intended that our elections in California shall not be determined until the returns of our soldier vote shall come from Manila?

Mr. POWERS. There will not be any trouble about anybody who goes to the Philippine Islands. Admiral Dewey will take care of them.

Mr. MAGUIRE. He has done very well so far; and has taken excellent care of the men under him.

Mr. MADDOX. Suppose under a State law, as in my State, you must register in person—you can not register by proxy?

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the bill proceeds upon this theory: If in any town in which any gentleman in this House resides, or in any precinct, he should go to the polls on next election day and find that there were no judges of election present and no clerks of election, that there had either been a failure to appoint them or, having been appointed, they had died or moved out of the precinct, the election would not lapse, but under the laws of nearly every State in the Union (and perhaps of every State in the Union) the electors present could select the necessary election officials to go on and hold the election in that ward or precinct, who may make the proper returns, and the voters would not be deprived of their right to cast their votes and have them counted in that particular precinct.

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. LACEY. I should rather finish my statement and then yield for questions, because I have no doubt everybody wants to get at a full understanding of this bill. Now, that being the case, when I attempted to draw a bill that would enable electors in the field to vote it struck me that if a hundred men or more of any State in this Union found themselves at an election precinct without officers, under the laws of those States they could select the officers and hold the election, that the same degree of intelligence would exist among our citizen soldiers that would exist among other voters at home, and the same men who could be thus intrusted with the election at home could hold the election in the field.

Taking that, now, as the thread around which to weave this bill, it provides that the electors of any regiment, battery, or any detached company of State volunteers may on the day of election select their own judges of election; that the judges may select two clerks, making three judges and two clerks; that any commissioned officer present with the command is authorized to swear those officers in. Then they may hold the election, following the substantial requirements of the law of the State from which they came, excepting that they may write out their ballots, and that no strict and technical requirement shall invalidate the proceedings, and that any mere informality shall not prevent them from casting their votes and having them counted, and that those judges shall return the results of the election by separate districts to the governor of the State from which the regiment or battery comes, and that the governor shall then deliver those returns to the proper canvassing authorities to be canvassed. The canvassing boards are different in different States, and so the governor was selected as the person to whom the returns might be sent, and through whom they might be delivered to the proper authority.

Now, I believe I have stated the outlines and theory upon which the bill has been framed.

The next question is, Can Congress provide in part for the method of holding an election, unless it takes control of the whole subject so far as members of Congress are concerned? Upon that question I find that in the case of Ex parte Siebold, in 100 United States, 371, the Supreme Court of the United States in express terms decides that it is not necessary that Congress in making laws in relation to elections of Representatives in Congress should assume entire and exclusive control thereof.

Congress has supervisory power over the subject, and may either make entirely new regulations or add to, alter, or modify the regulations made by the State. The exercise of such power could properly cause no collision of regulations or jurisdiction, because the authority of Congress over the subject is paramount, and any regulation it may make necessarily supersedes inconsistent provisions of the State. This is involved in the power to "make or alter."

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. FLEMING. The Constitution of the United States says that the qualifications of those who shall vote for members of Congress shall be the same as the qualifications required of those who vote for the members of the most numerous branch of the State legislature. Now, that being the case, there can be no distinction. There is not a State in the Union that has not already fixed the qualifications of those who vote for members of Congress, because they have all to elect the members of the most numerous branch of their own legislature, and that question is settled upon this fact. So that if any State in this Union requires registration as a condition precedent to voting for a member of the most numerous branch of the State legislature, that condition of registration would have to apply in the election of members of Congress.

Mr. MAGUIRE. It is a qualification.

Mr. FLEMING. It is a qualification, and the Constitution of the United States provides in express terms that the qualifications of electors for members of Congress shall be the same as the qualifications of electors to the most numerous branch of the State legislature. So it seems to me that the bill, if passed, would be ineffectual to accomplish its purpose by reason of that fact.

Mr. LACEY. Section 2 of the bill provides as follows:

SEC. 2. That every lawful elector of any State duly qualified to vote under the laws thereof at a Congressional election at the time of his muster into the military service shall be entitled to vote, whether at the time of voting he shall be within the limits of the State or not, or whether at such time he be within the United States or not: Provided, That such elector shall be at the time of such election enlisted in the military service of the United States and engaged in such service, or shall be at such time a commissioned officer therein: And provided further, That any such soldier who would have been a qualified voter at the time of his said muster but for his age, and who shall at the time of such election have arrived at lawful age, shall also be permitted to vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, look at section 4, beginning in line 20, and you will see your trouble.

Mr. LACEY. There is no trouble about that at all.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It says that the requirements of the State laws as to the registration and places of election shall not apply.

Mr. LACEY. State laws, not State constitutions.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. You set aside the State law as to registration.

Mr. LACEY. There is no difficulty about that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But that is a qualification of the voter.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is a qualification.

Mr. LACEY. Not at all; and we can repeal every State law in the United States as to the time and manner of holding Congressional elections.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understand you can do that; but you can not repeal the qualifications of the voter.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And registration is a qualification.

Mr. LACEY. This says "requirements of State laws," not of State constitutions.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Strike out the words "registration and," and your bill is right. Just strike out those words.

Mr. LACEY. We will come to that, if my friend will allow me. Registration applies only to the manner of holding an election.

The power to enact registration laws applicable to election of Representatives in Congress is obviously conferred upon Congress by the Federal Constitution as a part of the power to prescribe the manner of holding elections of Representatives. (Paine on Elections, section 346; see Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S., 600.)

As to voting outside the State of the soldier's residence, that, I think, is covered by the Constitution as to the power to prescribe the place of voting. The United States has the power and right to take out 10,000 citizens from one State by draft and transfer them to another to repel an invasion, put down an insurrection, or preserve the public peace and maintain the established Government. In giving that power the Constitution was so drawn as to preserve the rights of the citizens, in a proper case, by directing that as to the time and place and as to the manner of holding Congressional elections the legislature, in the first instance, should regulate and prescribe the manner, and that Congress might make, alter, or modify those regulations.

Now, in a case like that they certainly have the right to authorize a voting place without the limits of the State. Men have been elected to seats in Congress by votes cast in Georgia and Tennessee by voters from the State of Michigan, and so they have in Ohio and Iowa, but these votes were cast under the flag of the United States while the voters were performing a national duty. They were citizens as well as soldiers. They could have got furloughs and have gone home and voted there and nobody could have stood in their way. Provision was made in the civil war by some States by which the electors might vote in the field and when returned they were counted, and that was done under provisions of the State law.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Were there any State laws authorizing votes of that kind to be cast?

Mr. LACEY. Yes; and some such State laws were held unconstitutional. In other States they were held valid.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Were there any cases in which the soldiers cast their votes in the late war by authority of act of Congress when the State had not passed a law?

Mr. LACEY. No; there was no act of Congress passed, and that makes the proposition now before the House all the more interesting, as it is the first attempt by Congress to exercise this constitutional right.

Such State laws were held valid in the following cases: Lehman vs. McBride, 15 Ohio State, 573; Opinions of supreme courts of Vermont and New Hampshire, 13 American Law Register, 102; Baldwin vs. Trowbridge, 2 Bartlett Congressional Election Cases, 46; Morrison vs. Springer, 15 Iowa, 304; Chandler vs. Main, 16 Wisconsin, 398.

On the other hand, such State laws have been held invalid, owing to the provisions of State constitutions, in the following cases: Chase vs. Miller, 41 Pennsylvania State, 408; Bourland vs. Hildreth, 26 California, 161; Judge's Opinion, 30 Connecticut, 591; Twitchell vs. Blodgett, 13 Michigan, 127.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman concedes that in all cases during the late war there were State laws that authorized the casting of the votes.

Mr. BLAND. Were there any State laws during the late war that authorized the casting of the votes outside of the United States, as your bill proposes?

Mr. LACEY. No, sir; but there is no more difficulty in the one case than in the other. If the voter may be authorized to vote outside the State of his residence, he may do so in a foreign country under the same restrictions.

Mr. RIDGELY. This law, as I understand, does not undertake to make any provision or apply where the State law has a provision for the soldiers' voting?

Mr. LACEY. There is a provision in the bill that where such election is provided for by State law this bill shall not apply. I am informed that the State of Delaware has passed a law authorizing the holding of election for all officers in the field during this war. There will no doubt be some special sessions of the legislature called for that purpose in other States. Many of the States will make no such provision, and Congress would provide under this bill only for those States that do not enact State laws for the purpose.

Mr. BLAND. Why not leave the whole subject-matter to the States?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] if he will not address the whole House, or at least such of it as he can, and not locate the enemy in any one particular side of the House. [Laughter.] We want to hear over here.

Mr. LACEY. I will address "the enemy" on this side, then. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he address the Chair.

Mr. LACEY. I hope that is not a suggestion that "the enemy" lies in that direction. [Laughter.] I was addressing my remarks more particularly to the gentlemen who were asking me questions on the Democratic side.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. LACEY. I will yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MAGUIRE. The question of jurisdiction, as the gentleman says, is the principal question in this discussion. If Congress has jurisdiction to authorize the holding of an election for any purpose outside of the boundaries of the United States, then has it not the power to direct that the Congressional elections of one State be held in another State? Does not the gentleman's proposition involve the power of Congress to require an election for Representative in Congress from one State to be held in another State?

Mr. LACEY. I think no such difficulty is involved in this proposition. The gentleman might as well ask me whether we could not require that all elections be held in England. There is a distinction between a law passed for the furtherance of the purposes of the Constitution, for the protection of the right of suffrage, and one passed to hinder and delay a citizen in performing that duty. Here is a proposition that we ought to stand or fall upon; it is not an imaginary one, but should be considered on its own merits inside of the Federal Constitution. The Constitution authorizes the State legislature to fix the time, place, and manner, and authorizes Congress to change, alter, or modify such time, place, and manner of holding Congressional elections. This bill proposes to do nothing else. The place referred to in the bill is not some imaginary place where voters are not, but relates to the place where the voters in fact are, while temporarily there in the defense of the country itself. That being the case, is there anything in the Constitution that will be interfered with or that will be overthrown by the bill in question? A Congressional law fixing an impossible place for holding an election would be a prohibition and not a regulation, and would be beyond the constitutional power of Congress.

I want to call the attention of the House to the Michigan case of Baldwin vs. Trowbridge.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me a question before quoting the case?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would like to interrupt you only for a moment. In addition to the provision which you read there is another one in this bill, in section 8, which says that these electors shall have the same right to vote for Representatives in Congress that they would have had if they had not entered the military service.

In section 4 there is something that contradicts it, for there it says the requirements of the State law as to registration and places of election shall not apply to such electors. Now, the Constitution says that Congress may alter or amend the State regulations as to the time and place and manner of holding elections, but nobody has contended that Congress could alter the State laws as to the conditions upon which suffrage is permitted. Take the State of Mississippi for example. Nobody is permitted to register in Mississippi unless he can read and write. Now, then, when you say the requirements of the laws in the State of Mississippi as to registration are not to be considered in holding this election, do you not set aside the State qualifications as to suffrage? Because the State law says that nobody except a registered voter shall vote, and nobody shall register unless he can read and write.

In other words, it seems to me that the distinction which the gentleman fails to make is the distinction between prescribing the manner of holding elections and prescribing the conditions precedent to the exercise of suffrage itself.

Mr. LACEY. Now, if the gentleman is right on that proposition, then that part of the bill might be stricken out.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I suggest simply leaving out the words "registration and," in line 21, page 2. That will remove any difficulty in relation to this matter and leave the States as well as Congress their full power.

Mr. LACEY. Very well. We can take up that question when we are considering amendments to the bill. I shall be glad to have my friend present an amendment on that subject for consideration. My own idea was that the requirements as to registration being mere matters of regulation, and many of those requirements being such as would necessarily have to follow the enlistment, and with which the soldier could not possibly comply, therefore it would be better, in order to secure his right of voting, to strike out altogether the requirements as to registration, inasmuch as another portion of the bill requires that the soldier at the time he is mustered into the service shall have been a lawful voter in the State as a citizen of which he attempts to vote. I think there can be no difficulty about this feature of the bill, but if there is any constitutional obstacle that provision may be stricken out.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Would not the gentleman from Iowa be willing that the bill be now read for amendment?

Mr. LACEY. I had supposed that would be better. There may be some gentlemen who want to speak generally against the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why not let the debate proceed after the friends of the bill have got it into a shape satisfactory to them?

Mr. LACEY. I would like to have the bill read by paragraphs for amendment as if the House were in Committee of the Whole, in order that these matters of objection might be reached.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In that way we should know exactly what we are doing.

Mr. JENKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question, with his permission.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. JENKINS. If I have understood the gentleman correctly, he states that the power of Congress is limited practically to either fixing or changing the time, place, and manner of holding the election in the State. Is that correct?

Mr. LACEY. Not "in the State." I did not say that. Holding the election for Representatives in Congress.

Mr. JENKINS. Well, let me change my expression so as to present the question which I desire to have answered. If it is within the constitutional power of Congress to fix the time, place, and manner of holding the election, then it is within its power to change either one or all of them. That is the gentleman's position, I believe?

Mr. LACEY. I think so.

Mr. JENKINS. In other words, if the State does not fix the time, place, and manner of holding the election, then it is within the constitutional power of Congress to act. Now, inasmuch as I did not hear the bill read, I want to ask the gentleman whether he proposes by this bill to change the time of holding the election?

Mr. LACEY. No; the election by the soldiers is to be held on the same day as the election in the State.

Mr. JENKINS. But the bill proposes to change the place of holding the election.

Mr. LACEY. It changes it so far as it applies to soldiers in the field.

Mr. JENKINS. Then where is the constitutional power of Congress to change it in part? Does the gentleman propose by this bill to change the manner of holding the election?

Mr. LACEY. To change the manner as applied to the place and as applied to soldiers.

Mr. JENKINS. Then I ask whether Congress in acting on this matter must not confine itself to its constitutional powers?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. JENKINS. Can it change as to a part and not as to the whole?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly; the greater includes the less; having power to change it altogether, they can change it in part.

Mr. JENKINS. I did not understand the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States as going so far as that.

Mr. LACEY. I think it goes fully that far.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I want to ask my friend from Iowa whether he has considered the case of McPherson vs. Blacker, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in 146 United States Reports, 1, if I recollect correctly?

Mr. LACEY. I have not examined that case.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but—

Mr. LACEY. I shall be pleased to have the gentleman, at the proper time, call attention to that case.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I did not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but simply to inquire whether he had considered that case in connection with this question at all.

Mr. LACEY. I thank the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] for the suggestion as to McPherson vs. Blacker, 146 U. S., 1. It is an instructive case, and holds that where a State law conflicts with a Congressional act as to the date of the meeting of Presidential electors the State law will only be held invalid so far as it conflicts with the Federal law.

Mr. SETTLE. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. SETTLE. As I understood the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS], he very aptly put a difficulty that had already occurred to my mind. Now, we are all very anxious to have the soldiers vote if it can be done; but we want some safeguards thrown around the exercise of the ballot. My point is this: That while the power of Congress to alter or amend either the time, place, or manner of holding elections of Representatives as prescribed by the States can not be doubted, yet such alteration or amendment must be uniform. That is to say, if you change the time, there must be a single time fixed—a time which applies alike to every voter. So also, by parity of reasoning, when you change the place, there must be one place of voting fixed.

Mr. LACEY. Not necessarily. There were elected, I understand, yesterday two good Republican Congressmen out in the State of Oregon—

Mr. SETTLE. But the place must be within the State.

Mr. LACEY. That election was held on a day different from that fixed for the election in Kentucky.

Mr. SETTLE. Certainly. But will the gentleman contend that the power of Congress in respect to altering the regulations of the State may go to the extent of prescribing that the place of voting shall be outside the State?

Mr. LACEY. No, sir; but it may permit voters, under certain circumstances, to vote outside the State.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit me to call attention to the language of the Supreme Court of the United States on this subject?

Mr. LACEY. I believe I have already read the exact language to the House, but I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. One of the objections raised in the case coming before the Supreme Court was that—

When put in operation by Congress it—

That is, the regulation adopted by Congress—must take the place of all State regulations of the subject regulated, which subject must be entirely and completely controlled and provided for by Congress.

That is the objection, as stated by the Supreme Court, and that is the objection raised here by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SETTLE]. In meeting this objection the court says:

We are unable to see why it necessarily follows that if Congress makes any regulations on the subject it must assume conclusive control of the whole subject. The Constitution does not say so.

The clause of the Constitution under which the power of Congress, as well as that of the State legislatures, to regulate the election of Senators and Representatives arises is as follows:

The times, places—

Now, if the gentleman from Kentucky will listen to this, he will get an answer to his whole proposition—

The times, places, and manner—

Those are the three subdivisions—of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations except as to the place of choosing Senators.

Now, if we apply to this language the well-known rule of statutory construction by which the thing not expressed is excluded, then Congress may fix the place of electing Congressmen—

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I do not think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] caught correctly the point made by my colleague [Mr. SETTLE]. He did not question the right of Congress to change the time or the place; but the point he made was that when Congress legislates upon this question and prescribes a time, that time must apply to all the electors of that district.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is exactly what the Supreme Court says is not true. The language of the court is:

We are unable to see why it necessarily follows that if Congress makes any regulations on the subject it must assume exclusive control of the whole subject.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit me further, that means that Congress need not legislate upon the whole subject. It may select a time, for instance, but it must cover the whole time. It may select the manner, but it must cover the whole method. It need not take time, place, and manner.

It is a well-known rule that the legislature has a right to select a particular class of citizens and legislate upon a particular subject, but the legislation must apply its enactments to all citizens in that class. It can not apply them to a part of the citizens belonging to that class and exclude the others. It must exhaust the particular subject then under consideration.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The Supreme Court holds exactly the reverse.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Not in that opinion.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have not half read it yet. I think, Mr. Speaker, we should have some regularity about this debate. It allowed the State legislature to control the vote of the soldiers in Ohio and gave to Congress the right to control outside. All that was under a law that did exactly what we propose to do.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. And the gentleman knows that opinion has been seriously questioned by the Supreme Court since then, and they have refused to follow it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is the other remedy—to doubt the honesty of the Supreme Court.

Mr. LACEY. Now, I decline to yield to further questions at this time, because the discussion seems to degenerate into dialogue.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will not the gentleman allow me to say just one sentence here that completely meets the whole proposition? There is no declaration that regulations shall be made either wholly by the State legislature or wholly by Congress.

Mr. SETTLE. Do you understand by that that Congress could say that in Kentucky the Congressional elections next fall should be held on the second Tuesday in November, and that in Cuba they shall be held on the 18th?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think there is no doubt about it.

Mr. SETTLE. That they could have different times?

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. LACEY. I do not think it would be proper to have different times.

Mr. SETTLE. I am not talking about what would be proper. I am talking about the constitutional right.

Mr. LACEY. That is a question of policy. I think possibly they might have different times, but it would be bad policy to have the question as to what the result should be in Cuba held back until after the returns were in in Ohio.

The elections ought to be held on the same day, even although some regiment of soldiers might be in line of battle, and therefore unable to exercise the right to vote. They would simply encounter the same difficulties that citizens sometimes encounter. Sometimes the "gravel train" gets in after 6 o'clock, and the voters on the train lose their right to vote. So with soldiers so situated on election day that they can not vote. They will lose that right. But what we want to do is to give them a fair opportunity in a general way.

Now, before yielding the floor, or before closing, I want to call the attention of the House to the Trowbridge-Baldwin case in Michigan. In that case the constitutional convention of the State of Michigan had, by the State constitution, fixed the qualification of voters in that State, and it required that the votes should be cast in the precinct where the voter actually resided. It practically, in terms, prevented him from voting anywhere else as to offices other than members of Congress. It did not attempt to define what the qualifications of a voter should be for a Representative in Congress, but in a general way, as to other officers, it attempted to define what the qualifications should be, and residence and a vote at that residence were a part of such qualification.

Now, Mr. Trowbridge was elected if the votes cast for him in the field by the Michigan soldiers could be counted. If those votes could not be counted, Mr. Baldwin was elected. Mr. Trowbridge took the seat and a contest was instituted. In 2 Bartlett, page 46, the question was decided, and a majority of the Elections Committee held that the provision of the Constitution of the United States that said that the time, place, and manner should be fixed by the legislature of the State took away from the constitutional convention the power of tying the hands of the legislature of that State, and that whatever power the legislature would have to fix the time, place, and manner of holding Congressional elections would also exist as to Congress.

In that case they held that where the law conflicted with the constitution of the State, the law being made by the legislature and the legislature being empowered by the Constitution of the United States to fix the time, place, and manner, that the State statute took precedence and prevailed over the constitution of the State itself. So upon a vote on that report, the views of the majority were adopted and that became the decision of this House in a preceding Congress, by a vote of 108 to 30.

Desirable as it may be to have all of our soldiers and sailors vote, I think it is impracticable to go further than to attempt to authorize them to hold elections where there are organized bodies of State troops in the service. The bill extends the plan so as to include a detached company. Beyond this I do not think it would be practicable to go. Soldiers from one State will enlist in the organizations of another State or in the Regular Army. Sailors will enlist, a few from each State, upon each vessel. It would be very gratifying to allow these men also to vote, but I see no way in which it can be rendered practicable and safe, except in those organizations where there is a sufficient number of citizens to organize and hold an election.

Fortunately there are no partisan results involved in this bill. The war is one in which with generous patriotism all political parties are fully represented, and no party has any motive in considering this question other than that of establishing a policy that will not deprive the Government of the advantage of recording the wishes of 200,000 of the best and noblest of her citizens.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used forty-nine minutes.

Mr. LACEY. I reserve the balance of my time or yield it back to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH].

Mr. McRAE. Before the gentleman from Iowa takes his seat I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry before I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LACEY. In case of an adjournment under the special order under which we are now proceeding will this bill be the unfinished business for to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not quite certain about that, but thinks that the consent of the House had better be asked.

Mr. LACEY. Then I ask unanimous consent that it be so considered. I do not want to detain the House, and yet I have no doubt the members desire to go over this bill carefully and consider it, and do what they think right about it.

Mr. BLAND. I hope that will be done.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What is the request?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered to its conclusion. Is there objection?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Before giving consent I should like to ask a question.

The SPEAKER. Consent will be reserved.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if it is the intention to give an opportunity for general debate on this bill?

Mr. LACEY. Undoubtedly, for a reasonable general debate; and so far as it is in my power and the power of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] in charge of the bill, for whom I feel authorized to speak, the intention is to have the bill read by sections, so as to give full opportunity for amendment.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. That only gives five minutes, and I do not think anybody can discuss this bill or any provision of it in five minutes.

Mr. LACEY. There is no disposition on the part of those in charge of the bill to cut off debate. It is a new subject. Congress has never passed such legislation before.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands there is no objection to the request.

Mr. HANDY. Before consent is given I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McRAE. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question.

Mr. LACEY. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. McRAE. I want to suggest an amendment which I believe will remove most of the objections urged against this bill; an amendment providing that this law shall not apply to the soldiers from any State where the State provides the method and manner of holding an election for volunteer soldiers in the field.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is already in the bill.

Mr. McRAE. Then why this criticism?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Because it provides the method for States which have no such law, and the State legislatures will not meet before the time for holding the Congressional elections.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HANDY. I understand the gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered as unfinished business to-morrow. By unanimous consent the conference report was postponed until to-morrow. My inquiry is whether the consent now asked for would interfere with the conference report coming up to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The Chair thinks that the conference report would have the right to come up to-morrow to interrupt this; but if consent is given that this bill be considered until disposed of, of course it will come up in due time.

Mr. HANDY. What would come up in due time?

The SPEAKER. This bill—until it is finished.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9008) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899.

SENATE BILL AND RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 4707. An act to provide for the compensation and expenses of special counsel for the Government in prize cases—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Concurrent resolution No. 49:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed of the History of the Red Cross, authorized to be prepared and printed under joint resolution of Congress, approved August 3, 1882, and thereafter printed under the direction of the Secretary of State, together with the report on America's relief expedition to Asia Minor, under the Red Cross, 65,000 copies, of which number 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 10,000 for the House of Representatives, and 50,000 for the American National Red Cross, to be distributed by Miss Clara Barton, president. The copies herein provided for to be distributed by the president of the American National Red Cross shall be transmitted through the mails free of postage when contained in a wrapper bearing the following inscription: "Public Document. History of the Red Cross. Free."

To the Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10563. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SHUFORD, for this day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. FOX, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. ROYSE, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. ALLEN, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

The motion of Mr. HANDY was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, together with a report on the condition of the St. Johns River, in Florida, at Orange Mills Flats, and the cost of improving it—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Ordnance, together with the draft of a bill to provide chief ordnance officers for corps and division commanders—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HAY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the resolution of the House (House Res. No. 309) requesting the Secretary of War to furnish for the information of the House the names of all civilians appointed to positions in the Volunteer Army since the 24th day of April, 1898, together with the names of States from which said civilians were appointed, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1522); which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10606) repealing a portion of section 10 of an act approved April 23, 1898, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1526); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10608) providing for the appointment of a military secretary to the Secretary of War, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1529); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. SULLIVAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2764) for the relief of W. H. L. Pepperell, of Concordia, Kans., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1523); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRUMM, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7151) for the relief of W. D. Catlett, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1524); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. YOST, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5778) for the relief of J. V. Davis, of Alexandria, Va., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1525); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MINOR, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9568) for the relief of W. R. Austin & Co., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1527); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1454) granting an increase of pension to Mary Sprague, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1528); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HULL (from the Committee on Military Affairs): A bill (H. R. 10606) to amend section 10 of an act approved April 23, 1898, entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes"—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. HILL (by request): A bill (H. R. 10607) to pay pension claims by the issuing of life-insurance policies—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL (from the Committee on Military Affairs): A bill (H. R. 10608) providing for the appointment of a military secretary to the Secretary of War—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. CHARLES W. STONE: A resolution (House Res. No. 314) providing for the preparation of an index to all debates in Congress, documents, and laws relating to coinage, finance, revenues, and bankruptcy—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. MAGUIRE: A resolution (House Res. No. 315) relating to the Government's lien on the Kansas Pacific Railroad—to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Also, a resolution (House Res. No. 316) relating to the foreclosure of the Government's lien on the Central Pacific Railroad and the Western Pacific Railroad—to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BARHAM: A bill (H. R. 10609) granting a pension to Henry Shaffer—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BARLOW: A bill (H. R. 10610) for the relief of Lucinda Wallace—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRUMM: A bill (H. R. 10611) granting an increase of pension to Edward Hause—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAVISON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 10612) for the relief of Lucinda R. Boker—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GAINES: A bill (H. R. 10613) for the relief of Mary B. Winbourn and James R. Winbourn—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. GIBSON: A bill (H. R. 10614) to increase the pension of Freeman R. E. Chanaberry—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HENRY of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 10615) for the relief of Mattie J. and W. P. Horn, heirs of Preston A. Horn—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HINRICHSSEN: A bill (H. R. 10616) to place on the pension roll the name of E. Laurence Herriott—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KIRKPATRICK: A bill (H. R. 10617) granting an increase of pension to Irwin Reich—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LINNEY: A bill (H. R. 10618) for the relief of Sidney Maxwell, of Creston, N. C.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. REEVES: A bill (H. R. 10619) for the relief of Cattie King—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIXEY (by request): A bill (H. R. 10620) for the relief of the estate of James T. Ball, deceased, late of Alexandria County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also (by request): A bill (H. R. 10621) for the relief of J. L. Combs—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STARK: A bill (H. R. 10622) granting an increase of pension to Chauncy Barber, of York, York County, Nebr.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOCKERY: A bill (H. R. 10623) granting a pension to Moses C. Culver—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN: Petitions of J. M. Acker and other citizens of Aberdeen, and W. W. Magruder and others, of Starkville, State of Mississippi, favoring the passage of the anti-scalping bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BARBER: Petition of Hiram A. Carter, Joseph W. Goldsborough, and 21 other citizens of Baltimore, Md., in favor of legislation which will more effectually restrict immigration and prevent the admission of illiterate, pauper, and criminal classes to the United States—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: Fifteen petitions of ex-Union soldiers and sailors, inmates of the National Military Home of Kansas, in behalf of the bill authorizing them to vote at the Home for certain officers—to the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Petition of the Berks County Bottlers' Association, State of Pennsylvania, against a tax on carbonated beverages—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GROUT: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of East Corinth, Vt., Mrs. E. S. Rowland, presiding, favoring legislation providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HINRICHSSEN: Petition of G. B. Metcalf & Son and other citizens of Greenfield, Ill., protesting against the imposition of an additional revenue tax on tobacco, snuff, and cigars in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HURLEY: Resolutions of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Board of Trade of New York, in favor of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, relating to educating the people of foreign countries in the use of corn as a food product—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. KIRKPATRICK: Petition of the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange, favoring Senate bill No. 624, for the creation of a department of commerce and industry—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KULP: Petitions of W. S. Rishton, of Bloomsburg; B. S. Lancaster, of Forkville; Krouser Brothers and retail druggists of Milton, Pa., remonstrating against the adoption of Schedule B of the war-revenue bill, placing a tax on proprietary medicines—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the depositors of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, for the payment of their claims and for relief—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, resolution of the Irish-American Societies in Philadelphia, Pa., in opposition to the so-called "Anglo-Saxon alliance"—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of the International Association of Machinists of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the passage of the bill for postal savings banks, with the exception of section 8 in the bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, protest of Emory E. Herr, of Sunbury, Pa., against the proposed tax on life-insurance policies—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, protest of Feister Printing Company, of Philadelphia, Pa., against House bill No. 10100, known as the war revenue bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, papers in support of House bill No. 2316, for the relief of Francis M. Lott—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 9854, for the relief of John F. Campbell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIXEY (by request): Papers to accompany House bill for the relief of James T. Ball, deceased, late of Alexandria County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STARK: Petitions of W. G. Haney, of Grafton; A. Schneider, of Benedict, and Julius Neumann & Co., of Wymore, State of Nebraska, protesting against additional tax on snuff, tobacco, etc., in stock—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of A. Masinda, of Prague, Nebr., remonstrating against the adoption of Schedule B of the war revenue bill, placing a tax on proprietary medicines—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota: Resolutions of Cigar Makers' Union No. 98, of St. Paul, Minn., against increase of tax on cigars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of the Stillwater (Minn.) fire department, in opposition to Senate bill No. 2736, to establish a Government insurance department—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolution of the Minneapolis (Minn.) Board of Trade, asking for the passage of House bill No. 6093, protecting free labor against convict labor—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. WADSWORTH: Petition of 770 citizens of Elba, Genesee County, N. Y., requesting the continuance of rural free delivery of mail—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WARNER: Protests of druggists of Champaign and Urbana, Ill., against the taxation of proprietary articles in the war revenue bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 8, 1898.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. HALE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 173) authorizing the President, in his discretion, to waive the one-year suspension from promotion and to order reexamination of officers of the Army in certain cases.

The message also announced that the House had passed with amendments the joint resolution (S. R. 95) instructing the Secretary of War to return to the State of Ohio the flags of certain regiments of Ohio Volunteer Infantry in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 10585) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the military and naval establishments for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4266) granting a pension to Elizabeth M. Mead, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom the subject was referred, reported an amendment relative to the claim of the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4340) for the relief of Charles T. Rader, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 4732) granting a pension to John Keech; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4733) granting a pension to R. G. Hill; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4734) granting a pension to Ruth Marshall; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HANSBROUGH introduced a bill (S. 4735) to grant a pension to Abraham T. Dearborn; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 4736) to repeal an act entitled "An act to provide an American register for the steamship Centennial," approved May 21, 1898; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 4737) to provide for the better organization of the Quartermaster's Department, with a view to the proper transaction of the large volume of additional work placed upon such Department by the sudden increase of the regular and volunteer forces of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 4738) to authorize the Kansas, Oklahoma and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Chillico Indian Reservation, Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 4739) for the relief of the Protestant Orphan Asylum of Natchez, in the State of Mississippi; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the reference may be changed of the bill (S. 4721) to enable the President to accord redress for certain judicial errors in courts-martial and to obtain certain reinforcements thereby for exigencies of war, which I introduced yesterday, to the Committee on Naval Affairs. It was on my motion yesterday referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That change of reference will be made, in the absence of objection.

THE NICARAGUAN CANAL.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit a resolution for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the treaties known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and the Frelinghuysen-Zavala treaty, relating to a maritime canal in Nicaragua, and the treaty between the United States and Nicaragua, relating to such canal, and the concessions of Nicaragua and Costa Rica to A. G. Menocal and his associates relating to said canal, be printed together as a document for the use of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. The resolution ought to go to the committee.

Mr. FRYE. No; the printing will not cost $500.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 7th instant approved and signed the act (S. 4699) to provide an American register for the steamship China.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. QUAY. I desire permission of the Senate to announce my withdrawal from the Committee on Commerce. I believe the understanding is that my colleague [Mr. PENROSE] is to take my place, the appointment to be made by the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate has heard the resignation of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] from the Committee on Commerce. Is there any objection? The resignation is received. Is there any objection to the appointment of his colleague [Mr. PENROSE] to the vacancy? The Chair hears none, and the appointment is made.

RETURN OF FLAGS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 95) instructing the Secretary of War to return to the State of Ohio the flags of certain regiments of Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The amendments of the House were, in line 7, after the word "State," to insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to turn over and deliver to the State of New York the flag now in his custody that was carried by the One hundred and thirteenth New York State Volunteer Infantry (Seventh Heavy Artillery), that was raised and enlisted in the United States service from the State of New York during the rebellion.

And to amend the title so as to read: "A joint resolution instructing the Secretary of War to return to the State of Ohio the flags of certain regiments of Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Also to restore to the State of New York the flag carried by the One hundred and thirteenth New York Volunteer Infantry."

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate numbered 11, 23, 99, 176, 184, 185, 189, 190, and 194 to the bill (H. R. 8428) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes; further insists upon its amendments numbered 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 64, 65, 73, 74, 75, 76, 97, 98, 101, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 149, 180, 182, 183, 186, 187, 221, 222, 224, 233, 239, 247, 271, and 272; agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CANNON, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, and Mr. SAYERS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9008) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 6149) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, of the District of Columbia, the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes. It is the bill which has already been considered by the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator calls up that bill, I wish he would let me call up a measure providing for the organization of a hospital corps of the Navy.

Mr. McMILLAN. Let me get the street railway bill up, and then I will give way.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 6148. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McMILLAN. I now yield to the Senator from Maine.

HOSPITAL CORPS OF THE NAVY.

Mr. HALE. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10220) to organize a hospital corps of the Navy of the United States, to define its duty, and regulate its pay.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 8, after the word "officers," to insert "removable in the discretion of the Secretary;" so as to make the section read:

That a hospital corps of the United States Navy is hereby established, and shall consist of pharmacists, hospital stewards, hospital apprentices (first class), and hospital apprentices; and for this purpose the Secretary of the Navy is empowered to appoint twenty-five pharmacists with the rank, pay, and privileges of warrant officers, removable in the discretion of the Secretary, and to enlist, or cause to be enlisted, as many hospital stewards, hospital apprentices (first class), and hospital apprentices as in his judgment may be necessary, and to limit or fix the number, and to make such regulations as may be required for their enlistment and government. Enlisted men in the Navy or the Marine Corps shall be eligible for transfer to the hospital corps, and vacancies occurring in the grade of pharmacist shall be filled by the Secretary of the Navy by selection from those holding the rate of hospital steward.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 1, after the word "Navy," to strike out the proviso at the end of section 4, in the following words:

Provided, That the operation of the provisions of this act shall be limited to the duration of the present war with Spain.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MASON. If the Senator from Michigan will yield to me one minute, I will submit a report, and I will withdraw it if anyone objects. It is a short bill, unanimously recommended by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. It gives to the soldiers during this war the franking privilege. If there is any discussion or opposition, I will withdraw it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Has the bill been reported?

Mr. MASON. It is now reported from the committee. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4704) extending franking privileges through the mails to officers and enlisted men in the Army and Navy of the United States, to report it with an amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President—

Mr. MASON. Let the amendment be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, after the word "mail," insert the words "not to exceed 1 ounce."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This is a pretty sweeping bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I desire to say that this is a pretty sweeping measure, and while I want to extend every possible facility and privilege to the soldiers of our Army, I would rather have a day in which to consider the bill and think about it. I suggest that it go over.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to suggest that it had better go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads?

Mr. MASON. It has been reported unanimously from that committee this morning.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask that House bill 6148 be proceeded with.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like the bill to go over for a day.

Mr. MASON. I withdraw the request for immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

